Mr. SCHAFER. I would like to have the gentleman furnish some concrete facts and reasons justifying the passage of this bill. If at the time they were discharged from the service they held a certain rank why should they now be given a different rank than they held at the time of discharge and thus get the benefits of the higher rank?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The whole matter of retirement is up for consideration before one of our committees and until they thrash out that question we ought not to pass any more bills relating to retirement.

Mr. KVALE. This refers only to retirement rank and in no way relates to retirement pay. It will not cost the Treasury a cent, but will merely give this honorary title to these men. They have earned those titles.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think we should pass any retirement legislation until this whole matter has been passed on by the committee now considering it.

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman is interested primarily in the financial phase of the matter, is he not? The gentleman certainly would not wish to deprive these enlisted men of the rank they earned in active service. Furthermore, only a handful of them are affected.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say to my friend that when the emergency retired officers' act first came before the Congress in 1926 they represented that it involved only 900 men. When we passed it in 1928 they had changed their figures and said it involved 3,200 men, and now there are nearly 7,000 retired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ATTENDANCE OF THE MARINE BAND AT THE CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION AT RICHMOND, VA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5847, to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the Confederate veterans' reunion, to be held at Richmond, Va.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LaGUARDIA, Mr. BLANTON, and Mr. BALDRIGE objected.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I ask that the objection be withheld for a moment.

Objection was withheld.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, as the author of the bill, I would like to say that its purpose is to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the Confederate reunion, which is to be held in Richmond from June 21 to June 24 next, for which an appropriation of $2,150 is asked.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I hate to object to this bill, but there are similar bills pending which would permit the Marine Band and other bands to go to certain conventions. I have in my office—and I wish the gentleman could see them—letters and telegrams from American Legion men in those various vicinities approving my action in stopping those bills. They say we ought not to go to this expense this year, and they come from American Legion men. This will take over $2,000 out of the Treasury.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; I understand so.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, that is $2,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is true. It has been a very small sum heretofore, but it is a great sum now.

Mr. BLANTON. If we lacked $2,000 in balancing the Budget, the spending of this money would keep us from balancing it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to balance the Budget. I hate to go against the distinguished gentleman, because I know he never espouses anything that is not worthy.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] be permitted to address the House for five minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Now, if I may proceed without interruption, I respectfully submit to the House that this bill is not analogous or on all fours with the other bills mentioned by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

This is a bill to permit a band to attend a reunion of the Confederate soldiers which takes place at Richmond, and which, in the nature of things, must be the last reunion of this historic organization. You may never have another chance thus to recognize these people. These gentlemen have reflected credit upon the American Nation, because wherever there has been bravery by the Union soldiers it has been emulated or contested by equal bravery of the Confederate soldiers, and is now the common heritage of the American Nation.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. No; I can not yield now.

Mr. BLANTON. I was going to withdraw my objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the gentleman from Texas is out of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, I yield; but do not take all of my five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say that the gentleman's appeal has touched my heart. My father was born close to Richmond, Va., and was a Confederate soldier. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I thank the gentleman; his heritage has awaked his better judgment. There are very few of these soldiers left. The Marine Corps has been in some way connected with both sides of the service. It is a historic organization. Gen. Robert E. Lee commanded the Marine Corps on a certain historic occasion.

So these old men who are struggling for their last pilgrimage to Richmond have asked this and the request has been stressed by various organizations. I may say that the leading people on both sides and of all parties are very eager to have this band at Richmond. This city is a little over 100 miles away, and I do hope the House will not withhold the music and cheer that this band will bring to these people who are meeting in comradeship, perhaps for the last time, 67 years after the date of their surrender. Let us wipe out all the past and give these old men this music which will so refresh their memories and affections, and so inspiringly direct their contemplations to the power and glory of their reunited country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What makes up the cost?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is stated in the bill. I have not the details at hand.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is it railroad fare?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes; that is part of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What precedent is there for this?

Mr. MONTAGUE. They have had it several times.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. For the Confederate organization?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Oh, yes. They have had bands; I do not know whether it was the Marine Band or not. They have had the Army or the Navy Band, and I believe they had one of them last year at Montgomery.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is the opinion of the department in the matter?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The department opposes it on the general ground they do not want this to be repeated over and over, but I submit to the gentleman from Washington, who is a broad-minded man, that the last call of the trumpet does not give the precedent; it closes the event.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. BALDRIGE. We who have stood here and objected day after day to these bills have taken a lot of fire from the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Spanish-American War Veterans, the American Legion, and the other organizations who have tried to get these bands. We have done this because we are trying to save money. We appreciate what the gentleman says about this matter, but why should we go out of our regular order and allow this in one particular instance when we have stood here on every one of these bills and objected. These other people might come in and make the same argument that the gentleman has made.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They may do it much better than I do, but I submit they can not make the same argument, for they have not the case.

Mr. BALDRIGE. I am sorry, but I still feel constrained to object.

Mr. DYER. The Treasury is empty, and we have not enacted any revenue legislation to bring in money.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But the gentleman, with his long experience, knows that $2,100 is not dust in the balance and can not affect the Treasury. There are other things besides money, there are nobler things that underlie our civilization and which have to be stimulated if we are to maintain our institutions. They are above price, and I submit the bill to the open-minded, generous Americans who constitute this great parliamentary body, the House of Representatives. I beg that you not deny these old men this request.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I know that after the eloquent plea of our distinguished colleague, if, under the rules under which we are operating to-day, his bill could come before this body at this moment for a vote, there would only be five or six votes against it. [Applause.]

I sincerely hope that if you regular objectors prevent the consideration of the bill at this time that the Rules Committee will grant a rule to provide for the consideration of H. R. 5847, having for its purpose the sending of the United States Marine Band to the Confederate Veterans' Reunion at Richmond, Va.; and also H. R. 5828, to send the United States Navy Band to the Veterans of Foreign Wars' convention at Sacramento, Calif.; as well as H. R. 8635, which I introduced, and which provides that the Navy Band shall play at the United Spanish War Veterans' convention at Milwaukee, Wis.

I want the attention of the self-styled economy experts who object to the consideration of these bills. The taxpayers of the Nation and not the taxpayers of the District of Columbia are spending over $450,000 each year to maintain the Army, Navy, and Marine Bands. Is there any reason why these bands should not play at the national conventions of war veterans, such as the Confederate Veterans' Reunion, the conventions of the Grand Army of the Republic, the American Legion, the United Spanish War Veterans, the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars?

Should the taxpayers of the Nation be compelled to pay almost half a million dollars annually so that these three service bands can play only for the benefit of the people of the District of Columbia and at White House and other social functions in the District? I suggest to you economy experts who oppose the consideration of this bill carrying an appropriation of $2,150 that if you are to be consistent you should sponsor legislation to abolish the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Bands, and save $500,000 each year.

If the President of the United States, in the name of economy, opposes this $2,150 bill through his Secretary of the Navy and Director of the Budget, in order to be consistent he ought to ask for the abolishment of these three bands.

If the people of the District of Columbia and the White House are the only ones entitled to hear and see these three service bands, then let the half a million dollars annually for their maintenance be charged to the District and White House appropriations, if you believe the District should have this special privilege. If these service bands are to be continued, certainly the national conventions of veterans' organizations should have an opportunity to hear them. [Applause.]

I urge that the three objections be withdrawn so that the matter can come before the House and let a majority of the membership settle this policy. I firmly believe that you would not have six votes against this bill.

We will soon be through with the Consent Calendar, so let us come to a vote on this question. Let the entire membership representing those who foot the bill vote on this policy. These Confederate veterans are American citizens, as you and I. We know no North and South. The sons and grandsons of those who fought on both sides in the War between the States fought shoulder to shoulder in the Nation's succeeding wars. They fought and died together, these sons of the North and South land, for our common country. The ranks of the Confederate veterans are thinning. This reunion at Richmond will be the last for many. It will be the last time they will ever hear and see the United States Marine Band. Shall we deny them their request and opportunity in order to save $2,150? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? Three objections are required.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RELIEF OF STATE OF IDAHO

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House Joint Resolution 138, for the relief of the State of Idaho.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. There is a long list of whereases in this resolution. The gentleman is going to move to strike them out?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Oh, yes; after the resolution is adopted.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Under the reservation of objection I believe the gentleman is rather audacious in not going through with the obligation to pay for this building. True, the building is burned and would not now be occupied, but it is going to be pretty hard to avoid the precedent that we establish to-day, when buildings given to States or municipalities for similar use are destroyed. What has the gentleman to say about that?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It would be of no advantage to the Government to reconstruct the building, and as far as reimbursing the Government is concerned it is manifestly unfair to impose upon the State the expense of a building that was absolutely useless to the Government. The Government could not possibly use the building for any purpose. For that reason we feel that this account should be adjusted as proposed in the pending measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Boise Barracks Military Reservation, Boise, Idaho, was abandoned for military purposes by the War Department many years ago; and

Whereas a portion of said reservation was held under a revocable lease by the State of Idaho for the use of the Idaho National Guard; and

Whereas a brick building which was used by the National Guard of the State of Idaho as a stable was destroyed by fire on January 28, 1928, through unavoidable causes; and

Whereas the State of Idaho has been called upon by the War Department to replace the building, at an approximate cost of $15,000; and

Whereas the Veterans' Administration is now occupying the Boise Barracks Military Reservation for hospital purposes, and there is no use to which the building, if restored, could be put; and

Whereas if the building had been still standing it would have been included among other buildings which were turned over to the Veterans' Administration, without any expectation on the part of the War Department of payment therefor; and

Whereas the Veterans' Administration would have incurred considerable expense in razing and removing the building, as it could not have been put to a beneficial use by the Veterans' Administration: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the State of Idaho be, and is hereby, relieved of any obligation to replace the building or to reimburse the United States for the amount of damage to the building resulting from fire.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "building," insert the words "on the Boise Barracks Military Reservation, Boise, Idaho," and in line 7, strike out the words "resulting from" and insert "destroyed by," and after the word "fire," insert "on January 8, 1928."

The committee amendments were agreed to; and the joint resolution as amended was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time. The whereases were stricken out and the joint resolution was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASE OF AMERICAN GOODS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10743) to require the purchase of domestic supplies for public use and the use of domestic materials in public buildings and works.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COMPACTS BETWEEN STATES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8897) to authorize compacts or agreements between States relating to service of process and production of witnesses in criminal cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This is a very important bill. I am in favor of it, but it is something new in the way of legislation. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that we take this up on the call of the committee on Calendar Wednesday, when there will be more opportunity to explain it. Several gentlemen have asked me about it. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas rose.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may have five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the members of the Committee on the Judiciary regard this as an important bill in that it is leading the way in a direction which we believe we shall have to go if we do not wind up absorbing all of the criminal functions of the States not already taken over that it is possible to take over under the ever-broadening Federal powers extended by construction. If members wish to object to the bill, very well. We hear much complaint about the Federal Government absorbing all of the functions of the States. There is just one of two things that we have to do. We have to send these powers of the States which fall within the governmental capacity of the States back to the States when we have opportunity to do it, or we must reconcile ourselves to be governed by a great Federal bureaucracy. That is all there is to it.

What do we do in this bill? We simply give to the States, if they want to do it, permission to enter into compacts under which it is possible, by mutual agreement, to bring witnesses in criminal cases from a consenting State to testify in the jurisdiction where the criminal case is being tried. As soon as we come to this Congress, it seems that we develop a superiority complex. We do not think the States have sense enough to govern themselves, and we proceed to tell them how to do it. How anybody who believes in the American system of government is not willing to have two sovereign States enter into a mutual agreement under which they will help to get back witnesses in criminal cases, kidnaping or any other, is quite beyond me. Whom are we representing here? As far as I am concerned, I have seen enough slobbering over these criminals and heard enough maudlin sentimentality about them. When we came to this country fugitives from governmental oppression, we thought all we had to do was to protect the individual against the crimes of the State. Now we have a situation in America when free-born American citizens are afraid to go out on the streets, are afraid in their own homes, and are afraid everywhere. We strut around and brag about our liberty. We are not free. We live under the tyranny of crime. We are unwilling to give two sovereign States the privilege of entering into any agreement they want to, to protect their citizens against these people who ought to be shot on sight, as a matter of fact. Now object, if you want to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three objections are required. The Chair hears only one objection, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to any State to enter into an agreement or compact with any other State providing for the service of process upon a person within one of such States and his attendance as a witness in the other in connection with a criminal proceeding under the law of the latter.

SEC. 2. No such compact or agreement shall be binding or obligatory upon such States unless it has been approved by the legislatures thereof and by the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, at the beginning of line 9, strike out all of section 2, ending in line 2, on page 2, and, in line 3, on page 2, strike out the figure "3" and insert the figure "2."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DYER) there were ayes 41 and noes 3.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote, no quorum being present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and nineteen Members are present, a quorum.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CLOTHING ALLOWANCE FOR ENLISTED MEN OF THE NAVY

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6735, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to fix the clothing allowance for enlisted men of the Navy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, is this the $1.73 bill from the Navy Department?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then I object.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will say to the gentleman that this bill saves practically $23,000 a year. It is a bill which does not cost anything, but it makes a saving of $23,000 a year, because under the law to-day the department allows $100 for clothing. As a matter of fact, the clothing only costs about $99.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Ninety-eight dollars and twenty-seven cents.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is in the interest of economy to let the department furnish the clothes instead of furnishing the money. I trust the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection, because this is a meritorious bill and is in the interest of economy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. The letter from the Secretary of the Navy shows that the Army has similar authority.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Exactly; and it is recommended favorably by the department. It will save $20,000 this year, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, we will take it up two weeks from to-day.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman states "will take it up two weeks from to-day." This is a meritorious proposition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, it is so picayunish.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is the only way we have of saving this great deficit that has been created.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Are you going to give them a toothbrush or haircomb less, or a pair of drawers less?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman misunderstands the point. It does not give anything less; not one thing in the world.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I know all about that. With the inflation of currency that is going on now, commodity prices will increase, and it will be necessary to increase the appropriation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DISPOSITION OF NAVAL ORDNANCE PLANT, SOUTH CHARLESTON, W. VA.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 4657, to authorize the disposition of the naval ordnance plant, South Charleston, W. Va., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is not a picayunish bill, because it involves $23,000,000.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This bill merely permits the Government——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman accept an amendment? The gentleman from Wisconsin suggests that here is economy and I agree with him.

Mr. STAFFORD. No. I said this is not a picayunish bill, but it involves $23,000,000.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. It involves also $200,000 a year for maintenance.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If I may be permitted to make a suggestion, instead of depositing in the Treasury to the credit of the naval public works construction fund, created by section 9 of said act, I say, "to be covered into the Treasury," and I stop there.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman will permit, the law under which all these sales have been made has put that money into that particular fund, but it requires an act of Congress to get it out of that fund, to be used.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The more we have in that fund the more we spend. I submit that suggestion to my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, it is proposed under this bill to authorize the Navy Department to offer an armor and projectile plant, which cost the Government more than $23,000,000, for sale.

Everyone knows, who knows anything about industrial conditions, that there is no demand whatsoever at the present time for the sale of industrial plants. What is the use of sacrificing on the auction block something that has cost the Government $23,000,000, and permit some person who has a large amount of money to buy for virtually nothing something of great value?

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. It costs the Government some $200,000 a year to guard and maintain that plant. Since it was constructed in war time it has never produced anything, and for 10 years it has been lying idle. The Navy Department has no intention of ever using it in the future, and there is no possible use for it. It is true $23,000,000 was spent on the plant, but by the passage of this bill we can save the $200,000 a year that is now required to maintain it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman, as a business man, think that this is a time to sell any industrial property, especially industrial property of this consequence?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is: Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PROCUREMENT OF AIRCRAFT AND AIRCRAFT EQUIPMENT IN THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6599, to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps, and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection therewith," approved June 24, 1926, with reference to the number of enlisted pilots in the Navy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BETTER ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE NAVY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5352, to provide for better administration of justice in the Navy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. SCHAFER objected.

PAYMENT OF SIX MONTHS' DEATH GRATUITY TO DEPENDENT RELATIVES OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6734, to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the payment of six months' death gratuity to dependent relatives of officers, enlisted men, or nurses whose death results from wounds or disease not resulting from their own misconduct," approved May 22, 1928.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MAINTENANCE OF A NAVAL RESERVE AND A MARINE RESERVE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5329, to amend section 24 of the act approved February 28, 1925, entitled "An act to provide for the creation, organization, administration, and maintenance of a Naval reserve and a Marine Corps reserve," as amended by the act of March 2, 1929.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

IMPROVEMENT OF MERIDIAN HILL PARK

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 305 for the improvement of Meridian Hill Park.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask my friend from Kentucky about a word in the report. When I read the gentleman's report yesterday I was rather confused. What do we mean by "castle" on our democracy? I am sure my colleague from Texas wants to know, too. Then the report says it was occupied by the late Mrs. Henderson. I do not know the lady. Who is she?

Mr. GILBERT. I will say she is quite a well-known lady. The word "castle" is not in the bill, but that is the name by which it is generally known, and in order that the House might be advised I used that word.

Mr. BLANTON. She is the lady who built this fine castle out on Sixteenth Street as a gift for the Vice President of the United States to live in, that would have cost the Government about $100,000 a year to maintain, and which we did not accept. However, she was a splendid character, generous and public-spirited.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am interested in ascertaining if we are going to have castles in our democracy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the House joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital is authorized to accept on behalf of the United States the gift of an armillary sphere designed by C. Paul Jennewein to be placed in Meridian Hill Park in the District of Columbia. The United States shall be put to no expense in connection with such gift. The plan, design, and location of such sphere shall be subject to the approval of the National Commission of Fine Arts.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the House joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

NEW CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE FOR THE CANAL ZONE

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, earlier in the session I asked unanimous consent that H. R. 7521, a bill to provide a new Code of Civil Procedure for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing Code of Civil Procedure, and H. R. 7522, a bill to provide a new Civil Code for the Canal Zone, and to repeal the existing Civil Code, be passed over temporarily. I ask unanimous consent that they now be taken up for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill.

With the following committee amendments:

"4. Any person of good moral character who has attained the age of 21 years may be admitted to the practice of law in the courts of the Canal Zone by the judge of the United States district court thereof upon giving satisfactory evidence that he has a general education equivalent to graduation from a high school of the Canal Zone, has studied law under proper instruction for at least three years, and has passed an examination in the law to be prescribed and conducted by the judge of the district court or by a committee of the bar appointed by him for that purpose. The judge of the district court is empowered to make rules to establish the qualifications of the candidates."

Page 214, line 18, strike out the words "the sections of this code from section 224 to 243, both inclusive," and insert in lieu thereof the words "section 121 and sections 224 to 243, both inclusive, of this code."

Page 234, line 8, strike out the figures "$50" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$25."

Page 253, line 5, after the word "principal" and the period following it, insert:

"The clerk and his assistants shall have the duties of registrar so as to give constructive notice in all cases where provision is made for such notice by law."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, it would be informing for the House to have the chairman of the subcommittee make a brief explanation as to what the bill proposes before we vote on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, in 1907, the President issued an Executive order which provided a code of civil procedure for the Canal Zone. At that time there was no code of civil procedure in the zone. The code of California was partly adopted for the Canal Zone so far as it was deemed pertinent. Since that time the right of jury trial has been established in the zone and there have been many other developments in the jurisprudence of the zone. So this bill provides a complete code of civil procedure for the Canal Zone. It is to accompany the civil code which is the bill to follow this one, and these two codes will form the great body of civil law and procedure for the Canal Zone.

This bill provides for all matters concerning procedure in the district court, and in the magistrates courts. It provides for the summoning of jurors and for the administration and procedure of the courts in general.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. From prior explanations of companion bills, the gentleman has stated to the House that in the code of procedure and in the Criminal Code the committee is following largely the Code of California.

Mr. LEA. Almost exactly.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read the report, this voluminous bill has been scrutinized very carefully not only by the gentleman's committee but by certain officials of the War Department and also by the authorities on the Canal Zone.

Mr. LEA. Yes; and by a codifier furnished by the West Publishing Co., who spent 15 months on this work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the gentleman's opinion that conditions on the Canal Zone are suitable toward having the procedure of California followed rather than the procedure of Colombia, which is the present law there?

Mr. LEA. I think it is very desirable that procedure similar to that in the State of California should be followed instead of the Colombian Code, which is a foreign importation of law into the judicial system of the United States. When these two codes are adopted, all the law of Panama will have its origin in American sources instead of foreign.

Mr. STAFFORD. And one further advantage is that under statutory construction the codification will carry the construction that these provisions have had by the State of California.

Mr. LEA. That is a very important feature. The code in California is over 60 years old, and there is a large volume of judicial interpretation that makes this code much more valuable for that reason than if it were a new one. Adoption of this code carries with it the interpretation of the courts of California, and thus it immediately becomes an old and well established and clarified system of court practice.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CIVIL CODE FOR THE CANAL ZONE

The Clerk called the next business on the Consent Calendar, the bill (H. R. 7522) to provide a new civil code for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing civil code.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 14, line 19, strike out the words "both parties to such marriage" and insert in lieu thereof "the petitioner shall have."

Page 97, line 14, after the word "country," insert "or before any officer of such foreign country authorized to take acknowledgments, the signature and official character of such officer shall be certified by a diplomatic, consular, or commercial official of the United States."

Page 381, line 20, strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILLEN: On page 378, line 19, after the word "premium," insert "above the customary short-rate premium."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition on the amendment.

Will the gentleman give a brief explanation of the amendment just reported as to premiums?

Mr. LEA. Section 1218 on page 378 provides for the return of the premium. If the insured desires to cancel his policy on a short term, he should pay short-term rates instead of being given the prorata rate for the whole period of the insurance.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is according to existing practice among insurance companies?

Mr. LEA. Yes; this is to make it conform with the general practice.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILLEN: On page 381, line 22, strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 390, line 3, strike out the word "conduct" and insert in lieu thereof "engage in the conduct of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENDING THE PERIOD OF TIME DURING WHICH FINAL PROOF MAY BE OFFERED BY HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 9591, to extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead entrymen.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the gentleman to page 1, line 11. I think it would be better if you struck out the words "by proper evidence" so that it would read "that any such entryman shall be required to show that it is a hardship upon himself" and so forth. I feel that the words "proper evidence" are too rigid and may defeat the purpose the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. LEAVITT. I shall be glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. ARENTZ. The gentleman wants to strike out the language but does not want to insert anything.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No. The language as it is in the bill may narrow the purpose, and I think "any reasonable showing" is the intent of the committee, is it not?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes. I think the gentleman's amendment is a good one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to extend for a period of not to exceed two years the period during which final proof may be offered by any homestead entryman upon public lands of the United States if the date requiring the submission of such final proof by any such entryman under existing law falls within the period beginning July 1, 1931, and ending December 31, 1933: Provided, That any such entryman shall be required to show by proper evidence that it is a hardship upon himself to meet the requirements incident to final proof upon the date required by existing law, due to adverse weather or economic conditions.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out on page 1, line 11, the words "by proper evidence."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 1, line 11, strike out the words "by proper evidence."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SILVER SERVICE OF THE GUNBOAT "NO. 9, HELENA"

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 1047, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Historical Society of Montana for preservation and exhibition the silver service which was in use on the gunboat No. 9, Helena.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, this is rather a novel case seeking the return of a silver service on a boat still in the service. It seems to me rather anticipatory of the time when it may become obsolete.

Mr. COYLE. It will go out of service very soon.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the reason for being so previous? Why not have a general law providing that all silver services on vessels that will become obsolete in 10 or 20 years may be returned?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I thought maybe that we first part with the silver service, and then they come in and say that the ship is obsolete because Congress has given away her service. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. And that would be an argument for putting it out of commission.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; for buying a new ship.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman from Montana have any objection to an amendment providing that whenever the Secretary of the Navy might desire to have it for another ship it should be returned?

Mr. LEAVITT. There would be no objection to that, because it is usually done.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Historical Society of Montana for preservation and exhibition in the city of Helena, in that State, the silver service which was in use on the gunboat No. 9, Helena: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the delivery of such silver service.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 4, strike out the words "to deliver to the custody of" and insert "to loan to."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 7, after the word "loan," insert "until such time as he may order its return to the Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 5 OF CRIMINAL CODE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2682) to amend section 5 of the Criminal Code.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to have the chairman of the committee make a statement.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the only amendment proposed is to insert the word "who" in two places in the bill for the purpose of correcting the language. This is a Senate bill and the House has accepted the suggestion of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act of March 4, 1909, c. 321 (sec. 5, title 18, U. S. C.), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. Every citizen of the United States, whether actually resident or abiding within the same, or in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or in any foreign country, who, without the permission or authority of the Government, directly or indirectly, commences or carries on any verbal or written correspondence or intercourse with any foreign government or any officer or agent thereof, with an intent to influence the measures or conduct of any foreign government or of any officer or agent thereof, in relation to any disputes or controversies with the United States, or to defeat the measures of the Government of the United States; and every person, being a citizen of or resident within the United States or in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and not duly authorized, who counsels, advises, or assists in any such correspondence with such intent, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than three years; but nothing in this section shall be construed to abridge the right of a citizen to apply, himself or his agent, to any foreign government or the agents thereof for redress of any injury which he may have sustained from such government or any of its agents or subjects."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

THE TARIFF BILL

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table, it shall be in order to take from the Speaker's table the tariff bill, and proceed to consider the Senate amendments thereto under the general rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that is a rather unusual procedure. I do not remember ever having followed that before. I think the gentleman should ask unanimous consent to send the bill to conference.

Mr. CRISP. I think this has been done before, but I say to my friend from New York that the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means have decided to move to concur in the Senate amendment. I prefer if possible to get the bill up in this way and to have it considered under the general rules of the House. If objection be made to it, the alternative course for me to pursue is to introduce a rule asking the Rules Committee to make it in order to take up the bill and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. SNELL. I shall have to object for the present.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8397) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and consider the Senate amendments en bloc in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, did I understand the gentleman to request that the Senate amendments be considered en bloc?

Mr. BYRNS. That is correct.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is not that unusual? I hope the gentleman will not press his request—it is too comprehensive.

Mr. BYRNS. This would not cut off the right of discussion of these amendments, unless the House so decided later on.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But that would be the only merit of the request.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, is it the purpose of the gentleman to move to concur in all of the Senate amendments?

Mr. BYRNS. That is my purpose if this consent is given.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to object to the request. In its broad terms it seems to me it should not be asked. Quite a number of amendments have been put on by the Senate that are unjustifiable that the House ought to consider. The amendments ought to be considered in conference. I object.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 8397, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the Interior Department appropriation bill, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the same. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 5, strike out "$363,580; in all, $378,580" and insert "$338,580; in all $353,580."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, in view of this unusual procedure I believe we should have a quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and seven Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and two Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] has 20 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the motion pending before the House is to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments to the bill making appropriations for the Interior Department, which involves a reduction of $5,047,760. In other words, those who vote "aye" upon the motion will vote to reduce the appropriation in the sum of $5,047,760. Those who vote "no" will, of course, be in the position that they are not willing to reduce the bill in that amount.

The bill making appropriations for the Department of the Interior passed the House, carrying $50,446,432.33, which was a reduction under the President's estimates of $6,258,920. The Senate committee, after consideration of the House bill, made a further reduction, as I have stated, and reported the bill with that reduction, to the Senate, where it was discussed over a period of several days, as I recall, and the Senate concurred in those reductions.

In this day of economy, in this day when everybody is pleading for a reduction in Federal expenses, it occurs to me that the House of Representatives, which is the popular body of Congress, can not afford to refuse to make those reductions which the Senate has agreed upon, after careful consideration. [Applause.] It is the first time we have had an opportunity to agree with the Senate and by doing so save money to the Treasury.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. The reduction in the Interior Department bill actually amounts to more than 20 per cent, does it not?

Mr. BYRNS. It amounts to about 20 per cent, and I will say to my friend, the gentleman from Montana, who I know is interested in the subject of economy, that other bills will carry something similar to that before we get through with them.

There may be some of these reductions to which some Members of this House may be opposed, but it was the opinion of the Senate and its committee that the reductions could be made without injury to the service. Inasmuch as the Senate has taken that action, it has occurred to some of us that we should adopt them.

So, therefore, there is before you one simple proposition, and that is whether, by your vote to-day, you will vote to reduce the appropriations of the Government still further in the sum of over $5,000,000, or whether you will take the other course.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. And by cutting down the money, it gives the President an opportunity to abolish certain useless bureaus that he ought to abolish?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; and I may say that I think the House and the Congress will have an opportunity later on to vote for some propositions looking to the interchangeability of appropriations.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Would the gentleman tell the House a few of the more important reductions? I mean a half a dozen of the largest?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. The largest reduction is in the case of Boulder Dam, which the Senate cut in the sum of $2,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Can the gentleman say how many men will be thrown out of employment if these amendments are agreed to?

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to my friend, the gentleman from Idaho, that I fancy there will not be many, if any, thrown out of employment. They will doubtless be taken care of in vacancies. Of course I do not know. I will say that these reductions made in the Senate involve about 723 employees. One hundred and eighty-five of them are in the city of Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I have information from the Secretary of the Interior that over 4,000 men will be thrown out of employment if these amendments are agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS. These reductions involve only 723 employees; and I ask the gentleman from Idaho and other Members of this House: Are you willing to tax the people over $5,000,000 in order to retain 723 employees in the service? That is the proposition which confronts us. For my part I believe in looking to the interest of the taxpayer and relieving the taxpayer. [Applause.] I will say to you that unless we all look at it from that standpoint there will be many new faces in the next Congress, because sentiment is widespread all over this country that there must be reductions in the expenditures of the National Government and in the State and municipal governments.

This is not a haphazard motion. When this bill was passed in the Senate and came to the House, those who would have served upon the House conference committee, headed by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], chairman of the subcommittee which prepared this bill, met in conference among themselves. They spent the greater portion of one day going over these amendments, and this motion is made with the concurrence of those gentlemen, with the single exception of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH]; and I am not so certain in my own mind that the gentleman from Idaho is opposed to many of these amendments.

So this had consideration by the conferees of the House; and what is the use in going into conference and going over to the Senate, when at least three of your conferees—Mr. MURPHY, of Ohio, being unfortunately ill at home—have already agreed to these amendments, and would simply go there, accept them, and report them back to the House?

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to consume the time of the House. I am going to yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] in a few moments, as he helped to prepare this bill and is more familiar with it.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. For a brief question.

Mr. KETCHAM. Has the gentleman's attention been attracted to amendment 172, on page 98?

Mr. BYRNS. No; not particularly, although I have read all of these amendments.

Mr. KETCHAM. It seems to me that along the line of economy, for which the gentleman has been so eloquently pleading, a very substantial reduction might be made in that amendment, which was added by the Senate and which, as I understand, was rejected by the House.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman that this provision does not carry any appropriation. It is simply an authorization to make a contract; and then, if they come back, after having made a contract, it will be up to the Congress to decide whether or not it will make the appropriation. But there is not a dollar of appropriation involved in that Senate amendment. I am informed it has been in the bill for a number of years, I will say to my friend, and does not require any money, and it will not require any money if Congress is unwilling to make the appropriation.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. I had that stricken out on a point of order because it was legislation unauthorized by law, but it was put back in the Senate.

Mr. BYRNS. That is true. The Senate put it back, but in putting it back the Senate has saved over $5,000,000. Therefore, I think the gentleman can well afford to waive his point of order—although, of course, he could not make it now—in consideration of the fact that he has the opportunity to vote to save over $5,000,000.

Mr. GOSS. I shall be glad to vote for the reduction.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I am one of the Members of the Congress who is in deepest sympathy with the gentleman from Tennessee in his efforts to bring about reductions in governmental expenditures. The gentleman has moved to concur in the Senate amendments. It is my judgment that a sounder way to proceed would be to send the bill to conference. The first statement my colleague made, however, that Members of this body who vote in favor of the motion to concur in the Senate amendments vote to save more than $5,000,000 to the Treasury and that those who vote against the motion vote to expend $5,000,000 more than otherwise would be spent, I am sure could not have been made with deliberation. In other words, I am not opposing this bill because a reduction has been made of $5,000,000. I am not asking that it be sent to conference in order to add $5,000,000 to the bill. I hope that that much may be saved and more. I am asking that it be sent to conference in order that in orderly fashion the conferees of the Senate and the House may meet together and eliminate everything that can be eliminated, and it will be within the possibilities to bring back a bill that will mean reductions of more than the $5,000,000, to which the gentleman refers. [Applause.]

In other words, the points at issue are not totals but whether or not the amendments added by the Senate are sound amendments; whether the allocations made by the Senate in order to meet the task the Senate set for itself of reducing the bill 10 per cent below the House bill have been made in ways that the House would approve.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. No one in the House is more familiar with the jurisdiction of conferees than the gentleman from Idaho. I would like to have the gentleman explain his statement that if conferees were appointed they would be able to reduce this bill in money appropriated to a greater extent than the reductions made in the Senate. Are not the conferees bound between those sums, the amount passed by the House and the amount passed by the Senate?

Mr. FRENCH. Not necessarily. The gentleman overlooks that the Senate has added to the bill as well as subtracted from it. The conferees will be bound on specific items by the figures inserted by the House and the amounts added or subtracted by Senate amendments.

Mr. BYRNS. But after all, is it not true that in no case could the conferees under their jurisdiction and under the rules of both the Senate and the House reduce this bill more than the Senate has already reduced it?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; it would be possible.

Mr. BYRNS. How? The gentleman is telling me something I would like to know, because I have always been under a different impression, and it might be valuable in the future.

Mr. FRENCH. It would be possible for the House to force the Senate to recede upon amendments that involve considerable items or obligations and the House to recede on provisions that involve less. The net result might be to lower the total of the bill and not increase it.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. TABER. On page 98, amendment No. 172, there is a contract authorization to spend $2,500,000 more than was carried in the bill to start with. That ought to be cut out.

Mr. FRENCH. The statement the gentleman has just made is correct and illustrates my point. That item ought to be cut at least $1,000,000. The gentleman from Tennessee, in referring to the question of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM] a moment ago, stated with respect to the $2,500,000 authorization that it had never cost the Government anything up to the present time, although the provision had been in the bill in the past. On the other hand, a similar provision was in the bill last year carrying $2,850,000 of authorization, and every dollar of it is carried in the present bill with a direct money appropriation of $2,850,000.

Now, gentlemen, let me direct attention to just two or three factors, because I have promised time and I must yield to others.

I could hope as a result of conferees getting together that we could reduce the total of the bill—money appropriations and authorizations. I could hope, if it were not possible to reduce the total of the bill, that we could reallocate the moneys carried in the bill so that we could care for needed items, so that we would not spend the money in ways that I think it is not so wisely provided that it be spent as in the provisions of the House bill.

Consider another factor. Are the so-called reductions real reductions or are they paper reductions? The Senate, under the McKellar motion, instructed the Senate Appropriations Committee to cut the bill 10 per cent below the House bill, or by about $5,000,000.

The Senate proceeded to do just that thing on paper; but as it reduced the items so that a sum total of reduction would show up on paper of $5,000,000, it made those reductions to the extent of probably 50 per cent or more in ways that must be taken care of by the Congress in the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNS. Then my friend, who just said a while ago that if it went to conference they might save money, is now advocating an increase in the appropriations?

Mr. FRENCH. No; not at all.

Mr. BYRNS. The statement of the gentleman proves it.

Mr. FRENCH. No; not at all, as the gentleman will see if he will follow me through. Let me direct attention to two or three amendments put on by the Senate. After passing the motion with a flourish authorizing or directing the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate to reduce the bill by 10 per cent, we then find a reduction of $2,000,000 for Boulder Dam. Was that reduction made with the thought of actual reduction, or just to comply technically with the mandate to reduce?

On the floor of the Senate the other day, when this so-called reduction was considered, what did the chairman of the Appropriations Committee say as he presented this bill to the Senate? Here is his language, on page 8019 of the RECORD, under date of April 12, referring to the Boulder Dam appropriation:

> Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to repeat what I said yesterday. I would agree with all the Senator says if it were not for the fact that we were to have further appropriations for this activity [Boulder Dam] of the Government. I am as sure as that I live that in a deficiency appropriation bill there will be appropriated all the money necessary to carry on that work. No human being would ever think of stopping the work if he knew what it meant. It is impossible to stop it. If that work were to stop to-day, the diversion tunnels more than likely would be destroyed, and that can not be done. Congress will not do it. Congress is going to appropriate every dollar necessary for that work, and we will know more about how much we will need when the deficiency appropriation bills come before us. * * *
> There is no chance whatever of Congress failing to appropriate the money for that great undertaking.

In other words, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, as he presented the bill to the Senate, has himself indicated that they have taken this means of satisfying the strict terms of the motion to reduce 10 per cent; they have made a reduction here of $2,000,000 that the gentleman's deficiency committee will be called upon to take care of in the present Congress or in the Congress that will convene in December.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS. If that be true, would the gentleman then advocate and vote for the elimination of that amendment if he went into conference?

Mr. FRENCH. I do not think it ought to be eliminated, but I will tell the gentleman this——

Mr. BYRNS. That means, then, that the gentleman would take from the Senate reductions an item of $2,000,000. How does the gentleman reconcile that statement with the statement a while ago to the effect that if this bill went to conference he would be able to save money?

Mr. FRENCH. That is not the only item in the bill. I have already referred to one contract authorization involving a greater sum. Does the gentleman want to stand upon his statement he made at first that a vote against sending this bill to conference means saving $5,000,000?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know how much it will finally save, but I will say to the gentleman that it undoubtedly saves over $5,000,000 at this time; and I am not prepared to agree with the Senator from Utah, who made the statement, rather than the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that $2,000,000 will be needed next year. Why is it that you can not defer some of this work until the people get in a better financial condition?

Mr. FRENCH. We ought to wherever it may be done without greater loss. If there were a reasonable way by which this work could be deferred, I should be glad to defer it.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to my friend that even after this reduction you will have $6,000,000 for work on the Boulder Dam during the year 1933, besides whatever they may have on hand, and this is in addition to what has already been spent.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman from Idaho yield for another question?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield for a question.

Mr. TABER. On page 53, amendment No. 70, there is $570,000 added, and these two items, the $2,500,000 and the $570,000 item, could be cut out in conference if the House allowed the bill to go to conference.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. It would be the duty of the conferees to pick out the most important items and eliminate the rest.

Now let me say a word or two more, and I shall conclude. All the way through the bill reductions have been made in arbitrary fashion in the Bureau of Education, in the Geological Survey, in the Indian Service in its schools and hospitals, in Howard University, and in the different institutions under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, apparently without sound regard for the work that must be carried forward, without regard to ultimate economies that will be served, but only to carry out the mandate to reduce appropriations by 10 per cent.

Gentlemen, I am in favor of going the limit in effecting economy in all appropriation bills where reductions can be sustained, and the House and the Senate ought to compete with each other not only in making money reductions but most of all and primarily in making reductions that can be defended. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Was the $2,500,000 appropriation, on page 98 of the bill, considered in the total amount of saving by the Senate bill, or is it merely a camouflage saving?

Mr. BYRNS. Let me say to the gentleman that this is an economy of the Senate.

Mr. SCHAFER. It is a camouflage if you have not considered the $2,500,000 in the total.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to this very important situation, that the arbitrary decrease in this appropriation bill is made without any regard, without taking into consideration any remedy which may come from the so-called Committee on Economy. The Committee on Economy, in turn, I am informed, is proceeding without considering reductions made in appropriation bills. Where reductions have been made that necessitate the discharge of employees or the reduction of pay, it will be in addition to any recommendation that will be made by the Economy Committee. There seems to be no consultation, cooperation, or correlation of the proposed economies.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman that the Economy Committee will make no recommendation with reference to these provisions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly. Their study and recommendations ignore these cuts. There are large reductions in many small bureaus, and assuming that the Economy Committee recommends additional reductions many bureaus may be wiped out entirely. Take the Geological Survey, with a decrease of $25,000 in salary, and take the Bureau of Indian Affairs, with a decrease of $72,900 in salary—if Congress is to pass a straight horizontal reduction it brings in additional decreases which may absolutely destroy or impair the functions of many of these bureaus.

Take the Bureau of Education—but a small unit. This bill reduces salaries, general expenses and other items by $105,000. The Committee on Economy ignoring this reduction, making recommendations of reductions applicable to all departments, would entirely destroy this bureau. In an office as small as that of the Bureau of Education in the Department of the Interior a reduction of $105,000 is more than it can absorb. I am pointing out why the reductions, economies, and decreased appropriations must be all taken together in a comprehensive study.

This piecemeal work is unsound and unscientific. First, the Budget Bureau reduces, then the House reduces, and then the Senate arbitrarily reduces, and the Committee on Economy not taking into consideration these reductions, will come in later with further reductions, I predict now that the whole governmental service will be disorganized and thrown out of gear. That is the reason that I shall oppose the procedure proposed here to-day, and vote against concurring in the Senate amendments.

And I want to say that the Power Trust will be very happy when it reads that the House is playing right into its slimy hands by reducing the appropriation $2,000,000 which will retard and hinder the construction of Boulder Dam. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, when I came to the House in 1919 the Republicans were in control of it. A tide of resentment against the domination of the House by conference committees had been rising. Coming into control of the House in 1920 the Republicans changed the rules so that in case the Senate violated the spirit of our Holman rule, the House might have a vote on separate amendments.

I would call attention to the significant fact that after a dozen years of Democratic criticism of the Republicans in the House for applying what is known as the gag, we are now seeing a stronger application of the gag than in all of those 12 years, for we are not only to lose the chance of a separate vote on Senate amendments, but also to lose such protection as a conference committee might give. We now see this House refused an opportunity to discuss provisions that the Senate has inserted. The Committee on Appropriations gets no chance to defend its details; other members who are acquainted with some of the things concerned, as for instance, I am through a visit to the localities this last summer, can not present personal testimony on the matter. We are obliged to take this thing and swallow it without even knowing what we are doing. Shall we thus surrender our dignity, surrender our rights, surrender our responsibility, and make a greater inroad on the accustomed procedure of this House than I have known since coming here? I am told that there is precedent for it, but if so it was created before that day in 1920 when the House asserted its right to exercise its own judgment upon Senate amendments.

What is happening? The Committee on Appropriations hereby confesses that in various particulars it was wrong in sending the bill to the House. The House confesses that it was wrong in these respects in sending the bill to the Senate. We break down the principle of the bicameral system, which calls for the deliberate and independent judgment of both House and Senate, both prior to and after conference between the two Houses when differences arise, before conclusion is reached. That seems to me to be an invasion of our orderly procedure of far more importance than the dollars that are involved. You are sowing dragons' teeth, and these teeth will fruit in time, and you will repent of your action when you deny the membership of the House, each and every man of us, the opportunity to say what we think about what the other body does. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I must decline in the very few minutes I have to answer questions or to be interrupted. I will first refer to amendment 172, which has been questioned and criticized by several gentlemen. Several years ago the then members of this Interior Department Appropriation Subcommittee, including Mr. Cramton, Mr. MURPHY, Mr. FRENCH, Mr. Carter of Oklahoma, and me, enlarged the appropriations for roads in the national parks and inaugurated the policy of spending $5,000,000 a year on that construction, and we have been carrying that item for this purpose in the bill ever since. Every Interior Department appropriation bill has for several years past carried this identical item in this identical language. It authorizes the entering into contracts in advance; that is, so that they could run over for two years' time. In that way the park can and does get very much better contracts than we could for a 1-year program. There is nothing new about this item. We have authorized this identical item of two and a half million dollars to carry over the contracts for the next year. That is all there is to this. It is true that it has been subject to a point of order all these years, but everybody seemed to understand it and no one ever made a point of order against it until the gentleman from Connecticut made the point and it went out just before we passed the bill in the House. The Senate has put it back in the identical and original language that it has been in for I think some six or eight years. So much for that.

Last year this bill carried in round numbers nearly $70,000,000. The Budget cut it down to $56,700,000 plus this year. The subcommittee, of which I feel highly honored in being chairman, cut off over $6,000,000, and the House approved our action. The bill then went to the Senate carrying $50,431,000.

The Senate discussed it for several days and added about $7,000,000 to it. Then a motion was introduced and passed on March 17, by a roll call vote of 40 to 25, directing the Senate Interior Department Subcommittee on Appropriations to cut the bill 10 per cent below the amount it carried when it came from the House. The Senate committee obeyed that motion. They took the bill up again and considered it very carefully and fully item by item, and they cut off $5,047,760. They made 189 amendments to the bill. They very earnestly tried to reduce the bill 10 per cent and at the same time do as little harm as possible. Candidly I think in nearly all of those items they did a splendid job.

I may say that the House subcommittee has gone over every one of those 189 amendments very carefully. This pamphlet I hold in my hand gives all those amounts tabulated and it has been printed about a week, so that everyone could examine it. Actually, if this subcommittee had been ordered by this House to cut that bill 10 per cent from the amount it carried when it went to the Senate, I doubt if we would have done much better than the Senate did; and if the bill should be sent to conference now, I venture to say there are not a half dozen amendments in there that we would change, unless we increased the amount a great deal. The amended provisions in the bill concerning not filling vacancies and concerning the purchase of automobiles have, I understand, been agreed on in this identical language in the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I can not yield. I want to give you a comparison of the cuts in the appropriation bills that have thus far passed the House at this session. The agricultural bill was cut only 6 per cent below the Budget. The District of Columbia bill was cut 9.5 per cent below the Budget. The legislative bill was cut 10.2 per cent below the Budget.

The independent offices bill was cut 5.2 per cent below the Budget.

The Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce bill was cut only 4 per cent. The Treasury Department bill was cut only 2 per cent below the Budget, while our committee cut this Interior bill 11 per cent below the Budget and the Senate has cut that reduced amount 10 per cent more. I want to see all bills treated alike. But the question before the House now is purely a question of whether or not we want to concur substantially in these 189 Senate amendments. I may say that the bill has of course been referred to the Secretary of the Interior and he, like all of the other department heads, is vigorously opposed to practically all of these cuts. But, gentlemen, the only way to reduce the cost of government is to reduce its appropriations, and that reduction has got to come from Congress. The departments and hundreds of bureaus, boards, and commissions will never on earth reduce themselves any. Appointed officials never have the same concern about the taxpayers that elected officials have. This is no time to use a little pruning knife. We have got to use an ax or the people at home will use an ax on us.

Of course, I do not approve of all those amendments. But no bill carrying thousands of items is ever perfect. After the Senate committee spent several days in making these reductions the bill was brought back to the floor of the Senate, and the Senate considered and debated the items fully and approved every one of them, and had several roll calls on them and the amendments were carried by quite substantial majorities. Even if we should send this bill to conference the hands of the Senate conferees are actually tied by their positive instructions and those repeated votes. I do not see that we would gain anything.

I think the Senate conferees would feel that they were instructed by the many notes and roll calls on these amendments, and it would therefore be futile for us to discuss the greater portion of them with the Senate conferees. The House of Representatives has always been the watchdog of the Treasury. This is the first time in over 23 years that I ever remember an appropriation bill coming back from the Senate reduced any. How can this House consistently refuse to concur in this reduction? The question is squarely whether or not this House is willing to unhesitatingly join with the Senate in a reduction on these appropriation bills? I may say that this bill is the first one of the big supply bills, and it will probably determine its action on all the rest of them. This is the first show-down. Congress has been in session four months and a half, and not one of these large annual appropriation bills has been passed yet. The country is anxiously watching to see some substantial and expeditious reductions of expenses. I feel that if you send this back to conference it may stay there for several weeks longer and that practically nothing will be gained thereby. I hope in the interest of economy the House will support the action of the Senate and approve the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 268, nays 42, not voting 122, as follows:

RESIGNATION FROM BOARD OF VISITORS TO UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read by the Clerk:

APRIL 18, 1932.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Due to pressure of business, I am unable to attend as a member of the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy, and I hereby tender my resignation.

With very best wishes, I remain, sincerely,

JOHN J. DELANEY.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. FERNANDEZ, to fill the vacancy on the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy, caused by the resignation of the gentleman from New York, Mr. DELANEY.

CONTRACT-LABOR PROVISIONS OF IMMIGRATION LAWS WITH REFERENCE TO ACTORS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 8877) to clarify the application of the contract-labor provisions of the immigration laws to actors.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 8877, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the contract-labor provisions of the immigration laws shall be applicable to alien actors, whether coming for permanent residence or for a temporary period.

SEC. 2. No alien actor shall, as such, be considered a "professional actor," an "artist," or a "singer" within the meaning of the fifth proviso of section 3 of the immigration act of 1917 (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 136 (h), second proviso), unless—

(1) He is of distinguished merit and ability as an actor; and

(2) His professional engagements within the United States are of a character requiring superior talent.

SEC. 3. In the case of an alien actor coming for a temporary period, who is exempted from the contract-labor provisions of the immigration laws by the fifth proviso of section 3 of the immigration act of 1917 as limited by section 2 of this act, his admission to the United States shall be under such conditions as may be by regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor (including where deemed necessary the giving of bond with sufficient surety) to insure that at the termination of his contract he will depart voluntarily from the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin opposed to the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Strongly opposed to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] demands a second.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am presenting for the consideration of the House a real honest-to-goodness restriction measure that will save the American actor and his family from starvation.

Under the present law an actor who applies to the American consul seeking to come here to do work is exempt from the contract-labor provision. In other words, if it is sought to bring some one into this country for the purpose of doing labor, application must be made to the Secretary of Labor and proof beyond question of doubt that the kind of labor which is sought to be brought into the United States can not be obtained in the United States must be made. Until it is proven that there is no kind of labor to do that type of work nobody can be brought into the United States to do the work.

Under the provision of the immigration law which has been sadly neglected for many years we find a provision that a person who claims to be an actor is exempt from the contract-labor provisions. In other words, he goes to the consul, presents a contract of employment in the United States, and he is exempt from any further conditions with respect to coming into the United States of America.

In the last few years the moving-picture industry has brought in a horde of aliens, close to two or three hundred, for the purpose of building them up. They are not actors. They are a lot of amateurs. That is all. They roam around the country, and extension after extension is granted, and then it is a difficult task to get them out of the country. In a number of places they have displaced American talent and refused to give the American girl and young man an opportunity to build up in the moving-picture industry.

Nevertheless, it would appear that the moving-picture people favor this bill, because during the hearings on this bill before our committee, Mr. Charles C. Pettijohn, who is counsel for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors' Association, when testifying stated:

Mr. PETTIJOHN. I do not appear here, hardly in opposition to this bill; there is so much in this bill, it strikes me, that is good, along the lines we are all interested—matters that we are interested in seeing come about—we want to see American labor employed, and there is no other industry in this country that wants to see American labor employed more than the picture industry itself, and we want to be counted up in the front row, as far as that desire is concerned, and particularly at this time. I do not know that we even want to suggest to this committee, and I shall make my remarks very brief; I do not know that we even want to suggest even an amendment to this bill.

The Picture Players Alliance feels the need for legislation such as this bill will provide. There was submitted during our hearings a statement by the secretary of their welfare committee which I submit for your information. In this statement you will find further evidence that the United States has been lagging behind other nations in protecting our citizen actors and actresses here.

PICTURE PLAYERS ALLIANCE,
Los Angeles, Calif., February 18, 1932.

Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
Chairman Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DICKSTEIN: We note in the press that you are sponsoring a bill on the immigration of foreign actors and actresses. We are also informed that you are the chairman of the Immigration and Naturalization Committee. That suggests these comments.

The welfare committee of the Picture Players Alliance wishes me to convey to you their best wishes, and it is our sincere wish that your efforts will meet with success. May we give you our support?

You no doubt are acquainted with the fact that right here in the motion-picture industry there is much want and suffering, especially among the men and women extra players, but we wonder if you are really familiar with the many cases of suffering that could be spared these workers if it was not for the vicious practices of the casting fraternity.

The actors and actresses as well as the extra players in motion pictures represent a large group of unorganized workers—roughly, some 20,000 men and women. Much of the suffering of these people could be avoided if it were not for the vicious practices of the studio casting offices, studio officials, and the Central Casting Corporation.

The Motion Picture Producers Association in January, 1926, sponsored the Central Casting Corporation. It was supposedly founded for the benefit of the industry at large. At present it has the placement of these day workers with the various studios and is operated under the guise of a free labor-placement agency, but in reality it has grown into a monopoly under the present management, with Mr. Fred W. Beetson, president, and Mr. Dave Allen, the manager.

It seems that their interest is to give out work calls to people who really don't need or depend on the the work in pictures, such as wives, sweeties, relatives, and friends, and foreigners. By their malicious discrimination and arbitrary denial of work to the many capable and worthy picture players, who in many cases have given their best years to the industry, this small group of "great casting experts" have shown by their actions that they are totally lacking in sympathy with the starving workers in this crisis.

Here is a vital question to be answered by Mr. Will Hays and Mr. L. B. Mayer, especially now with so many starving workers in this crisis. At the various studios, or the Central Casting Corporation, whether it be atmosphere, bits, or parts, who are the most favored workers the American actors and actresses, or the foreigners?

Our committee is making a careful survey of the actual conditions as they are here in the film industry, and from time to time will mail you our reports. This will be our opening report. The most outstanding question now to deal with is, What can be done by Congress to help the American actors and actresses?

We are inclosing a clipping from the Los Angeles Herald Express, dated February 13, 1932, for your information. It points out how the studios cater to the foreigners.

What is needed at the present time is a new drive on the studios, from the Immigration Department. The last drive here very many disappeared for the time being, but are back again thicker than ever. We will do our duty to help the officers to locate these foreigners if our service is needed. Can not something be done right away?

May we have a copy of the bill on foreign actors and actresses? Thanking you in advance for anything you may do in the future to help this good cause,

Very truly yours,

J. EDWARD DAHLEN,
Secretary Welfare Committee.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. Is there any country that has restrictions against Americans?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. We have been the "suckers" for everybody. England has absolutely refused our American actors opportunity to perform for one day. France, Germany, and all the countries of Europe have refused our American actors an opportunity to work for even one day, and we, under our immigration laws, have permitted hordes of those people to come here and displace American talent, as a result of which—let me call attention to something very funny. On Broadway in New York to-day there are about 4 or 5 American actors, and there are over 250 aliens who have displaced Americans.

Regarding similar action on the part of other countries in barring American actors, in reply I might submit, for the information they contain, news items which were placed in the record of the hearings on this bill showing the way our American actors are now held up in England and the attitude taken by the British Actors Equity on the subject.

[New York Times, Thursday, November 26, 1931]

BRITAIN WOULD BAN ALIEN ACTORS UNLESS OF "EXCEPTIONAL TALENT"

(By the Canadian Press)

LONDON, November 25.—There is trouble ahead between the Ministry of Labor and large London vaudeville interests and it all started with the ministry's reputed determination to tighten up regulations regarding the admission to Britain of foreign variety stage artists.

The ministry purposes to exclude foreign performers "except those of exceptional talent," and the music-hall managers question the officials' ability to decide on such a point. They maintain also that an adequate program can not be staged without the inclusion of a substantial foreign element.

In any case the point is undecided who will judge what constitutes "exceptional talent," and speculation has arisen whether the ministry purposes to put continental acrobats and jugglers and American "wise-crack" comedians through their paces in some office in Whitehall.

[New York Morning Telegram, February 17, 1932]

BRITISH EQUITY BIT NERVOUS—FEARFUL OF WHAT UNITED STATES MAY DO REGARDING ALIEN ACTORS

LONDON, February 16.—Fearful that retaliatory measures will be taken in the United States, British Actors Equity Association has lodged a forceful protest with the Government here against the increasing restrictions against alien actors.

The association, recently formed after the pattern of Actors Equity in New York, has forwarded complaints to the Prime Minister, the Home Secretary, Viscount Snowden, and the Ministry of Labor.

These have been asked to recognize that continued refusal of permits, or permit renewals to alien performers, particularly to American actors, will result in discrimination against British actors abroad.

Reference is made to the bill lately introduced at Washington by Congressman DICKSTEIN, of New York City, who recommends a severe tightening of the laws governing admission of alien talent to the United States. (The bill has been reported favorably by a House committee and would bar all but "artists of proven distinction.")

The British Government has been asked to allow all foreign entertainers to perform here unless British Actors Equity submits reason to the contrary. This would give the association pretty much the same power as is now enjoyed by American Actors Equity, for in the final analysis it is the American association, rather than governmental decision, which decides the fate of foreign actors in America.

The Ministry of Labor has followed a strict policy lately regarding the appearance of Americans on the British stage. One of the most notable cases was its refusal to permit Susan Glaspell, winner of the last Pulitzer drama prize, to take a part in one of her own plays here. Subsequently, after a storm of protest came from all corners of literary and artistic London, the ministry capitulated, but Miss Glaspell declined to take the part in view of the original ruling.

TWO AMERICANS RULED OFF BRITISH STAGE

LONDON, January 28.—Evelyn Herbert and Robert Halliday, American stage stars, to-day were "off the boards" of British theaters, the first important players to be affected by the new ruling regarding foreign entertainers. Their appearance last night was their last. The Government refused to renew their permits.

I present for your consideration a petition of 2,000 actors and their families who are starving as a result of this condition. The names on this petition are the names of Americans, high-class citizens, actors of note, who have been displaced by actors from England and other parts of the country.

I present for your consideration another petition from the Lambs Club, of the city of New York. I present to you another petition from the Equity Association, which is back of this bill. The American Federation of Labor is back of this bill. Every American man and woman is back of this bill, because it will once for all try to keep our American actors working.

P. S.—Do you know that we only have three American stars playing on Broadway now; the rest are English; and American actors starve.

Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: Inclosed please find the Lambs Club's hearty indorsement of H. R. 8877. In order to make it easier for you, you will find below the typewritten list of all the signatures attached to the indorsement which is herewith inclosed.

Under this bill I am not depriving any Englishman, German, or Frenchman from entering this country if he has distinction or merit. In other words, if he can establish the fact that he is an actor of distinction or merit he can come here without any difficulty, but under the present law he does not have to establish anything. All he has to say is, "I am an actor," and a visa is issued to him and he is permitted to come into this country. And what does he do? He will work for less than an American actor.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And some go to work in factories.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. They like a long name that is foreign, that they can put on their billboards—a foreigner from England, Germany, or some other part of the world.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Tell me, please, who determines whether an actor is of distinguished merit and ability?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We have in the Department of Labor a special board that considers all of these facts. Suppose you desired to bring in an engineer to put up this building? That is contract labor. Before you could bring that person in you would have to go to the Department of Labor and prove that you can not get an engineer in the United States, an American person, who can put up this building. Then they investigate these facts.

Mr. BRITTEN. Let me go a little farther. Suppose a distinguished actor from another country wishes to come here for the purpose of getting a contract.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That would be contract labor.

Mr. BRITTEN. But suppose he did not have a contract but wanted to come here to get a contract?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. He would have to furnish affidavits showing his ability and that he was an actor of distinction or merit.

Mr. BRITTEN. To whom would he furnish those facts?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. To the Department of Labor in Washington. Then they will make an investigation, and when they find that he is an actor of distinction or merit he can come here, because the contract labor provision of the law will be waived and he will be allowed to come in.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am not asking about the contract-labor class at all. I am asking about a distinguished actor in Europe who desires to come here. To whom would have to apply for a passport visa in order to come to America? Would he apply to an American consulate or would that have to go through the Department of Labor in Washington?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. He could come in under the quota law.

Mr. BRITTEN. How is he going to establish the fact that he is an actor of distinguished merit?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. As I have tried to explain to the gentleman, that will have to be done through the Labor Department in Washington.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from Illinois asked how he is going to establish those facts. He can present proof as to his ability and furnish his record as an actor.

Mr. BRITTEN. Who determines whether he is an actor of distinction or merit? Does the American consul on the other side determine that or does that have to come through the Department of Labor here in Washington?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have tried to explain that to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It will be a pleasure for the Members of the House to know that for once the chairman and myself are in full agreement. This bill is clear and will not work against a distinguished actor but will work against the hamfat.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Under the present law a man goes to a consul and says, "I am an actor." He does not have to prove anything at all. He shows a contract which will permit him to work here at cut wages.

Now, under the present law all that man is compelled to do is to go to a consul and have his passport visaed and he can come here, and in doing that he displaces an American actor who may have a family, and that is what we want to prevent. What we propose to do under this new law is to make him prove that he has some distinction or merit, and those here who desire to have him come into the country must prove that they can not find a person of like kind in the United States to take his place. That is a matter for rules and regulations to be enacted by the proper department and that is the Department of Labor which controls the whole situation.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. As I understand, this has the unanimous approval of the gentleman's committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. And of the Department of Labor?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. It also has the unanimous approval of the Actors Equity Association of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair notify me when I have spoken eight minutes? The effect of this act would be a deterrent upon an actor, upon any artist or singer from attempting to come to this country to entertain the American public.

If I had not, during the many years of the past, received great entertainment from foreign actors of all kinds, I would not rise here and protest against the provincial policy which this Government is now attempting to follow.

Time and time again I have known Presidents of the United States—and notably President Wilson—to be entertained by traveling troubadours, acrobats, monologuists, like Mr. Crawford, of England, not of eminent ability, and by other actors who at that time did not have deserved distinction. Under the proposed law such men would be barred from coming to this country, and they could not be duplicated by American talent.

I take the position that art has no territorial boundaries, and yet to-day you are trying to raise a barrier against persons who come here temporarily, not only for the purpose of seeking a livelihood but for the prime purpose of entertaining the American public.

In my home city we have what is known as the Pabst Stock Co., which produces German plays throughout the dramatic season. They not only produce dramatic plays but musical plays as well. There is no American actor who has the qualifications necessary to entertain the people who attend those performances, because the actors must be able to speak the German language and satisfy that local clientele. They come here for the brief period of six months and then go back. They get a small salary for the services they render here.

I challenge the exclusionist from New York to cite wherein there are any American actors who are barred from employment by reason of the special character of entertainment that these German actors give the German-Americans of my home city.

Again, there are instances where actors of other nationality have entertained audiences in this country. Nazimova, when she first came here from Poland, came without a reputation and would have been barred by this bill. Wilson Barrett, that great and illustrious English actor of years gone by, who had not established a reputation when he came here, would have been barred. Edward Willard, when he came to this country and entertained audience after audience for years and years with his great characterizations, which I well recall from my high-school and college days, would have been barred because he did not have a reputation when he came here, as would also Salvini, and many others.

What are you proposing, may I ask the gentleman from Washington and the gentleman from New York, who are exclusionists? You are even barring Japanese, and perhaps Filipinos, if they are granted their independence. You are barring Japanese actors who come here to give acrobatic and jiujitsu performances, which can not be done by Americans.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman has referred to me.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can answer in his own time.

You are establishing by this policy an invitation to foreign governments to do the same thing toward American actors.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They are doing that now.

Mr. STAFFORD. And we should not encourage any such provincial policy.

Mr. BRITTEN, Mr. BLANTON, and Mr. BLOOM rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall yield in a moment.

Let me say to this audience here, America is in the vanguard and is the leader in the production of movie pictures. Ninety per cent of all the movie pictures produced in the world are manufactured in the United States. The moving picture must necessarily have these foreign artists come here and make the films, and any number of them are admitted to this country for that purpose. There are films made in the United States for production in Germany, where the German tongue is required, and there are films made here for production in Poland and most of the other foreign countries.

Gentlemen, you are going wild in your position when you seek to bar everybody who wishes to entertain the American public, as is proposed by this bill.

I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRITTEN. Would my friend from Wisconsin suggest that Max Schmeling, the prize fighter, is an artist or an actor and could he be excluded under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. He certainly could be excluded, because he is a pugilistic artist. He is not a singer or a warbler——

Mr. BRITTEN. He is a good runner.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am speaking of those who have entertained President Wilson in years back in Keith's Theater before it was Poli's, and later at Keith's Theater on Fifteenth Street, where there were traveling acrobats who came from Syria and Armenia and engaged in all manner of acts that entertained us, which acts could not be done by Americans. I have seen these actors for the past many, many years. Are you going to grant this power to the Department of Labor and encourage them to bar persons from coming here under the foolish guise that they are taking the place of American talent when that is not the fact?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. What we are proposing to do under this bill to them they have already done to us. I had a university cowboys' band on the water going over there, and they issued orders they could not land in London or Paris. It took about four days for our State Department to get them permission to land.

Mr. STAFFORD. I question whether the French Government has adopted any such policy. I question whether the British Government has forbidden any actor from America to perform in London, and the fact that actors are out of employment in this country is not because other foreign actors are coming here to take their places, but because of the industrial depression.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield the gentleman one minute to answer the question, if he will yield for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Does the gentleman know that Great Britain and all the countries like France and Germany are absolutely excluding any American from working for even one hour? Does the gentleman doubt that statement?

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to be frank with my audience. I have read where Great Britain, under certain conditions, has excluded some American actors, but I have not read where any other country has done that, and I have not read where the American screen that is manufactured here with foreigners as the principal actors has been barred from showing in France, Germany, or Great Britain.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman look at this list? Here is a group of foreign actors who are signed up beginning September 1, 1932, in practically every show in the United States under a contract to come here and work.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know full well that the German group that comes to Milwaukee to entertain the German-American population there fill a void that can not be filled by any American actors.

Mr. Speaker, I yield six and a half minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. We have done nothing but restrict and restrict during the nine years I have been a Member of this House. Every immigration bill that has come before us has been of that character, except that, for the first time this afternoon, we passed that which was not restrictive but liberal—the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], giving the same right to wives as to husbands, who are citizens, in bringing over their respective spouses.

We have undoubtedly developed in this country an intense chauvinism, which is aggravated by the passage of restrictive bills of this character. The instant bill provides, in effect, that all actors, artists, or singers shall be excluded from entering into this country unless they be of distinguished merit and recognized ability.

We have enacted embargoes of all sorts, high tariff walls, Chinese immigration laws—keeping everybody and everything out. There are some, even, who wish to adopt a measure requiring American-made goods in all Government contracts.

Europe and South America are not going to stand idly by and take that kind of punishment. In retaliation and revenge they do the selfsame thing. We build high walls against France, against England, and against Canada, shutting out their persons and their goods. They build higher walls against us. We and these countries stand on top of these walls and thumb our noses at each other. Trade becomes stagnant and depression ensues.

Is it not time to call a halt? Yesterday the French Government announced an edict against certain American goods. England raises the tariff against American goods 10 per cent. Canada is irritated by the immigration rules, which prevent her nationals from crossing the boundaries around Detroit and other metropolitan centers, and has just announced a 3 per cent increase against our goods.

So I say to you gentlemen, pause before you pass this kind of legislation. I hold no brief for the motion-picture industry. It has offended in many respects. I am utterly opposed to their method of block-booking. But if you pass this bill you put the motion-picture industry into a straitjacket.

Let me tell you why: This industry makes many pictures for foreign consumption. They take pictures which have been outstanding successes in this country and revise them into French, German, Spanish, and English pictures, in which the lines, spoken originally by the American actors, are reread by the Frenchman who speaks purest French, the Spaniard who speaks purest Spanish, the German who speaks purest German, and the Englishman who speaks the English of England and not the English of America. The picture remains the same, only the sound is changed.

This is done by alien actors appearing only in the "sound track." They are called "dubbers." The process is called "synchronizing" or "dubbing." To secure those who speak perfectly these languages it is essential to import these "dubbers." They are not actors necessarily, for their merit lies in their perfect speaking voices. An American, speaking English, is not acceptable to London audiences. He does not speak their "language"—British English. Even a Frenchman who comes here and remains six months, developing an American-French accent, is not acceptable to French audiences. These "talkers" or "dubbers" must therefore be selected with a great amount of care.

And since this bill states that they must be actors of distinguished merit and recognized ability to permit their entry into this country, these "dubbers" will be excluded, since their merit lies in their ability to synchronize their lines with the lip movements and actions of the American actors, as well as their ability to modulate their voices to the mood of the actor on the screen. They are not "distinguished actors."

There are some 250 to 300 of such persons who have been imported. The presence of each one in the pictures gives employment to 50 American workmen, designers, mechanics, painters, carpenters, and so forth. This bill, therefore, far from aiding employment, makes for increased idleness.

Without "dubbing," American pictures for foreign consumption can not be made here. As a consequence, the industry would be forced to move abroad. This would be another blow to a preeminent American industry, employing over 300,000 people, one which is surely entitled to fair consideration.

The Assistant Secretary of Commerce, in a radio address, said:

> There is a growing conviction among foreign merchants that our films are the subtlest but most effective type of advertising for American goods.

The auxiliary services rendered by the American motion-picture industry to world trade are too well known to require extended description. It has been proved beyond question that our motion pictures, bringing to other peoples an idea of the comforts and conveniences of American life, help to sell countless other kinds of American merchandise, thereby stimulating our entire foreign trade and commerce.

The motion-picture industry is the best salesman we have. It aids our sales abroad of our typewriters, autos, sewing machines, farm tractors and machinery, and mechanical devices. Furthermore, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] very properly stated, we have developed many foreign actors and actresses in our country. The list of famous foreign-born actors is impressive. Amongst them are Charles Chaplin, Maurice Chevalier, Greta Garbo, Norma Shearer, Marlene Dietrich, George Arliss, Clive Brook, and Marie Dressler. Most of these actors came to this country not when they were already stars but only mediocre players. If this law had been passed at the time of their entry, they would have been denied admission, and we would have been denied the pleasure of being entertained by them. We would have also been denied the huge income taxes which these stars pay our Government.

Then, too, there is the blow you strike in this bill at the spoken drama. Actors like George Arliss, Leslie Howard, Cyril Chadwick, Lynn Fontanne, Evelyn Hall, Vera Gordon, Greta Nissen, H. B. Warner, and others too numerous to mention, would have been lost to the American stage had this law been passed at the time of their entry. Remember, they were not always well known.

You can not place legislative restrictions on an art. It must remain forever untrammeled. The free choice of talent to create outstanding plays and motion pictures is vital to the success of the spoken and the silent drama. It is personalities that count, and not persons. The entertainment personalities imported from Europe and South America have helped give a universal appeal to the American drama and "talkie."

H. R. 8877 requires the actor to be "of distinguished merit and ability" before he or she will be permitted entry into this country. Prior to an actor's or actress's entry on the stage or moving-picture screen, it can not be well determined how satisfactorily his or her performance will be. There are very technical and mechanical problems involved in the production of a play or of a movie which sometimes make or mar chances for success. A distinguished actor on the dramatic stage may at times fail miserably in motion pictures. Oftentimes a distinguished motion-picture actor can obtain no foothold in the spoken drama. On the other hand the most obscure, when given an opportunity to show their talents, have easily climbed the stairs to stardom in either media.

This bill, which in effect calls for stage censorship, says to the director of the screen or drama that he shall not have free choice to select a given artist for a given rôle, until after that artist has proven his or her ability. Yet, as we have shown, it is the final picture that must and only can determine whether or not an actor or actress has rare ability. Certainly, this determination can not be left to an American consul abroad, who often has no knowledge of the facts and no knowledge of the complex and intricate problems facing the motion-picture industry or the drama. Yet, under this bill, it will be left to him to determine the fitness of an artist.

Such legislation will undoubtedly hamper and hinder the genius and the enterprise of American producers. This bill, therefore, should not pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 86, noes 18.

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. MURPHY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

Mr. STEWART, for to-day, on account of illness.

Mr. KLEBERG, for one week, on account of illness in family.

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplemental report to bill H. R. 1536, and to include therein a letter from the War Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RESUBMISSION OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a speech I made the other evening before the Woman's Organization for National Prohibition Reform.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech made by me recently before the Woman's Organization for National Prohibition Reform:

A dozen times I have considered the outlines of this evening's remarks, but the picture is changing so rapidly that what is pertinent to-day is passé to-morrow, for day by day in every way we are growing wetter and wetter.

Never in my wildest dreams could I have imagined as swift and radical a change as has come over the people of this country. While always hopeful, I could see no prospect of immediate change—mayhap because I was right here in the center of things when that battle was fought and realized the bitterness, the fanaticism, the unreasoning and unreasonable prejudice that rode roughshod over everything to foist the most vicious and most disastrous piece of legislation on an optimistic, happy, unorganized majority, with an "Oh, it can't happen" attitude. But it did happen, and in its wake has followed a war more dreadful in its consequences, more deadly in its operation, a war that has incapacitated more of the youth of this country, wrecked its institutions, devastated its whole moral fiber, more sinister and cruel than any war ever fought on battlefields; and at last you mothers, you women, have raised your hands and cried, "Cease! This can no longer continue!" and lo, the voice has been heard, and it is ceasing.

Unfortunately, I have been unable to attend your sessions, and probably much I will say will be but a repetition of what you have heard, and so I will confine myself generally to the economic and legislative side rather than to the social and moral side.

The Talmud, that ancient collection of wise sayings of the Hebrews, says: "No legislation can be enforced that makes a crime out of what was not even a sin." It almost seems as if these old sages might have had the eighteenth amendment in mind, and certainly no law ever passed in modern times by any civilized government has ever wrought such havoc. It is no longer a political issue—it is a national question—and the time has come to consider it as such; not as wet or dry, not as Democrat or Republican, but as a question affecting our whole people socially and economically, and threatening the very stability of our Government. We are now the only nation having tried out prohibition and realizing its baneful consequences that has not repealed the law.

What is the legislative situation regarding its repeal? How can it be effected? What is the probability of legislative action? And what can you do to help bring about this repeal? Up to the present Congress, on all usual prohibition questions, from 60 to 65 votes were about all we could muster. On unusual questions such as "Should the Government put poison into alcohol and sell it" (and this is no hypothetical question), we mustered about 90 votes—90 who were willing to go on record as against legalized murder, and in so doing run the risk of being stigmatized as wet.

The last election increased the number appreciably, but aside from those elected definitely as wet, how many were seeing the handwriting on the wall no one could tell, for a wave of indignation, of resentment, was sweeping the country, for which, to a great extent, your organization, the Young Crusaders, and kindred groups are responsible. I wonder how many of you know the procedure that was followed to gauge this sentiment? I am emphasizing this because you all know that Congress must initiate all measures that will relieve us nationally of this monstrosity. That relief lies in the hands of the legislators, not executives nor judiciary, and it is on legislators you must concentrate—but more of that later.

Now, as to procedure: A resolution was introduced jointly (an unusual procedure in the House) by Mr. LINTHICUM, a Democrat, and Mr. BECK, a Republican, to divest it of any partisan bias and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Now, the only way to find out if the American people are for or against prohibition is to give them a chance to say so.

This resolution provided, first, for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment; second, placed the regulation of the traffic of liquor in the hands of the Federal Government; third, permitted each State to determine for itself whether to be wet or dry, and Federal protection for those States desiring to be dry. The Judiciary Committee refused to report the resolution to the House, so a petition requiring the signatures of 145 Members was placed upon the Speaker's desk requesting the committee be discharged, and the House proceed to the consideration of the resolution. We felt sure we could muster the 145 names. We had many surprises. Some upon whom we depended, failed; others most unexpectedly joined our forces, and we had the names. The Speaker set a time to vote on the discharge of the committee, and on that we recorded 187 votes, the largest number ever polled on any question involving prohibition since the passage of the Volstead Act. Of course, this was not a majority, and the committee was not discharged, but it was a test vote, and for the opposition a pyrrhic victory. Had the committee been discharged, the House would then have considered the resolution, which, being in the nature of a constitutional amendment, would have required a two-thirds vote. It would then have gone to the Senate, and a two-thirds vote would have been necessary there also. Then it would have been submitted to the States for ratification by State conventions to which delegates had been elected solely for that purpose. Note that being a concurrent resolution executive approval would not be necessary—legislative approval only.

So let me urge you to concentrate your political efforts on your legislators—that is the first line of defense. For the first time in the history of prohibition we have the drys on the defensive, and we are advancing upon their outposts, capturing them one by one. That is the work for you to do. Don't dissipate your efforts in other directions. If we can win the legislators, whether in city or country, State or Nation, we need not fear. Those are the important offices, for we must have them.

The cost of prohibition in dollars and cents to the United States is almost unbelievable, and on account of the present financial condition of the Treasury of the United States an analysis may be timely. Several weeks ago the St. Louis Post-Dispatch published an article by its Washington correspondent, Mr. Charles Ross, that was most illuminating, and without the permission of the copyright owners I am using these figures, as I know how nearly accurate they would be. According to Mr. Ross, the present annual cost is well over a half billion dollars; the cost for the 12 years over five billion. Nowadays we use billions as if they meant very little.

How much is a billion dollars? If from January 1 of the year 1 until January 1, 1931, $1 had been paid into the Treasury every minute of that time, we would still lack several hundred thousand of one billion. (If you don't believe it, take a pencil and work it out.) So the five billion and over we are out is quite a sum and would go a long way toward balancing the Budget. Its annual cost is 12½ per cent of our normal Budget. Its total cost is about one-third of our national debt and about one-half the amount owed to the United States by foreign governments. The cost of prohibition to the Government is twofold: First, the cost of enforcement; second, loss of revenue. I haven't time to go into the details, but shall take Mr. Ross's balances. After a careful analysis of the figures, the conclusion is reached that in the 12 years of its operation the enforcement has cost $324,532,503. This cost has been gradually mounting. As an example, the expenditures of the Prohibition Bureau have increased from slightly more than six millions in 1921 to nearly fourteen millions in 1931. Even deducting fines, we have a net cost of over $260,000,000—just a little pocket money for Uncle Sam.

Now, what has Uncle Sam lost in revenue? Basing calculations on the 1919 tax rate, making no provision for increase in rate, Uncle Sam is out over $5,000,000,000, a most conservative estimate; certainly a most astounding object lesson in these distressful financial times. For the first time since the war England presents a balanced budget, due in no small part to the revenue derived from excise taxes, licenses, and duties placed upon alcoholic beverages. With the governmental regulation and high taxes England has not only partially solved her financial problem but has definitely solved her liquor problem.

I would not question even these expenditures and losses if we were any ways near a solution of our problem; but the longer prohibition is with us, the more complicated and difficult it becomes. I have often told of the night the Volstead Act passed. Mr. Kahn had fought it to the bitter end, seeing almost with the vision of a prophet what its dire consequences would be—the hypocrisy, the misery, the evil it would bring upon this country. "Why worry," said I, "By the time our children are grown they'll never know what liquor is like—they'll never miss it because they will never have had it."

That's the kind of an innocent I was. And it is these very children upon whom we, our generation, you and I, have wished this thing. They, realizing what we have done to them, have risen up in their glorious youth and are crying out, "Help us kill this monster that is sapping our strength, ruining our future, debasing our morals, threatening our social and economic structure, and depriving us of the rights that are ours."

Are their accusations unfair? Are not these the things prohibition has done to them? Is the arraignment unjust?

The prohibitionists point with pride to the number of arrests made as a proof of enforcement. I bow my head with shame that upon our statute books is a law that is broken with no qualms of conscience by thousands of otherwise law-abiding, patriotic, decent citizens.

The liquor industry in this country? Why ignore a patent fact? There is a well-organized liquor industry, involving millions of dollars annually. An illegal industry, in the hands of organized criminals, breeding other organized criminal activities that touch every home and every person. Talk about a sales tax, taxing the necessities of life—why, the racketeers' tax is paid by all of us—in the milk we drink, the bread we at, the clothes we wear. They are all ready to spend untold millions to keep the eighteenth amendment on the statute book. Don't let the drys delude themselves—the bootlegger and racketeer are their greatest allies.

The drys have taken the position that the eighteenth amendment is sacrosanct. All others may ye change, but touch that at your peril. As irrevocable as the laws of the Medes and Persians. If that be true, then no longer are we a democracy. We are not asking for a repeal, but for a resubmission. Let the people, after 12 years, decide. A failure to resubmit will only intensify the bitterness, not solve the problem, and a majority of the people can speak through their representatives in Congress, who could, as a last resort, refuse to appropriate to enforce an unenforceable law, thus nullifying the law. This only as a last resort if and when the minority of 12 States—constituting, it may be, but a very small proportion of the population—should refuse approval.

In the last few weeks an effort has been made to place a tax upon beer made strictly within the law, containing no more alcoholic content, nonintoxicating in fact, than legally permitted. Besides raising an estimated revenue of about $300,000,000 a year, it would use up about 120,000,000 bushels of barley, a large amount of hops and other agricultural products, and increase employment in about 42 allied trades. But the drys in Congress said "Thumbs down. Rather poison liquor, encourage bootlegging, than give way by so much as a jot or tittle" to help the farmer, relieve unemployment, and increase the revenue, reduce the deficit, and lessen taxes.

To a group like this I need not emphasize or explain present-day conditions. Public questions of great moment, on which the stability of our Government depends, are pressing for solution, but around them all we find entwined the long tentacles of this octopus—prohibition. It touches directly or indirectly every activity of public and private life. For example—recently the President issued an appeal to stop hoarding, to bring the money out of the safe deposits, wherever or whatever they may be, and put it back into circulation. A number of millions were brought out, but nowhere near the amount that is in hoarding. Why? Let's go back just a little. Not so very long ago the heads of a number of racketeering groups were sent to the Federal penitentiary. For what crime? Bootlegging? No. Racketeering? No. Assassination? No. Sabotage? No. For evading the income tax law! That was the only crime, of all we feel morally certain they were connected with, directly or indirectly, that the Federal authorities could fasten on them. How was the evidence obtained? Through tracing bank deposits. Now, what becomes of the millions they now collect? Invested? No. Deposited in banks? I guess not. Either sent out of the country or hoarded. And this sum is not insignificant—mayhap hundreds of millions, mayhap even more. Just think about that!

In urging a resubmission of the eighteenth amendment we are simply urging the American people to exercise their constitutional right and express their opinion on this important question, each State to determine for itself as to whether it shall be wet or dry, and the United States Government will protect it in its decision.

STATEMENT OF HON. BYRON B. HARLAN

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks made before the Post Office Committee on the question of printed envelopes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Reserving the right to object, do not those remarks now appear in the hearings?

Mr. HARLAN. They are not going to have the hearings printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered by myself before the subcommittee of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, pertaining to proposed legislation prohibiting the Post Office Department from entering into contracts to have the writer's name and address printed in the upper left-hand corner of stamped envelopes:

At the risk of some repetition, let us look briefly at the way this matter of printing stamped envelopes is handled. The Government advertises every four years for bids from anyone capable of printing and embossing envelopes. It does not make any difference who it is—anybody who can manufacture these envelopes.

I think it was either six or eight years ago, a concern took this contract away from the Government contractor in Dayton who was then doing the work, bought out the plant of the Dayton concern through some arrangement with which I am not entirely familiar, and went into business at the same place. They chose Dayton because it was right in the center of a big paper industry, they had excellent railroad facilities, were centrally located, and everything there that was adaptable to this business.

There is a whole coterie of paper and envelope companies around there, supplying not only this part of the country but the country at large.

Now, the company that gets this contract, bids in competition with all other companies to print this corner card for a certain price. The contract the last time was 2.1 cents a thousand. They can do that at that price because practically all it costs them to do that is to set the type. That is practically all the cost that is involved if the work is done at the time the envelopes are running through their machines.

I have not been out at this plant since 1926, and there may have been some big improvements since that time. But at that time, this plant did everything in one operation. They just took a stack of forms and fed them into the machine and they came out gummed, folded, printed, and embossed, and one machine there could turn out a hundred thousand of those envelopes in a day. The smaller machines would turn out from thirty-five to fifty thousand.

I have no doubt that they have improved on that machine considerably since that time.

They are paying their rent. The Government has not contributed a cent to their rent. They are paying their insurance. They are paying everything that any other factory would pay. It is not costing the Government a cent.

Not only that, but they pay for the printing of this stamp, which does cost the Government something when the Government prints it. All other stamps that the Government has to print and gum cost the Government something. In other words, only a portion of the price received for these other stamps represents a profit. On these envelopes everything that they get for the stamp is profit.

In view of the argument of the gentleman from the Federation of Labor I inquired as to the condition of the plant out there. I wanted to get a direct report on it, and here is a letter that I have just received from the International Envelope Co.:

"I will give you some of the information which I believe you should have, part of which is a report from the Dayton Safety Council as the result of an inspection recently made by the president of the safety council, Dayton Chamber of Commerce, together with the chief of the local fire department. Copy of their report you will find herewith.

"It would also be well to advise you that we have possibly the lowest rates for workmen's compensation in the State of Ohio. This is the result of few accidents and little request for compensation from our employees from the State Industrial Insurance Bureau. We paid into the State Insurance Fund in 1931 $1,315.37. All claims against this fund from our employees amounted to but $128.90 for the entire year. This, of course, speaks for itself and nothing could more clearly indicate the efficiency of operation.

"You are no doubt aware of the fact that we have an employees' insurance here which is applicable to all employees who have been with us for six months. It includes both sick and death benefits, also accident."

I am reading this to you because of the statement about these poor, underpaid, ignorant girls who were being imposed upon, as you got the information the other day. This company, in addition to their workmen's compensation, carries insurance, so that if employees get sick they will be taken care of.

Let me say that this factory is as light and fine a place in which to work as you gentlemen can find in any community in which you may happen to be.

In 1928 a committee from the Senate went out there to investigate this plant and the conditions of the plant. The committee consisted of Senator MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, Senator FRAZIER, of North Dakota, and Senator Phipps, of Colorado. This committee was favorably impressed and reported that the plant was well regulated and efficiently conducted. At the hearing of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads which was held April 24, 1928, Senator MCKELLAR read his report, dated March 29, 1928; also Senator Phipps gave a report of the inspection of the plant. Senator FRAZIER made a verbal report to the committee. To refer to that, see pages 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the hearings on S. 1752.

The working conditions at this plant, gentlemen, as compared to the working conditions in any country newspaper office that I have ever been in, are as champagne compares to rain water. I do not know whether that means anything to this committee any more or not.

But if you are discussing this bill from the standpoint of labor conditions, those are the labor conditions that they have out there. You could not have better conditions than they have out there.

There was a remark made, gentlemen, about paying low wages. I have lived in that community a long time. I have never heard any local complaints in that regard, but I have a suggestion in that connection. It might be possible for the Government to prescribe a wage rate if they are not satisfied with the one that is in vogue there if the Federation of Labor, after examination, find that they are being underpaid.

We are now providing a general clause in all of our public-buildings contracts that the prevailing rate of wages shall apply. I think that is a very unfair provision unless we put in specifically what we mean by the prevailing rate of wages. But I can see no objection to putting that clause in this contract.

Let me read you a little further from this letter.

"In connection with this we have a welfare department with a registered nurse in charge. This service also includes home service, which is looked after by our visiting nurse. We have a well-stocked library, a dining room, and a cafeteria, where food may be purchased at a nominal price. It is unnecessary that all these things be mentioned for the department's personal attention; but I believe it advisable that you have all these facts, which can be substantiated by the Government agency.

"As you know, we discontinued all night work for females two years ago."

That was two years ago, when we were in a state of prosperity. How many plants can say the same thing?

"The only exception to this case has been during the heavy demand for bicentennial stamps in January. We operated 11 machines 21¾ hours per day. This was done with the aid of three shifts, each working seven and a quarter hours. This lasted for a duration of but two weeks and was done at the insistent demand of the stamp division of the Post Office Department.

"The only other department in the factory operating at night, and where girls were formerly employed, is the box shop. At the time we discontinued night work for females we could not get along without the night production from this department, consequently we replaced the women with middle-aged men, who handle the work very efficiently.

"There are many other creditable things too numerous to mention that could be said concerning our organization. It is hardly necessary to mention these unless, as in the past, further criticisms are brought up against us, in which case it will be a distinct benefit to us to bring these up. The Government agents here, the officials at Washington, and other disinterested parties can say so much in our favor that I would be pleased to have the opportunity to have these things brought forth before any of the committees of the House or Senate.

"You are probably aware that the State laws of Ohio require each boy or girl to attend school until they are 18 years of age and are not permitted to work until that time; therefore, all employees entering our service are high-school graduates. This assists us in building up a very efficient organization.

"You will pardon me for saying all these nice things concerning our organization, and you may rest assured that we have nothing to fear from any criticism such as has been presented by labor organizations in past hearings."

This is signed by "J. J. O'Connell, manager."

If this committee is interested in labor conditions and wants to see twelve or fifteen hundred people who are hygienically and properly employed thrown out of employment by people who are working under practically no restrictions in these small printing shops here and there, they can see them at this plant. I do not believe you will be operating for the benefit of labor if you throw those people out of employment.

We have heard from but one group that is to be affected by this bill, the job printers. I submit that we should consider three other groups.

Mr. John Common Man has almost been ignored. The interests of the Federal Government have not been fully discussed. The small printer has not been completely covered—his problem, in my opinion.

Then the interest of the gentlemen in the woodpile has not been touched upon, and he is the envelope manufacturer of this country.

The envelope manufacturers of this country have been conspicuous by their absence here. But their association is the real backer of all this agitation, and we will talk about them in just a little bit.

Now, this is the very best way that this matter can be handled so far as the small consumer of envelopes, Mr. John Commonman, is concerned. In the first place, it is one of the few costs that enter into small business that is not reduced very largely as you get into increased purchases. The small man, so far as his postage and printing is concerned, stands on exactly the same footing with the big fellow, because the big fellow pays just as much per thousand for his envelopes, no matter how many he orders, as does the small fellow, which is something that you can not say in a great many cases.

The records of the Post Office Department show that last year 37 per cent of these orders were for lots of less than 500. Thirty-two per cent were for lots of 500 to a thousand. Two per cent were for lots of 1,500 and 12 per cent were for lots of 2,000.

In other words, 83 per cent of the envelopes that are printed in this plant are for lots of under 2,000. The small lodge, the missionary society, the ministers and teachers and people of this kind who would not ordinarily have envelopes with return cards at all if they did not write it up in the corner themselves—those are the people that you gentlemen have not heard from—not at all. Those are the people who will be most hard hit if you take away this service.

You have heard some discussion here of the price. Take the 37 per cent who buy their envelopes in lots of 500. If they were to go to a job printer they would have to pay as much to have 500 printed as to have a thousand, because by the time the printer gets his press set up the price is practically the same.

So that while these men indicated here that their price would run in the neighborhood of from eight to ten times as much as is being charged by the Government, taking the lots of 500, the man who buys in lots of 500, instead of getting them for 12 cents, as he does here, would have to pay in the neighborhood of fifteen or twenty times as much to make the work done in a small printing shop. Gentlemen, that is absolutely a ridiculous waste of money, it seems to me.

If we are going to carry that argument out, why not carry it to its logical conclusion? Why not let us require these country printers to use old Ben Franklin hand printing presses, because you certainly would employ a lot more people that way, and I do not believe you would increase the price of the country paper as much as fifteen or twenty times, as you would the price of these envelopes.

Or let us carry Mahatma Gandhi's argument a little further and require the city newspaper to do away with their linotype machines, or let us do away with the woolen mills and let us all go back to operating spinning wheels in our houses, so that we may give lots more employment. But you are putting men into employment on utterly useless tasks. That is what would happen in these small printing shops if they would get any of the business. I will take that up a little bit later on. They will not get any of the business. But if they would, that is what would happen.

If you could create such a unique situation, you might just as well go ahead and go the whole way. I do not know of any backsliding, any reversion to the middle of the last century that would be any more expensive than to increase printing cost from ten to fifteen to twenty times, as you would in this particular case.

And you are putting that burden on the minister, the country grange, the small lodge in the country town; you are increasing the cost 800 to 1,500 per cent to practically 862,000 users of this service in the United States, in order to take care of something like 11,000 printers. And may I say that the 862,000 users who are affected by this only represent a very small part because some of those users, in fact most of them, are little societies that have a very large membership; and, gentlemen, when they all get interested in this and find out what is being done, there will be two sides to this picture.

The Government has been very much maligned here about going into private business. It has been asked, Why do they not print the letterheads, and all that sort of thing? Well, gentlemen, the Government is not interested in any way in this matter except in the matter of efficiency in the Post Office Department, and that efficiency is promoted by having the name and the address printed on the corner card. There is no advertising. You can not put the name of your business on there. The Government would not stand for that. But what they put on is the name and the address, so that the post office will know where to return the letter, if it has to be returned.

It has been brought out here by Mr. ROMJUE, I believe, that it costs as much to send the letter to the dead-letter office as it does to send it back to the private individual. At the dead-letter office you have to have a man open the mail, read it, and then if he can find an address, the Government is put to the expense of sending that letter to that address, sending it back to the sender. But most of those letters that are sent without any corner card are signed "Mother" or "Norah" or "John" or something of that kind. And those letters contained $94,000 in money last year, and in many cases they could find no place to send it. Those same envelopes that went to the dead-letter office required all of this extra attention.

Mr. ROMJUE. May I interrupt you at that point, Mr. HARLAN?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes.

Mr. ROMJUE. You spoke about the amount of money that was contained in the letters that went to the dead-letter office last year. That went there under your efficiency system, did it not?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes; that is true.

Unfortunately, only the people who buy these envelopes are benefited. We have no way of forcing anyone to use this corner card. But, gentlemen, it is a remarkable thing, to me at least, that of those who did use these corner cards not one of the letters went to the dead-letter office. That is a record that you can not beat.

Suppose we did away with these something like one and one-half billion corner-card envelopes. How many more would we have in the dead-letter office? There is not anything that will operate effectively unless the people use it.

Now, in addition to the $94,000 that I mentioned a moment ago, there were $3,924,000 in checks found in letters at the dead-letter office. Those were sent out by small-business men. Gentlemen, these are not the big-business men. This is the little fellow who only writes a letter once in a while. He goes into the post office and buys a stamped envelope for 3 cents and sends it out. He does not put his name on it. He sends a remittance to mother or to auntie. That is what those are.

Now, if you take away this corner card, the man up in the rural community, away off in some little village where they do not even have a printing shop, he will just let it go without having any name on it at all, and we will increase this evil that we have at the present time.

To show you that the United States Government is not interested in boosting this industry, they have authorized the printing of these envelopes [indicating special return envelopes]. You have all seen them. Every printer all over the country can print them. The Government has nothing to do with that.

Mr. ROMJUE. What is that you are referring to now?

Mr. HARLAN. That is a return envelope. The use of these has grown very greatly. There is a provision by which the sender has to pay the Post Office Department for each one of these that is delivered back to him. They are sent out without any stamps on them. All the big mail users in this country are now using that card. That return card and the meter machine is all that they are using.

May I say that the meter machines are all made in Dayton, Ohio, too; so that it does not make any difference what angle of this we take, Dayton is bound to win.

Mr. ROMJUE. You say that this is now being sent out to the printers?

Mr. HARLAN. Anybody can have those printed.

Mr. ROMJUE. If that is a proper practice, is there any reason why this should not also be done by the Government?

Mr. HARLAN. There is this difference, that the Government has to supervise the printing of the stamp. It has to do that. Now, you will notice there is no stamp on that [indicating special-return envelope]. The Government supervises the printing of the stamp for its own purposes, for the efficiency of the Post Office Department, and for the benefit of the consumer. At the same time it is able to have that corner card printed up there at practically no expense. So the consumer pays substantially 2.1 cents a thousand for the printing, plus 22 cents for the postage.

You will notice, no doubt, that while the corner-card envelopes number one and a half billions, the envelopes without corner cards are just a little over 1,000,000,000. Originally they were about the same. That was just a few years ago, in one of the early reports, but they are not any more, and it is because of this metering service. The Government is encouraging that.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. What in the world has that to do with the stamped-envelope proposition?

Mr. HARLAN. It was stated here that the Government was boosting this business and trying to urge people to use this service. They are not trying to urge people to do that at all. They are simply trying to get the most efficient service that they can.

In the stamped-envelope business, the Government makes a profit in the neighborhood of $2,000,000. They have no cost of printing the stamp. It costs them $1,500,000 to print the other stamps and gum them. I am referring to the individual stamps, not these stamped envelopes.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. What would be the cost of this number of stamps printed individually?

Mr. HARLAN. I can only give you an estimate on that. I would say it would be about one-sixteenth of $1,500,000. It would not be an excessive cost.

Mr. EIDSNESS. Approximately $250,000. That is what the Government gains by this.

Mr. HARLAN. In addition to that the Government gains another item that I do not believe has been considered here. That is, these users who buy one and two thousand envelopes, buy them mostly to run them over a year or two years and they pay the money down right away, when they buy the envelope. The Government gets the benefit of the use of that money during all of that time, a year or a year and a half, or whatever it is—the time that it takes them to use up those envelopes. Whereas if they went out and bought stamps, they would just buy sufficient to use from day to day or from week to week.

Let us look at the small printer who is interested in this proposition. You have heard read in these hearings a statement that the mail-order houses are now offering to print envelopes at—what was it—$1.25 or $1.50 a thousand; a price, at any rate, that the small printer could not compete with at all.

But as it is now, the small printer has quite a lot of protection in the matter of competition against the stamped envelope, because the Government does not print any advertising on it. The small printer can say to the consumer, "Here, I can put your business on there. I can give you something that the Government can not give you." He has a talking point. But if you take this away from the Government, you open up a market for one and a half billion envelopes, and then see what these mail-order houses, like Sears, Roebuck can do.

This is a business that lends itself very easily to mass production, something that the little fellow with his hand press or small power press can not touch; and when Sears, Roebuck or the other mail-order houses get access to this big market, they will install the same machinery that is installed in Dayton, Ohio. In fact, I have no doubt, gentlemen, that if you take this away from the Government, the only thing that will happen will be that this company in Dayton will simply reincorporate under another name and use the same machines to print the same envelopes and use the mail-order houses to solicit the business and do it for something in the neighborhood of 75 cents a thousand. They can do it very easily at that price.

Mr. ROMJUE. But in case that occurred, just as you describe, this company would not have the Government with its machinery collecting all this business for them in competition with other people.

Mr. HARLAN. No. They would simply do it through the mail-order house, and, of course, they have now these users' lists, but these people are coming here and making a plea on behalf of the small printer. The smaller printer would not be able to touch any of this stuff because of the very nature of the business. The business is such that it will be done by mass production. They can so far outstrip the small-job printer that he would have no chance.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Would not an answer to all that be that the small printer does print the letterheads?

Mr. HARLAN. The small printer prints the letterhead.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Yes. That has not gone to the jobber.

Mr. HARLAN. There is quite a difference between that and this. In the first place, the large printing houses are now held off this envelope business because of the Government contract with these other people. There is no doubt that some of the small houses would get some little percentage of this business, but not enough to make any difference.

Mr. ROMJUE. I do not know from your answer yet whether you got Mr. HOGG's question, which seems to be very pertinent. Why is it, now, that Sears, Roebuck do not get the printing of these letterheads? There is nothing to prevent them from doing that, just like any other contractors.

Mr. HARLAN. Well, the fact of the matter is I do not know that they do not get some letterheads. They may or they may not. But the soliciting and printing of letterheads is quite a different proposition from the soliciting and printing of envelopes. I do not know what price Sears, Roebuck put on letterheads, if they do that work at all.

Mr. FOSS. The envelope requires a process of manufacture and the letterhead does not.

Mr. HARLAN. Yes. You see, there is this much about it. The company that makes this envelope, by gumming the envelope and folding, can make a sufficient profit on the envelope, as compared with the small printer, who would have to buy that envelope already manufactured, to make his printing cost too great. A letterhead is just a sheet of paper that can be bought at very little variation in price, any place else on the market.

I have certainly convinced myself, anyway, that these small printers are not the ones who are very much interested in the proposition. That is some consideration when a man persuades himself on a point.

Mr. HAINES. Will you allow me an interruption there?

Mr. HARLAN. Certainly.

Mr. HAINES. I think they are interested.

Mr. HARLAN. What is that?

Mr. HAINES. The small printers are interested. Perhaps you are in a different position from the balance of the Members of the House.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I will say that apparently this National Editorial Association is the party who is making the fight. But let me call your attention to the hearings in 1926 before this committee.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Nobody asked me to introduce my bill. I do not know whether they asked Mr. ROMJUE to introduce his bill or not.

Mr. ROMJUE. Nobody asked me to introduce my bill.

Mr. HARLAN. Gentlemen, there is one concern, I will say, that unquestionably will make a tremendous profit out of this thing if it is taken away from the concern in Dayton. That is, there is one group of people, and that is the associated envelope manufacturers.

Mr. FOSS. This bill would only do away with the printing of the corner card. The Government would still continue to make the envelope and stamp and print the skeleton, as they call it.

Mr. HARLAN. The fact of the matter is that if they do away with the corner card——

Mr. FOSS. That would cut out the envelope manufacturers.

Mr. HARLAN. Yes. At the present time that would do away with 1,078,000 of these envelopes. If you do away with the corner card, practically all of these small users will do away with the stamped envelope, because it does not cost them any more to buy their envelopes at the post office and stamp it on. The only person it costs more is the Government. It would cost them $1,500,000 to stamp those envelopes.

In 1926 hearings were had on this subject, and there was a statement of Robert S. Regar, the Third Assistant Postmaster General. These were hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, House of Representatives, in February of 1926. Mr. Regar said:

"I desire at this time to place before the committee a copy of a letter received by the department purporting to have been written by the president and treasurer of the American Envelope Co. asking for contributions of $300 to $500 for the envelope legislative committee, dated October 3, 1924."

Then followed some discussion, and the letter was introduced. Here is the letter that was sent:

"GENTLEMEN: I am inclosing copy of bill which it is proposed to introduce in the next Congress limiting the printing of envelopes by the Post Office Department in competition with its taxpayers and citizens, so that on stamped envelopes nothing more than the city and State can be designated for return cards.

"I believe that you will recognize the unfairness of Government competition with printers * * *."

Listen to the envelope company trying to get these printers excited!

"* * * just as much as Government competition with your own business, and will give your sympathy and support to this movement.

"May we count on you for a nominal cash contribution to the above—$300 to $500? Please make your check payable to the Envelope Legislative Committee."

Then followed some discussion very briefly, and Mr. Regar said:

"In further reference to this matter, I desire also to read a copy of general letter No. 47, purporting to have been written by the Bureau of Envelope Manufacturers of America, 19 West Forty-fourth Street, New York City, dated August 14, 1923."

Then there follows some discussion about the date of the letter and the date of the previous letter that Mr. Regar read, which was October 3, 1924, and on request of Mr. Sproul to read the whole letter, Mr. Regar read this letter:

"Knowing how vitally interested you all are in the proposed campaign to secure a modification of the present stamped envelope law, I think I should report on the progress I have made since the Niagara Falls meeting.

"Since that time I have had several conferences with Buckley and Thayer, of the United States Envelope Co., and they have finally and definitely agreed to participate in the campaign. They have definitely agreed to contribute $15,000, provided total contributions of $75,000 can be secured.

"In view of their having agreed to contribute $15,000, I stated that, in my opinion, I thought the members of the bureau would contribute $22,500. This seemed to both Buckley and myself a fair apportionment between the United States Envelope Co. and the members of the bureau."

Again, in 1929, just before this bill was introduced in Congress, there was written an editorial in the Envelope Industry, a magazine, which I would like to read:

"The fight against the Government envelope policy will not be allowed to languish this spring. Keeping everlastingly at it is the motto, even in the face of the warning that the new Congress will have no time for miscellaneous legislation at the extra session. Tariff revision and farm relief are supposed to have a monopoly of attention at the special session; but, at that, the crusaders for envelope reform are keeping the pot of propaganda boiling and will be on the alert for any opportunity to edge in, as an entering wedge, the proposal to restrict the printing of return cards."

This is just the entering wedge, Mr. Foss. The next fight will be to take the rest of it away. Continuing with this editorial:

"In the Seventy-first Congress, as in the former Congress, the envelope manufacturers will not appear as instigators, because of the criticism that they are selfishly interested. The campaign of education and promotion will be left to the legislative committee of the National Editorial Association which attacks this injustice of governmental competition with private business from the standpoint of the commercial printers who are bereft of envelope-printing jobs that are rightfully theirs. As on previous occasions, the renewal of the envelope fight will be first made in the Senate where, for various reasons, the situation is most favorable."

This is their own magazine talking. This is the concern that raised the $75,000 slush fund a couple of years before.

Mr. BRUNNER. Have you heard of any this year?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes, sir; I have a little later data than this.

Mr. FOSS. Have you any knowledge as to what this money was to be used for?

Mr. HARLAN. No; I have not.

Mr. ROMJUE. What is the date of this editorial that you are reading?

Mr. HARLAN. April, 1929. These country editors that have come here, with no chance of getting this business, however the thing is handled, are sincere, gentlemen; I will say they are sincere. They think they are helping themselves, but they are just going to be a cat's-paw to put the Envelope Association into a business that they have lost in competitive bidding against the International Envelope Co.

That is the situation in a nutshell, so far as that is concerned.

Oh, they have selected these farm people to make this protest, because we all know the attitude of Congress toward the rural people. Why, if you introduced in Congress a bill to take the Indian off the top of the Capitol because somebody thinks that it might make good fertilizer for some farming community, they would tear it down, grind it up, and give it to them. We all want to help the rural communities as much as we can, but that is no reason why we should allow a lobbying industry to come before this committee and this Congress and use these rural people as cat's-paws and tools to pull their chestnuts out of the fire.

The gentleman asked me for some later data. The latest I have is the edition of the same magazine of March, 1932, and here is what it says:

"The report of the stamped envelope committee and the discussion which followed was the high point of the annual midwinter meeting of the Envelope Manufacturers' Association of America, held at the Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, March 10 and 11."

That is the one point that the envelope manufacturers are taking up at their national meeting. They should worry whether or not the small user has to pay from eight to fifteen times as much for his envelopes. They give a lot of thought to the little lodge and the minister and the country grange as long as they can cut in on the profits of the business of envelopes. That is all they are interested in.

Mr. ROMJUE. Are you referring to the local editor now?

Mr. HARLAN. No. I am talking about this envelope concern here, the real lobbyist before this committee. I will continue with this article in their magazine:

"C. R. Stevenson, association secretary, is chairman of that committee, which has as its other members L. G. Reineman, Rochester Envelope Co., Rochester, N. Y., F. P. Schneider, Transo Envelope Co., Chicago, and R. L. Gray, Gray Envelope Manufacturing Co., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"The stamped-envelope situation has aroused the resentment of envelope manufacturers for many years, since it takes business away from envelope companies and printers, although the Government actually loses money on every 1,000 stamped envelopes sold."

That is a sample of the propaganda that is handed out. That is absolutely false, as you gentlemen know from the figures that these representatives of the Post Office Department have given you, unless you believe that they are here to commit perjury.

"It was brought out at the convention discussion that the Government competes with private organizations in the envelope business, and yet sells Government envelopes with a printed corner card, at only a few cents more per thousand than the cost of the printing alone.

"Those attending the convention felt strongly that now is the time to get some action on the Government stamped-envelope problem. A fund of $5,000 was raised for propaganda toward meeting this issue."

Of course, if you think that some little printer up in Minnesota can perhaps make $25 a year more than he is now making if this whole practice were abandoned and he got all the business that he expected, and can afford to lobby in Washington for a week, that is your privilege. Those people do not have the money to put on a campaign of this kind. Somebody else has to be back of it. But I think, for the benefit of the public and for the benefit of this Congress, people who are really interested in it ought to come here and say so.

Mr. ROMJUE. Let me ask you a question. I think this is in all fairness to the members of the committee. I have not seen any of those people who are behind this propaganda, and the only communication that has come to the members of the committee has been from the people that we have already mentioned. It is not fair to the editors of the country newspapers to say that this is being propagandized by somebody else; that they are wholly ignorant; that somebody else is financing all this propaganda.

Let me say that I introduced my bill on my own judgment, because I believe that this business ought to be abolished. I want to ask you right at this point this question. You come from Dayton, Ohio. The Burroughs adding machine is manufactured there.

Mr. HARLAN. It is now; yes.

Mr. ROMJUE. What would you think about turning that business over to the Government to supervise, to get the lowest bid for manufacturing a number of these adding machines and give the contract to this one company?

Mr. HARLAN. There is no occasion for the Government supervising the adding-machine industry that I know of.

Mr. ROMJUE. I am making the point: Would it not save the banks and those people who have to use those machines money?

Mr. HARLAN. No; it would not. I do not believe the Government could go into that business. The Government would not be in this envelope business if it were not for the fact that by having this contract, for example, they can specify the tensile strength of those envelopes. They can regulate the size of them. They can specify the kind of paper that shall go into the envelopes and they can protect themselves from a lot of useless work and a lot of loss in the Post Office Department by having return cards printed on them, and they save themselves a lot of money by having the stamp printed on the envelope rather than having it printed separately.

Let me say that I can not see anything to this opposition, gentlemen. All the arguments that have been presented here would require the small man in business to pay from eight to fifteen times as much for his printing as he has to pay now.

To hold up the small business man for this excise charge is nothing less than a racket.

We find the same kind of a situation in Chicago, gentlemen, where in certain neighborhoods if you do not park your car at a certain garage, when you come out you find that your tires have been cut. Or if you are in the beer business and do not go to one particular gang to place your business, you will find your establishment broken up. It is nothing but a racket, and this is nothing but the spirit of a racket on the part of the envelope companies.

Now, the suggestion was made that we ought to penalize everyone who did not have corner cards printed by charging them an extra cent for postage. I can not subscribe to that. Just think of it, gentlemen. A man has to send out only a few letters a week. Shall we require him to pay 3 cents postage because he does not have a sufficient business to justify his having corner cards printed on his envelopes? The large manufacturer can compel him to go to the local printer and have some work done which he does not find necessary, just as they compelled the transient customer, in the illustration I gave, to go to the local garage and park his car, even if he does not find it necessary or desirable.

Mr. ROMJUE. I made that suggestion, Congressman. I did not recommend it, but the thought occurred to me at the time. But when you stop to think about it, the man who goes to the post office and mails his letter without a return card on it gets an extra service from the post office in this way: Let us suppose that you mail your letter without a return card and I mail one with a return card. They can not find the addressee in either instance. They send back my letter, because there is a return card on it. Yours goes to the dead-letter office, and, of course, has to receive extra service.

Mr. HARLAN. It does.

Mr. ROMJUE. If the man gets that extra service, he ought to pay the extra postage. I am not urging that; but as a matter of fact, it does cost the Government something to examine that letter at the dead-letter office and return it; and if he receives that extra service, it seems to me he ought to pay for it.

I realize that these are matters that can not be worked out to an exact mathematical certainty. But if you charge both of them the same, as is done now, one gets a greater service than the other, at no additional expense. As I say, I am not advocating that; but happening to think of it, I made the suggestion.

Mr. HARLAN. I can not see any possible argument that we can advance here to justify that. If the country printer could get this job at 10 or 15 per cent additional cost to the purchaser, there might be an advantage in distributing this out over the country. That might probably compensate for having it all done at one place under very favorable conditions. But to increase the cost of this service and put it on the small man who buys 500 or a thousand envelopes—and that is the man whom you hit, as well as the little organization—to increase that cost from eight to fifteen times just because we are told that there are 11,000 country printers—how many of them there really are who are interested in this we do not know—who might get some of this business if it were taken away from the International Envelope Co.—I can not see any economic justification for that, gentlemen.

I will say this, gentlemen, that the International Envelope Co., who are interested in this, feel that their position is so clear that there has been absolutely no letter written, no lobbying being done on behalf of the opponents of this bill. They felt that when the matter was presented, it would be so clear that nothing else would be necessary.

Mr. ROMJUE. Was it not agreed that the lobbying would be done a little later?

Mr. HARLAN. There is no question about it, gentlemen, there will be lots of lobbying if you report the bill favorably. When this was up heretofore, the big metropolitan papers, like the Boston Transcript and the New York papers—well, they just barely got started on it when Congress discovered what a hornet's nest had been stirred up, and it was stopped.

But here you are touching something that is of very vital interest to the people of this country and, needless to say, if this bill is voted out to the House for passage, these people who are the users will bring in their side of the argument.

Mr. LAMNECK. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HARLAN. Surely.

Mr. LAMNECK. Considerable protest has been made to the effect that the Government is shipping these envelopes from Dayton to the customer without charging him anything for that service. Is that true?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Tilton will be able to answer that.

Mr. TILTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAMNECK. That is, if I order some envelopes here in Washington you print them at Dayton at so much per thousand and ship them without any charge for the transportation?

Mr. TILTON. The selling price includes the cost of transportation and it is uniform throughout the country. The price is arrived at by taking an average.

Mr. LAMNECK. Then the statement that the Government charges nothing for transportation is not true?

Mr. TILTON. No; it is included in the charge.

Mr. ROMJUE. How much is the transportation of 2,000 envelopes from Dayton, Ohio, to San Francisco, Mr. Tilton? Do you know how much that would cost?

Mr. TILTON. The transportation item covers other matters. It is the cost of distribution. The rental of post offices, and so forth, is included.

Mr. ROMJUE. I think you read those figures in the record in the early part of the hearing. Will you repeat those figures?

Mr. TILTON. The taking of the order and the delivery expense at the post office from which the order is taken is 47 cents per order.

The departmental and Dayton Agency expense is 7¼ cents per order.

The incidental penalty mail expense for transmitting orders is 6.36 cents per order.

Transportation and other expense is $1.0599 per order. The total of all those distribution expenses is $1.666 per order.

Mr. HARLAN. And when all of that is taken into consideration the Government still makes a profit, even after paying for transportation charges?

Mr. TILTON. Reduced to thousands, the average per 1,000, the cost of distribution is 78.4 cents per thousand.

Mr. ROMJUE. Which is the greater expense, the printing of the envelope or the distribution and transportation?

Mr. TILTON. The distribution. The printing alone costs 2.1 cents per thousand.

Mr. LAMNECK. The statement was made the other day that you charge the customer 24 cents a thousand.

Mr. TILTON. Twenty-four cents.

Mr. LAMNECK. But you only pay 2 cents?

Mr. TILTON. Two and one-tenth cents.

Mr. FOSS. Would it be possible for the Government to manufacture these stamped envelopes at the bureau?

Mr. TILTON. I think the bureau has from time to time figured on it, but they are all higher than the commercial contracts. Mr. Lovejoy has been here longer than I have and may be able to answer that.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I do not know whether the bureau has figured on that, but the Public Printer has.

Mr. FOSS. Is the use of these stamped envelopes increasing or decreasing?

Mr. LOVEJOY. Decreasing.

Mr. FOSS. I would like to ask the Congressman the number of employees involved in this industry.

Mr. HARLAN. I think it is 1,200.

Mr. EIDSNESS. Approximately 1,200.

Mr. FOSS. And they have to pay taxes?

Mr. HARLAN. They all pay taxes. I may say that they are all high-school graduates.

Mr. FOSS. I mean the concern.

Mr. HARLAN. They pay taxes. They do everything just as every other manufacturing concern does it. They have always been able, as I understand it, to do this at a lesser cost than the Government could do it in their own plants.

Mr. FESS. Have you any estimate as to the amount of their profits?

Mr. HARLAN. I have not. Their profit is not abnormal. Every four years they have to figure it, and they have to compete against these other envelope manufacturers. I may say that this concern got the contract because of the invention of certain machinery, about four or six years ago, which enabled them to take it away from the concern that was doing the work before that.

Mr. HAINES. If there are no further questions, we thank you for your statement, Mr. Harlan.

PROHIBITION

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the prohibition question is not primarily a political question. It is an economic question. But apparently there is such widespread demand for a vote on the subject as to bring it into the political forum, where it challenges the attention of both political conventions.

Ours is a democratic form of government. It is a government of the people and by the people. In the language of my own State, "the will of the people is the supreme law." No enactment can survive without their approval. No law can be enforced without their sanction. And when the question of that sanction is properly raised there is no alternative but to submit it to the expression of their will for authoritative determination.

For this reason I would gladly stand with my party on a platform recommending a constitutional amendment permitting the people to vote directly on the question by States at a special election called solely for that purpose in order to permit the question to be determined once and for all. Until so determined, it will remain a mooted question, obscuring other issues, complicating national politics and retarding the consideration of national legislation indefinitely.

Let us not temporize with makeshift measures. Let us carry it directly to the highest tribunal and submit it to the vote of the people themselves.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did April 15, 1932, present to the President for his approval a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9575. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, etc., and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

MOUNT VERNON

Mr. HALL of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in discussing the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], which paves the way for the acquisition of Mount Vernon, the home of George Washington, by the Federal Government, I feel that it would be exceptionally appropriate to complete this transaction, if possible, during the bicentennial year, while people throughout the country are paying tribute to the memory of our first President.

Wakefield, on the lower Potomac River, the birthplace of George Washington, has been restored as nearly as possible to its original state and presented to the Government as a national memorial to Washington. It was at Wakefield that Col. John Washington, the great-grandfather of George Washington and the first member of the family to venture to the New World from England, settled about 1657. Moreover, in 1674 Col. John Washington, in copartnership with Nicholas Spencer, obtained the land grant on the original Mount Vernon estate consisting of 5,000 acres on the upper Potomac River, then known as Epsewassen or Hunting Creek.

This property later was divided, and George Washington, at the age of 20, inherited the 2,500 acres from his half brother, Lawrence, subsequently increasing the size of the plantation to 8,000 acres.

The house that Washington was born in at Wakefield was built about 1720, and destroyed by fire on the Christmas Eve of 1780. After ascertaining the type and dimensions of the birth house, the Wakefield Memorial Association constructed a virtual replica of the building, which has been accepted by the Federal Government as a national memorial. As a consequence, it seems to me that Mount Vernon, too, should now be acquired by the Government and converted into a national memorial, thus restoring the relationship of the two places as it was in the days of Washington, with a broad national highway for the connecting link. It is only about 70 miles from Wakefield to Mount Vernon, a relatively short distance in this era of fast motor transportation.

The Treadway resolution requests the Secretary of the Interior to sound out officials of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association to ascertain the terms and conditions under which the Government might obtain Mount Vernon; also to find out if the association would like to take care of the place over a period of years under Government supervision. Peradventure, the association would be averse to relinquishing its ownership of Mount Vernon; and there is justification for opposition to the proposal.

When John Augustine Washington, a kinsman of George Washington, placed Mount Vernon on the auction block in 1853, after it had been sadly neglected for many years, Ann Pamela Cunningham, a patriotic daughter of South Carolina, pitched in and raised the $200,000 required for purchasing the place. She also organized the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association and served as the first regent. Incorporated under the laws of Virginia in 1856, the association since has maintained Mount Vernon almost exactly as it was in Washington's day. Of the 8,000 acres comprising the plantation in his day, the association has acquired more than 250 acres, repaired the mansion, restored buildings that had fallen into ruin, retrieved and assembled numerous articles of furniture, valuable relics, and mementos of the Washingtons and of their period.

I revere the patriotic action of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association in preserving for posterity the one-time home of George Washington. No nobler deed has ever been recorded in the annals of the Nation. On the other hand, I concede that the failure of Congress to buy Mount Vernon when it was offered for sale in 1853 is absolutely inexcusable.

Nevertheless, I feel—and I believe the good ladies eventually will concur with me—that Mount Vernon should be the priceless heritage of all the American people, and that the Government should now atone for its gross negligence by acquiring the property in a manner satisfactory to the association and forever thereafter preserve it as a patriotic shrine. And I am in favor of permitting the association to look after the place under Government supervision as long as it so desires.

Mount Vernon was in the possession of the Washington family for 258 years—from 1674 to 1853. As I have already pointed out, the original land grant was obtained by Col. John Washington, the first member of the family to come from England to this country, and that George Washington, his great-grandson, eventually fell heir to the property. According to the Recollections of G. W. P. Custis, Lawrence Washington, who inherited the estate from his father, joined the American expeditionary force raised by Governor Gooch, of Virginia, to aid the British Navy in its attack on Cartagena during the war with Spain. Because of his admiration for Admiral Vernon, commander of the British fleet, Lawrence named the estate after him—and Mount Vernon it has remained.

George Washington first went to Mount Vernon in 1747 to live with his brother Lawrence, and came into possession of the property on the death of his brother in 1752. The central part of the present mansion house was built in 1743—189 years ago—when young George was only 11 years old. In 1759 he remodeled the house, so that it measured 50 by 32 feet and contained 12 rooms. Shortly thereafter he married the dashing young widow, Martha Daindridge Custis, and installed her as the mistress of Mount Vernon. He added two wings in 1773, increasing the number of rooms to 19; and the front portico was built in 1778, while Washington was serving as Commander in Chief of the Continental Army during the Revolutionary War. The framework is of rough-hewn white oak timbers, cut from trees growing on the plantation. George Washington was a natural-born farmer, and he would have preferred to remain on his plantation permanently, superintending the cultivation of his goodly acres; but fate decreed otherwise. However, a kindly disposed Providence permitted him to spend his last years at home as well as to breathe his last in the big house overlooking the historic Potomac River.

The more one sees of Mount Vernon the more one appreciates the significance of the timely action of Ann Pamela Cunningham in saving it for the American people. To have lost Mount Vernon, so closely associated with the home life of George and Martha Washington, would have been a national disgrace. But it yet remains to make Mount Vernon a national memorial, and I hope the Treadway resolution may be approved, so that the Secretary of the Interior and the officials of the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association may sit down together at a round table, discuss the proposition with an open mind, as well as agree upon ways and means of transferring the property to the Federal Government that will be satisfactory to all concerned.

Among outstanding national memorials constructed in connection with the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of Washington's birth is the Mount Vernon Memorial Boulevard, one of the most beautiful and historically interesting roads in the world, linking the National Capital with the former home of George Washington. This 15-mile-long stretch of highway, built at a cost of approximately $5,000,000, begins at the Virginia end of the new Arlington Memorial Bridge, skirts the Arlington National Cemetery, centers historic Alexandria, Washington's home town and voting precinct, and terminates at the postern gates of Mount Vernon.

Except in Alexandria, it is 200 feet wide, with a 60-foot paved driveway in the center; and its scenic beauty subsequently will be enhanced with suitable landscape plantings. Assuredly, many thousands of pilgrims annually will drive to Mount Vernon over this striking highway—all the more reason why Mount Vernon should be placed under the supervision of the United States Government.

More than 40 years ago the Mount Vernon Avenue Association was created with the view of constructing a broad avenue that would connect Washington City with Mount Vernon. The charter provided for a right of way 200 feet wide, with a 60-foot driveway in the center. It was suggested that 1 mile be allotted to each of the Thirteen Original States for setting out trees and flowering plants, erecting monuments to favorite sons, as well as such other specimens of architecture as would enhance the scenic beauty and historic interest of the avenue. Under an act of Congress passed in 1889 Gen. Peter Hains, of the Army Engineers, surveyed and reported on three alternative routes, but for some reason the avenue did not materialize. However, the river route, chosen for the present boulevard, approximates the so-called eastern route surveyed by General Hains.

Unusual interest also attracts to the magnificent new Arlington Memorial Bridge, spanning the Potomac River and connecting Washington City with the Mount Vernon Memorial Boulevard. Symbolically, this $7,000,000 arch, 2,138 feet long, with a 60-foot driveway in the center supported by granite columns 166 feet high, forms the connecting link between the North and the South. Construction of a bridge at this site was first advocated by President Andrew Jackson; and the project since was continually pending in Congress until the plans for the present bridge were approved. To forge an enduring link between the North and the South was also Jackson's controlling purpose.

It is exceedingly appropriate that both the Arlington Memorial Bridge and the Mount Vernon Memorial Boulevard should have been formally dedicated on the two hundredth anniversary of George Washington's birth. What could be more fitting than for the Government to acquire and convert Mount Vernon into a national memorial during the bicentennial year?

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, one of the Washington newspapers carried the report a few days ago that President Hoover had made, or was about to make, 85 suggestions of ways to save. He has been President three years, and it seems to be a little late for him to wait until the country is broke and for the eve of a presidential election to make any kind of a statement about saving. I am wondering why he did not adopt a saving program when he was first inaugurated? The Washington Star of Sunday contained his saving program, but there was not 85 ways mentioned. Of those he did mention, some have merit and some have no merit. I want to call particular attention at this time to the most vicious suggestion that he made, and one which ought to be especially defeated. He advocates discontinuing the appropriation for vocational education. His recommendation as given in the press is as follows:

SEC. 404. The annual appropriations provided for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, by sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure," approved February 23, 1917, as amended (U. S. C., title 20, secs. 11 to 14, inclusive), shall not be expended. No appropriation made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, to carry out the provisions of acts and parts of acts amendatory of or supplementary to such act of February 23, 1917 (U. S. C., title 20, sec. 29; U. S. C., Sup. V, title 20, secs. 15a, 15b, 15c, and 30), shall be expended and the amount thereof shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

This clearly puts Mr. Hoover as being against education; and so far as my information goes, he is the only President we ever had that took that position with reference to this very vital and important subject. It was King Solomon who said—

That where there is no vision the people perish.

Let us contrast this position of our President with the position of some of the other Presidents. Thomas Jefferson said:

Those who expect to remain free and ignorant in a state of civilization expect that which has never happened and never will happen.

George Washington said:

That in proportion as the structure of government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

John Quincy Adams said:

To preserve, to inform, and to perpetuate the sources, and direct their most effective channels the streams which contribute to the public weal is the purpose for which government was instituted.

The great Edmund Burke declared that "education is the chief defense of nations." Democracy depends upon the intelligence of the masses for its existence, and yet in the name of economy our President seeks to disrupt the program of our public schools; in the name of economy he seeks to deprive 1,250,000 boys and girls of the privilege and opportunity of finishing their vocational courses. Appeals to prevent this have come to me from numerous citizens in my district—from people in all the walks of life and from different civic organizations. There is a flood of protest against discontinuing this fund, and there should be. This House should give a unanimous vote against it. If the boys and girls who are now taking these courses are thrown out and have to stop, it means much to them and much to this country. They have made their plans, and will be disappointed and embittered if they are not permitted to complete their plans. They have selected these courses to prepare themselves for lives of usefulness. If this item is discontinued now by the Government, it may never be taken up again; and even if it should be reinstated after one year, the 1,250,000 boys and girls now taking these courses will be deprived of ever taking up and finishing them. There is no economy in the proposition. It is a crime. There is no reason why this step should be taken, and there is every reason why it should be continued. If the appropriation is discontinued, it means only the sum of $8,500,000. We saved nearly that much yesterday by concurring in the Senate amendments to the Interior Department appropriation bill. The more ignorant a people are the easier it is to exploit them.

According to the press the President contends that his program for economy will save approximately $250,000,000. That amount would be in the Treasury of the United States at this very time had not the President extended a moratorium to the foreign nations last year and voted the Congress by telegraph—had he not by that means transferred $250,000,000 which the foreign nations owe us to the already overburdened taxpayers of America. The President could have economized there, but he did not. He seems to think more of the foreigners than he does of the American children. He might have economized by taking out $110,000,000 appropriated recently for mountain roads and trails in the national parks of this country. Thus it appears that our President thinks more of mountain roads and trails in our national parks than he does of the 1,250,000 school children who will be thrown out of the vocational schools in the event his recommendation is adopted. Then again, the President might have economized by taking out of the river and harbor bill $8,000,000 for new projects. The President could have economized again in sending in his Budget to this Congress, and all the preceding Congresses, which have been held during his administration. The President is responsible for the Budget. He appoints the officers of it and they make it up for him; and all of the appropriation bills which have been considered by this House at this session have been reduced from the amounts called for in his Budget, which shows that Congress has been more economical than the President. The President's Budget for the fiscal year 1931 exceeded the receipts for that year by $902,716,845.07. Was that good business? Why did he not say something about balancing the Budget sooner? Why did he permit that deficit I have just mentioned? The deficit today is the President's deficit. He has had his party in power and he has had the right of veto.

When the President sent us his message last December, together with his Budget for the calendar year 1933, he knew then that his recommendation of $3,996,672,450 exceeded the estimated receipts by more than a billion dollars. The Appropriations Committee of the House has already cut one hundred and fifty million from the President's Budget. There has not been a year under his administration when he could not have saved money to the taxpayers of this Nation by sending in a proper Budget. With these indisputable facts and others which I shall mention he is played up now as desiring economy. His Cabinet heads have not advocated economy when they have appeared before committees. It has been the President's duty to keep the Budget balanced. The President could have weeded out useless bureaus and employees by cutting out the money to sustain them, but it has taken three years for the thought to occur to him. How much longer are we going to use the Presidency for an economic kindergarten? He has, however, put the Rapidan on the map and made rabbits good to eat in August. He has permitted some officers in some of the departments to draw unreasonable salaries. This he continues to permit. He talks about duplication of the activities in some of the departments, and yet he has done nothing about it for the three years he has been in office. It is belated talk, and action seems to be more belated than the talk.

Just a few days ago the public press carried the item that—

A fleet of 11 new automobiles of various colors came to the White House—that the President had set the example of his recent plea to buy new cars.

This dispatch went on to say that—

The cars are of various makes, and, with the exception of three stately sedans with the White House seal on the door, are in blue, green, maroon, and brown.

The President promised us, during the campaign, two chickens in every pot and a car in every garage, but many of the garages are empty, while the President has 11—blue, green, maroon, and brown. But perhaps it takes that many cars to carry his friends to the Rapidan, where considerable of the public money has been spent to fix him a road. The President could have imitated the example of Speaker GARNER and thereby economized on the car item. Speaker GARNER refused to let the Public Treasury pay for a car for him. The President could have economized by appointing fewer commissions, which have done little more than draw their salaries. In mentioning the 11 automobiles, I am reminded of the fact that the President has been the most expensive one we have ever had in the White House. The total expense of the White House under President Wilson was $293,680 per annum. Under Mr. Hoover for 1932 it is $542,380. Out of this fund in the President's Budget 48 White House policemen are paid. One of these, a captain, receives $3,600 per annum; a lieutenant, $3,060; 3 sergeants, $2,750 each; and 43 privates are paid as provided by law. It seems to me that the President could have economized on policemen.

A Washington newspaper in a recent issue gave some description of the Commerce Department Building, which cost $17,500,000. The land upon which it stands is worth $30,000,000. It has an auditorium which seats 1,000 people and which is not needed. It is a monument of extravagance. They have a place where they raise fish, and then they send them down to the Rapidan for the President to catch, and sometimes they fail to put them in the right water. They have a private elevator for the exclusive use of Secretary Lamont. Its operation costs the Government in wages $6.35 per day. It is operated by one who draws $90 per month. It has a heavy bronze door and it is watched by a guard that draws $100 a month. Secretary Lamont must pass within 5 feet of three public elevators in order to reach his private elevator. This private elevator leads to the fifth floor of the 7-story building, where the Secretary's walnut-paneled and air-conditioned suite is located. This lift has no connection with the two other elevators assigned to this suite. It is understood the other two are to be used only by special guests. They are in the center of the vast public reception room, and their doors on this floor are finished in American walnut to match the walls of the vast room. Instead, the exclusive elevator is on the south side of the suite, allowing the Secretary the privilege of reaching his office through the south end of what the building contractors describe as a "secret passageway," which separates the offices proper from the reception room. And thus we see something about the extravagance of a building which rivals that of King Solomon.

Again we are reminded that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] was right when he proclaimed a few years ago that Mr. Hoover "is the most expensive luxury we have ever had." According to the New York Times, on April 1, 1920, Senator FESS, of Ohio, said:

The Republican Party can not accept an internationalist as its standard bearer. Hoover must be greatly embarrassed in seeking the nomination at the hands of the party he conspired against with the party's opponents to defeat in 1918. It will demand a leader whose Americanism is not in question and whose political views are not a matter of speculation.

In 1928 Senator WATSON, of Indiana, said:

We have come upon strange times. We used to nominate men because of what they stood for. Now we are asked to name voiceless candidates to lead us.

In March, 1932, Mrs. Dolly Gann, who, according to press reports, likes to sit at the head of the table, in making a speech in Chicago, said:

The Democrats will try to talk about depression, but there is no depression. It is over. They can not make it an issue. As a result of the constructive measures the President has taken, the great masses of the people have never discovered that they were in hard times and have gone about their employment without ever having found it necessary to limit in any degree their standard of living.

This reminds us of the late popular song:

"We're forever blowing bubbles,
Pretty bubbles in the air.
They fly so high,
Nearly reach the sky,
Then, like a dream, they fade and die.
Fortunes always hiding
We've looked everywhere.
We're forever blowing bubbles,
Pretty bubbles in the air."

In the campaign of 1928 at Palo Alto, Calif., Candidate Hoover said:

Unemployment in the sense of distress is widely disappearing. We in America to-day are nearer to the final triumph over poverty than ever before in the history of our land. The poorhouse is vanishing from among us. We have not yet reached the goal, but, given a chance to go forward with the policies of the last eight years, and we shall soon, with the help of God, be in sight of the day when poverty will be banished from this Nation. There is no guaranty against poverty equal to a job for every man. That is the primary purpose of the economic policies we advocate.

Of course, by this time the American people have realized just what that promise is worth.

One of the reasons why our national finances are in the condition which they are to-day is because of the fact that Andrew Mellon was a failure as Secretary of the Treasury. The man who said that he was the greatest Secretary since Alexander Hamilton was day-dreaming and deserves to be placed in a class with Ananias. The fact is that the gross national debt of the United States on July 1, 1920, was $24,297,918,411. The sinking-fund provision which went into effect on this date required this debt to be provided for in a certain way, but this provision did not prohibit the retirement of the debt in excess of the amount required by law if the surplus was available for such purpose.

It will be interesting to show the public debt retirements which were required by law and which were charged against ordinary receipts and also to show the excess of the actual debt retirements over and above this required amount. These data follow for the fiscal years 1921 to 1930, inclusive.

Fiscal year	Debt retirements required by law chargeable to ordinary receipts	Excess of actual debt retirements over retirements chargeable to ordinary receipts
1921	$422,113,000	$105,084,152
1922	422,694,600	591,374,244
1923	402,850,491	210,823,852
1924	457,999,750	640,894,626
1925	466,538,114	268,080,988
1926	487,376,051	385,601,522
1927	519,554,845	611,754,539
1928	540,255,020	767,358,710
1929	549,603,704	123,601,014
1930	553,883,603	192,005,845
Total	4,822,869,178	3,496,579,492

It will be observed from the above figures that during the 10-year period mentioned, the public debt was reduced by $4,822,869,178, as required by law, and by a further amount of $3,496,579,492 which was not required by law. This latter debt retirement has been paid almost entirely out of the surplus in the Treasury at the close of each fiscal year. There was a surplus every year for the 10 years from 1921 to 1930, inclusive, and the total amount of this surplus was $3,247,205,875. It can be computed from these facts that the public debt has been retired during the 10-year period mentioned at an average rate of 72 per cent greater than the rate required by the statute.

Therefore, with all of these facts and many more which I could mention, we can easily see why our country is in the condition that it is to-day. If the President had been economical, there would be no reason why this administration should want to discontinue the appropriation for vocational education. In a democracy the right of suffrage without universal education is but a reef of rocks in front of the helm of the ship of state, and as far as I am concerned I can not give my assent to any matter of legislation that would deprive 1,250,000 boys and girls of vocational education.

The wealth of the world isn't silver or gold,
Or the diamonds and rubies its caverns may hold,
Or the trees in its woods or the power in its pools;
The wealth of the world is to-day in its schools.
For nothing has value which lies in our ken
Without the high thinking of women and men.

PAYMENT OF THE ADJUSTED-COMPENSATION CERTIFICATES

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, in its issue of April 14 the Garber Sentinel, of Garber, Okla., published the following editorial upon the subject of the payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates, a subject that is now being considered by the House Ways and Means Committee:

DOLLAR PROTECTORS LET OUT SQUAWK AGAINST CURRENT INFLATION

What is the proposed soldier bonus bill and why the squawk?

It should be remembered that Congress passed the adjusted compensation bill seven years ago and asked the soldiers to wait until 1945 to get it. The ex-soldiers are not making a raid upon the Treasury Department. The money has been voted and is being collected annually to meet the obligation when it becomes due.

There are several proposals under consideration in the committee room, but none have been reported to the floor of the House. The one which seems likely to be presented provides for Government bonds in the amount of $2,500,000,000 to be delivered to the Federal reserve banks, which are in turn to issue Federal reserve bank notes for their full face value. These notes are to be paid to the soldiers. They will circulate as money, because they are nothing other than good old United States currency. They are to be retired by 1945 out of the funds set aside and accumulating over the 20-year period.

A rather simple program and one that will not cost the taxpayer one penny in addition to what he is being and will be taxed to meet the obligation in 1945.

Why the squawk? Simply this: It will inflate currency and lower the value of the dollar. Now, let's begin at the beginning and trace the movement that has set a high price on the dollar.

In 1921 our international bankers came into existence. Until that time they were just ordinary bankers, but the world had been made safe for democracy, whatever that is, and it seemed to be an opportune time to do a banking business on a large scale. How they arrived at the conclusion no one knows, but they decided that there was too much money in the hands of the American people. Money was too cheap. Everybody had it. There was no way to distinguish the rich from the poor. A program of restricting credits, calling in loans, and retiring currency was launched and poor Uncle Sam fell for it like a ton of brick, turning the Federal reserve system over to Wall Street and moving the money capital from Washington back to New York City.

The northern farmer, with his high-priced land, went broke. Then the Texas cattleman and one by one every farming community woke up to the distressing fact that they didn't have anything to use for money. There has been no prosperity in agriculture since that time, although 1929 was a great year and marks the peak of what is said to be a wonderful era.

In 1921 the per capita currency circulation was about $59. Now, it is $36. That means that what was bought for $59 in 1921 must sell now for $36.

A new standard has been set for the dollar. It is worth 2 bushels of wheat f. o. b. Garber, plus the old freight rate and the recent 15 per cent hike. It is worth one day of common labor and about 12½ dozen eggs. Partly because there is an oversupply of wheat, labor, and eggs, but more on account of there being an undersupply of money.

Get this. Too much wheat means cheap wheat. Too much money means cheap money. If the supply of wheat increases, the price goes down. If the supply decreases, up goes the price. That economic law will work if the money manipulators will leave the value of the dollar alone. However, if the production of wheat remains the same and the supply of money is decreased, the price of wheat will drop for the very simple reason that there is more wheat than there is money. In other words, the value of the dollar is increased because the number is decreased. The more it is worth the more wheat it will buy. And by wheat we mean commodities in general.

Uncle Sam has wasted a half billion dollars trying to tell the farmers that there is an overproduction of farm products, but not one thin dime to warn the dollar protectors that there is an undersupply of money. He gives advice to the farmers and takes it from Wall Street.

That is where you get the squawk on the bonus bill. The $23 per capita deflation of currency since 1921 amounts to $2,700,000,000. If the Government now puts back into circulation this $2,500,000,000 through the bonus proposal, it will put the volume of currency back to the level of prosperous times and the process of deflation will be reversed.

It will raise the general commodity price level, because there will be almost $2 where there is $1 now. The dollar will decline about 40 per cent.

Thus the controversy really lies between those who have cornered the dollar and those who are forced to sell 30-cent wheat, dollar-a-day labor, and 8-cent eggs to get a high-priced dollar.

What does the latter care about the gold standard, all the banking wisdom of Carter Glass or the millionaire warnings of Secretary Mills? He wants a dollar that isn't worth any more to-day than it was when he planned his crop, or when he borrowed it. He wants his dollar to remain constant.

It would better suit the big bankers, if there is any such a thing as a big banker, for the Government to sell the bonds outright, taking the money out of circulation by the sale and putting it back through payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates. There would be no new money. The volume of currency would remain the same and the high value of the dollar maintained.

It will be a great battle. The boys may get their pay. We doubt it. If they do, it will be after they have whipped organized finance, big business, big bankers, and every other "big" which have bigged the country to death. And believe you us, that is some job!

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 19, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

TUESDAY, APRIL 19, 1932

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Savior of the World, who by Thy death hast destroyed death and by Thy rising to life again hast restored to us everlasting life; in this hour of deep bereavement be Thou our all in all, that amid these wild waters of the world we may be rescued by Thy assurance, that in the light of Thy countenance despondency may flee away.

Enable us to summon now the great resources of the soul—memory, imagination, faith, hope, love—that we may live even more constantly in the companionship of the noble spirit of him whom Thou hast called to be at rest with Thee. Deal tenderly, O Christ, with the dear ones whose grief and poignant sorrow we are permitted to share; enfold them in Thy loving arms, comfort them with the sense of Thy indwelling, give to them that peace which passeth understanding.

And as we tread the aisles of earth, these homely paths of common life, make us to be as those who, having put on the immortal body, now see the dear familiar things through the larger other eyes of the redeemed, that we may find that garden of the soul where hedges burst into bloom at the fall of an approaching shadow, where Thou dost walk with flowers springing up beneath Thy wounded feet.

There like an Eden blossoming in gladness,
Bloom the fair flowers the earth too rudely prest.
Come unto Me all ye who droop in sadness,
Come unto Me and I will give you rest.

Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. FESS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, at the adjournment yesterday I had the floor and of course yielded to circumstances. It was the general understanding that I should proceed this morning, but I shall be glad to yield at this time for routine morning business.

Mr. FESS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

I also wish to announce that the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] is necessarily detained from the Senate by illness.

I also desire to announce that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is necessarily detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR HARRIS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] I present a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 202) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of 15 Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. HARRIS, which shall take place in the Senate Chamber at 11 o'clock a. m. on Wednesday, April 20, 1932, and that the Senate attend the same.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect his remains be removed from Washington to Cedartown, Ga., for burial in charge of the Sergeant at Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect; and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives, transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased, and invite the House of Representatives to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the diplomatic corps (through the Secretary of State), the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber.

Resolved, That at the conclusion of the services in the Senate Chamber the Senate stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday, April 21, 1932.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair names as the committee provided for under the second resolution the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN], the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], and the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it shall adjourn until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, that order will be entered.

GATES AT INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY, PORT OF SAN YSIDRO, CALIF. (S. DOC. NO. 83)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting draft of a proposed provision pertaining to an item for the Treasury Department, making immediately available an appropriation of not to exceed $6,000 for the construction of gates at the international boundary across the highway at the port of San Ysidro, Calif., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF THE NATIONAL SURETY CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, his report and recommendation concerning the claim of the National Surety Co. against the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Joint resolution, agreed to by the General Assembly of Virginia, memorializing Congress to repeal the recapture provisions of the transportation act of 1920

Whereas the transportation act of 1920 provides that if in any one year the net railway operating income of a railroad exceed 6 per cent of the value of the railroad property, such railroad must pay one-half of such excess to the Interstate Commerce Commission, constituting a fund which does not go into the General Treasury of the Government, nor can it be returned to shippers to reduce the rate burden; and

Whereas this recapture provision has been in effect for 12 years, and experience has demonstrated that it is unworkable, and it has already cost the Government $37,000,000, and the railroads $136,000,000, a total of $173,000,000, and the principles of valuation have not yet been determined by the United States Supreme Court; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission is claiming that under the recapture provisions of this act some 200 railroads owe to this fund at the present time about $378,000,000, of which amount only about $13,000,000 has been paid, and none of this has the Interstate Commerce Commission been able to use for any purpose; and

Whereas the amount finally found to be due depends upon what constitutes the value of railroad property, which is a matter of great dispute, and is leading to expensive litigation; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission, the State Corporation Commission of Virginia, and the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, recognizing the unworkability and unfairness of the recapture provisions of the Federal transportation act of 1920, have indorsed the repeal of these provisions; and

Whereas the railroads, which are generally now barely earning operating expenses and some in receiverships, have no reserve funds from which to pay these large amounts into the recapture fund to meet the demands of the Government, and if called upon to pay this sum the result would be to intensify the existing depression and render their securities even more unstable than they are at present: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Virginia (the House of Delegates concurring therein), That the President of the United States and the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the present Congress be memorialized to enact legislation repealing the recapture provisions of the transportation act of 1920 ab initio, and returning the sum of such recapture fund already collected from the railroads to the contributors thereto; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the present Congress and to each Senator and Representative therein from the State of Virginia.

Agreed to by the senate, February 18, 1932.

O. V. HAUGE,
Clerk of the Senate.

Agreed to by the house of delegates, February 25, 1932.

JNO. W. WILLIAMS,
Clerk of the House of Delegates.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Resolution No. 19

Whereas Michigan has over 150,000 World War veterans who served in the ranks for $30 per month, out of which was taken $15 for compulsory allotment, about $7 for workingmen's war-time insurance, and $5 for Liberty bonds, leaving the soldier about 10 cents per day for the barber, laundry, and the like necessities, while relief agencies like the Salvation Army, Knights of Columbus, Young Men's Christian Association, and the like supplied his doughnuts and smokes, while young men of the same age found physically unfit to serve in our Army or Navy in time of war were earning an average of about $200 per month, with workingmen's compensation given free at home; and

Whereas the late-lamented Joseph W. Fordney, of Saginaw, then chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in Congress, after six years of effort to overcome the opposition of President Wilson, President Harding, and President Coolidge, managed finally by a very narrow margin to pass the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill over the last veto, providing for payment of $1 per day for homeland training and $1.25 for overseas fighting service per day, payable at death or in 20 years, with high interest charges for loans permitted on these adjusted-pay certificates; and

Whereas Congress in 1931 changed the law to permit loans up to 50 per cent of the face value of these service certificates at such a high rate of interest that little would be left due of the balance at death, or in 1945, which loans, however, did put a billion dollars into immediate circulation for debts due, for taxes and rents, for shoes and clothing, for better food and the like, and kept hundreds of thousands of these World War veterans from charity and doles the past year; and

Whereas the Michigan State Convention of the American Legion at Pontiac, July 1 to 4, 1931, voted in favor of immediate payment of this adjusted compensation in order to keep these veterans and their families from charity and the dole, to provide money for paying taxes and rent, buy clothing and shoes, pay accumulated debts, provide better food and the like, thereby putting several billion dollars into immediate circulation for stimulating business, nation-wide; and

Whereas our national financiers found billions of dollars for foreign countries' rehabilitation since the close of the war, found other billions of dollars for financial and industrial rehabilitation here at home from 1919 to 1931, while only France of all our Allies remains on the gold standard in this hour, which foreign business stability encourages us to believe that the richest nation in all the world might in this hour find the credits and means for immediate payment of this adjusted compensation without injustice or detriment to any, and actually create new buying power and business stimulation, nation-wide: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urge Congress forthwith to do all in its power to provide the means for immediate payment of this long-past-due adjusted compensation to the enlisted men among our World War veterans and for the much-needed help in time of need for their families and dependents; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the chairmen of the Committees on Appropriations and Ways and Means of the United States Senate and House of Representatives and to the Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives from Michigan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

House Resolution 9, memorializing Congress on the passage of a tariff on copper

Whereas the Congress of the United States has under consideration a tariff on copper; and

Whereas the copper industry of the State of Michigan is one of our important natural-resource industries; and

Whereas the copper industry of the State of Michigan would greatly benefit from a tariff on copper, and such a tariff on copper would aid in securing to this State industry an opportunity to stabilize its market in the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Michigan, That the House of Representatives of the State of Michigan place itself on record in the urgent request that Congress give favorable consideration to the subject of a tariff on copper; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States and to each of the Michigan Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

FRED R. WING,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Propeller Club of the United States, Port of Pittsburgh, Pa., favoring the passage of House bill 11207, providing for the consolidation of the Bureau of Navigation and the Steamboat Inspection Service, provided that the latter service be left in its present state, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PROPOSED BOND ISSUE FOR PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram which I have just received, and which I ask may be read and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 17, 1932.

Senator WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.:

The congregation of St. Simeon's Episcopal Church, One hundred and sixty-fifth Street, New York, unanimously passed the following resolution at the close of the rector's sermon, Sunday, April 17:

"Resolved, That we urge upon our President and Federal Government the immediate necessity of a bond issue for public works to give employment to the hundreds of thousands of our citizens who are unemployed through no fault of their own. There have been several cases of actual deaths from starvation and thousands are suffering from malnutrition. The local charities can not cope with the extraordinary situation and present funds are almost exhausted. If we could give millions for starving Russian children, as well as Chinese, in God's name why not do something for our own citizens?"

REV. JOSEPH DODSHON,
Rector of St. Simeon's Church, New York.

RESTORATION AND MAINTENANCE OF PURCHASING POWER OF THE DOLLAR

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill to restore and maintain the average purchasing power of the dollar by the expansion and contraction of credits and currency, and for other purposes.

I should like to say, Mr. President, that I have read very carefully the hearings before the subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives, presided over by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, and I am impressed with the very convincing statements made at those hearings by the former Senator from Oklahoma, Robert L. Owen, by Doctor Fisher, Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, Mr. McFADDEN, and others. So I am prompted to introduce this bill defining the national policy with reference to the subject of the expansion of credit for the purpose of stabilizing the dollar and regulating the purchasing power of the dollar based on the price of commodities. You will fix the commodity values when you fix the dollar as measured by commodities and commodities as measured by the dollar.

The bill provides for the means and methods of carrying that policy into effect. It imposes upon certain agencies and officials of the Government certain duties and makes mandatory the exercise of powers which perhaps they have had more or less in the past but have not used. I think, Mr. President, that the hearings demonstrate that there has been a survey of some 550 commodities measured one by one for 365 days a year through the years 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, 1928, and 1929. I have provided in the bill for the standard index of 1926 as an average price level. I think it well now to define a national policy with reference to this subject and to make it the duty of certain agencies of the Federal Government to carry that policy into effect. The dollar ought to be measured by its purchasing power in commodities. I should like to have this bill printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 4429) to restore and maintain the average purchasing power of the dollar by the expansion and contraction of credits and currency, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the average purchasing power of the dollar as ascertained by the Department of Labor in the wholesale commodity markets for the year 1926 shall be restored and maintained by the expansion and contraction of credits and currency through the powers of the United States and its agencies.

SEC. 2. The Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby charged with the duty of making effective this policy.

SEC. 3. To enable the Federal reserve banks to achieve this end they are hereby given the right to receive, and the Federal reserve agents are directed to deliver, Federal reserve notes at par for United States obligations deposited as security therefor.

LANDS AT POINT SAN JOSE MILITARY RESERVATION, CALIF.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco. I ask that I may make a brief explanatory statement concerning the bill, and that the bill itself may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from California is granted.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I have introduced a bill to restore to the city and county of San Francisco a 50-acre strip of land—Point San Jose—seized by the Army in 1863 for an emergency which never materialized. The military occupancy of this land now blocks the growth of the city, cuts off the use of its park and thoroughfares, and deprives it of much-needed tax money. Behind this prosaic statement lies interesting history, a record that reflects no credit on our Federal Government.

Point San Jose, now in the heart of San Francisco, slopes to the waters of the Golden Gate—peaceful waters now, but in 1863 Washington watched that blue expanse with grave anxiety. The Civil War was under way. England was in an ugly mood. At any time, it was feared, hostile ships, privateers, might effect entrance into San Francisco's inner harbor and seize the city and the new and comparatively defenseless State of California. Anticipating such action, the War Department, although it had a presidio of 1,540 acres 1½ miles away and directly fronting the Golden Gate, took over as an emergency measure 100 acres on Point San Jose inside the gate and fortified them.

This was regular war-time military procedure. But to certain dispossessed families it meant tragedy. On that lovely "suburban" point various people had bought land from San Francisco and built homes. Notable among them was Gen. John C. Frémont, who had in the forties rendered distinguished service in wresting California from Mexico and bringing it into the Union. This General Frémont did after five expeditions, involving almost incredible hardship and danger, during which he and his troops starved, fought off Indian raids, were lost for months in the Sierra snows, but with heroic courage and splendid loyalty carried our flag westward. With the State of California safely in the Union, he now sought to establish a home where he and his family might find well-deserved rest. Accordingly he bought land on Point San Jose and built a home at a cost of $80,000. Hardly was this home completed when the army seized the entire tract, razed the beautiful new building, and placed batteries in its place. Never again did General Frémont see his home, nor did he nor his heirs ever receive a cent of compensation. During his last years he who had so valiantly served his country lived in need. He died a poor and embittered man. The guns which had displaced his home never fired a shot.

To-day the empty battery pits are filled with wild flowers. The commanding general lives in the one house which was not razed at the time of seizure. All around, the city has expanded into an exclusive residential section, thus isolating Point San Jose still more completely from the regular military reservation.

Thus, Point San Jose serves no useful Federal purpose. It is a burden and a waste. And the city of San Francisco is petitioning for relief, for the return to it of the land seized by the Federal Government in 1863 as a military necessity.

My bill has the twofold purpose—economy for the Nation and the city of San Francisco, and belated recognition of an obligation to one of America's great benefactors.

No valid argument can be advanced for maintaining this occupancy. Even if an emergency should arise, modern conditions of warfare make Point San Jose impractical for defense purposes. Any uses which it serves could be as well, if not better, served in the presidio, which is 1½ miles distant and has approximately 1,000 unused acres of available land.

The growth of a great city is being seriously checked by this occupancy and the city is being deprived of much needed tax money. Governor Rolph, both during the time when he was mayor of San Francisco and at present, has earnestly promoted efforts to regain the land. The supervisors of San Francisco and the State Legislature of California have passed resolutions memorializing Congress for its return.

Not only do they desire use of the money and lands now tied up by military occupancy, but they have a feeling, which is shared by all of California, that such occupancy is shameful ingratitude to a great benefactor.

The unfairness of the present position is emphasized by the fact that half of the land originally seized was restored by act of Congress to those who had bought it from the city. But these remaining acres involved in my bill—the legal status of which was identical with that of the restored lands—are still held by the Federal Government.

I invite the attention of Senators to a letter addressed to me by the honored Governor of California, which reads as follows:

SACRAMENTO, CALIF., January 20, 1932.

Hon. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SHORTRIDGE: The city of San Francisco is vitally interested in a bill which it is proposed to introduce at the present session of Congress to eliminate Fort Mason from a military establishment and return the land held therein by the Government to the city and county of San Francisco and to the Fremont heirs.

A few years ago the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco adopted a resolution urging the restoring of this land, and the California Legislature also memorialized Congress on this subject.

It is my belief that Fort Mason should be eliminated as an unnecessary military fort, and it is hoped that you will do everything possible to assist in this respect.

It is believed that in view of the expense of maintenance of the old buildings on the grounds of said fort that there can be no objections at this time to returning the land to the city and county of San Francisco and the Fremont heirs.

With my compliments and every good wish,

Very sincerely yours,

JAMES ROLPH, Jr.,
Governor of California.

The bill (S. 4430) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Miliary Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of the right and title of the United States to that part of the lands known as Point San Jose Military Reservation, in the city and county of San Francisco, Calif., which was occupied under order of the Secretary of War in 1863 for emergency military purposes, and which was not relinquished and granted under the act entitled "An act to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco," approved July 1, 1870, be, and the same are hereby, relinquished and granted to the said city and county and its successors for the uses and purposes as follows: First, to maintain the park, known as Alcatraz Square, as laid out upon the official map of the city of San Francisco, and now included within these lands; second, to maintain all streets as were laid out and delineated on the official map of the city and county of San Francisco at the time of the enactment of the said act; third, the said city and county to take in trust the remainder of said lands, to grant and convey the same to the parties severally (and if deceased, to the respective heirs, successors, and assigns of such parties) who were deprived thereof by the United States military authorities or were deprived thereof by intruders or trespassers against whom possession may be recovered by legal process; fourth, to have and to hold all the residue, if any, of said lands for the use and benefit of said city and county.

Be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are, hereby declared inapplicable to the lands herein above granted.

This act shall take effect immediately.

REVENUE AND TAXATION—AMENDMENTS

Mr. WATSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 234, line 4, after the word "instruments" and before the parenthesis, insert "or silver-plated flat tableware."

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. TRAMMELL jointly submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 233, line 2, strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add the following: "Upon phosphate rock (phosphorites, collophane, and apatites) one-tenth of 1 cent per pound.

INVESTIGATION OF CONSERVATION OF WILD ANIMAL LIFE—EXPENSES

Mr. WALCOTT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 203), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the special committee directed by Senate Resolution 246, agreed to April 17, 1930, to investigate appropriate methods for the replacement and conservation of wild animal life, hereby is authorized to expend in furtherance of such purposes $10,000 in addition to the amount heretofore authorized.

MARY B. LEE

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I request permission to withdraw all papers filed in support of the bill (S. 1297) granting a pension to Mary B. Lee, introduced by me on December 10, 1931. The Committee on Pensions declined to consider the bill favorably, and Mrs. Lee desires the return of the evidence submitted by her.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Without objection, leave is granted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the resolutions of the House adopted as a tribute to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS, late a Senator from the State of Georgia, and providing for a committee of 15 Members to be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral.

The message announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 2682. An act to amend section 5 of the Criminal Code; and

S. 3086. An act relating to the construction of a Federal building at Ponca City, Okla.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 1047. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Historical Society of Montana, for preservation and exhibition, the silver service which was in use on the gunboat No. 9, Helena; and

S. 3570. An act to amend the act entitled "An act confirming in States and Territories title to land granted by the United States in the aid of common or public schools," approved January 25, 1927.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8397) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 472. An act to authorize business leases of unallotted Indian land;

H. R. 6184. An act for the improvement of the inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.;

H. R. 7521. An act to provide a new Code of Civil Procedure for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing Code of Civil Procedure;

H. R. 8877. An act to clarify the application of the contract-labor provisions of the immigration laws to actors;

H. R. 8897. An act to authorize compacts or agreements between States relating to service of process and production of witnesses in criminal cases;

H. R. 9591. An act to extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead entrymen;

H. R. 9877. An act to repeal obsolete sections of the Revised Statutes omitted from the United States Code;

H. R. 9970. An act to add certain land to the Crater Lake National Park in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes;

H. R. 10277. An act to transfer Lincoln County from the Columbia division to the Winchester division of the middle Tennessee judicial district;

H. R. 10494. An act to provide a postage charge on notices to publishers regarding undeliverable second-class matter;

H. R. 10600. An act to exempt from the quota husbands of American citizens;

H. R. 10744. An act to authorize the issuance of patents for certain lands in the State of Colorado to certain persons;

H. J. Res. 138. Joint resolution for the relief of the State of Idaho; and

H. J. Res. 305. Joint resolution for the improvement of Meridian Hill Park.

ST. PAUL SPEECH OF GOVERNOR ROOSEVELT, OF NEW YORK

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, last night at St. Paul, Minn., Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt made a great speech. That speech, I predict, will become historic in the campaign. In that discussion he rose above all petty bickerings with any other man, and presented a declaration of policies of such high purpose and such exalted vision that I think it will command the attention of the people of the entire country. I want to read just one paragraph—the central thought of that address:

> I am pleading for a policy broad enough to include every part of our economic structure, a policy that seeks to help all simultaneously, that shows an understanding of the fact that there are millions of our people who can not be helped by merely helping their employers, because they are not employees in the strict sense of the word—the farmers, the small business man, the professional people.
> Help for them means a greater consumption, not of luxuries but of the necessities of life, and this means more factory wheels turning in the cities, more employment for the strictly industrial population, for the railroad workers, and for the distributors. That kind of buying power makes itself felt more quickly than any other. * * *
> I plead not for class control, but for a true concert of interests.

His presentation of the power issue shows that he proposes to be fair to all interests affected, but he is determined that public control shall be effective in the interests of the people who buy and use power rather than in the interests of those who would use our natural resources to exploit the people. He summed up his power policy in these words:

> Electricity is a great unifying interest, doing more to make us a united Nation than any other material factor. To control it for the common good requires national thinking by a national party.

Mr. Roosevelt showed that his proposals are based upon the same principles enunciated by Jefferson and applied by Jackson, Lincoln, and Wilson. He closed his address by saying:

> Jefferson labored for a widespread unity of thought, capable of directing united action, based on a fair and just unity of interest. Jefferson labored to bring the scattered farmers, the workers, the business men into a participation of national affairs. This was his purpose and this is the principle upon which the party he founded was based. Let his party continue to dedicate itself to that great purpose. Let it present itself as a party of unity to carry out the purpose of social and economic unity throughout the Nation.
> I say with Lincoln, "Having thus chosen our course, without guile and with pure purpose, let us renew our trust in God and go forward without fear and with manly hearts."

Mr. President, I ask that the speech of Governor Roosevelt in its entirety may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The speech referred to is as follows:

> What is the real reason that Jefferson Day dinners are being given throughout the length and breadth of the land a century and a quarter after Thomas Jefferson was at the height of his career?
> No doubt it is in part because Democrats use the opportunity of the anniversary to assemble in furtherance of party plans and for the advancement of candidacies, but, in a larger sense, they are held to give renewed allegiance to the foundation principles of which Jefferson was the chief builder and on which still rests the social and political structure of the Republic.
> It is not necessary for us in any way to discredit the great financial genius of an Alexander Hamilton or the school of thought of the early Federalist to point out that they were frank in their belief that certain sections of the Nation and certain individuals within those sections were more fitted than others to conduct government.
> The Federalists, as Woodrow Wilson so wisely put it, were a group "possessed of unity and informed by a conscious solidarity of interest."
> It was the purpose of Jefferson to teach the country that the solidarity of Federalism was only a partial one, that it represented only a minority of the people, and that to build a great nation the interests of all groups in every part must be considered; that only in a large, national unity could real security be found.
> The whole life and all of the methods of Jefferson were an exemplification of this fundamental. He has been called a politician because he devoted years to the building of a political party. But this labor was in itself a definite and practical act, aimed at the unification of all parts of the country in support of common principles.
> NEED FOR THE PARTY SYSTEM
> When people carelessly or snobbishly deride political parties, they overlook the fact that the party system of government is one of the greatest methods of unification and of teaching people to think in common terms.
> We have had in our own history three men who chiefly stand out for the universality of their interest and of their knowledge—Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, and Theodore Roosevelt. All three knew at first hand every cross current of national and of international life. All three were possessed of a profound culture in the best sense of the word, and yet all three understood the yearnings and the lack of opportunity—the hopes and fears of millions of their fellow beings. All true culture finally comes down to an appreciation of just that.
> And of the three, Jefferson was in many ways the deepest student—the one with the most inquiring and diversified intellect, and above all, the one who at all times looked the furthest into the future, examining the ultimate effects on humanity of the actions of the present.
> Jefferson's methods were wholly illustrative of this purpose of government based on a universality of interest. I can picture the weeks on horseback, when he was traveling into the different States of the Union, slowly and laboriously accumulating an understanding of the people of his country. He was drinking in the needs of the people in every walk of life. He was one of the first to recognize the community of interest between the shipowner in New York and the boatman on the upper reaches of the Ohio.
> JEFFERSON A CONCILIATOR
> He was one of the first to reconcile the problems of the South with those of the North. He was one of the first to preach the interdependence of town and country, and he was one of the first to bring to the conservatism of leaders of the eastern seaboard the hopes and aspirations of the pioneer.

He was willing to stake his fortunes on the stroke of a pen which purchased the imperial domain that trebled the size of the Nation overnight. He was no local American; he was no little American.

Jefferson was so big in mind and in spirit that he knew the average man would understand when he said, "I shall often go wrong through defective judgment, and when right, I shall often be thought wrong by those whose positions will not command a view of the whole ground. I ask your support against the errors of others who may condemn what they would not condemn if seen in all its parts." His, after all, was the essential point of view that has been held by our truly great leaders in every generation.

Andrew Jackson had it. I like his blunt statement that "The spirit of equity requires that the great interests of agriculture, commerce, and manufacturers should be equally favored."

Abraham Lincoln had it. He could say to-day, as he said in 1861: "Physically speaking, we can not separate. We can not remove our respective sections from each other nor build an impassable wall between them. A husband and wife may be divorced, and go out of the presence and beyond the reach of each other. But the different parts of our country can not do this. They can not but remain face to face."

QUOTES FROM THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Theodore Roosevelt brought home to us once more the fundamental point of view when he said:

"The kind of business prosperity that blunts the standard of honor, that puts an inordinate value on mere wealth, that makes a man ruthless and conscienceless in trade, and weak and cowardly in citizenship, is not a good thing at all, but a very bad thing for the Nation. This Government stands for manhood first and for business only as an adjunct of manhood."

In the past the most direful among the influences which have brought about the downfall of republics has ever been the growth of the class spirit, the growth of the spirit which tends to make a man subordinate the welfare of the public as a whole to the welfare of the particular class to which he belongs, the substitution of loyalty to a class for loyalty to the Nation. This inevitably brings about a tendency to treat each man not on his merits as an individual but on his position as belonging to a certain class in the community.

If we substitute for the standard of personal judgment which treats each man according to his merits another standard in accordance with which all men of one class are favored and all men of another class discriminated against, we shall do irreparable damage to the body politic. This Government is not and never shall be governed by a plutocracy. This Government is not and never shall be government by mob.

It is to this national community of interest that we should dedicate ourselves to-night. If that be treason, make the most of it.

SIZE CREATES BIG PROBLEM

The great size of the country enlarged by Jefferson's Louisiana Purchase offers vast advantages for those who live in it. But it imposes grave problems upon those who are vested with its direction and control. In normal times it is likely to live in the isolation of sectionalism, it becomes a loose association of communities, with little common thought and little realization of mutual independence.

This reminds me of what Chesterton keenly remarked concerning the members of the British Empire. They are, he says, like the passengers in an omnibus—they get to know each other only in case of an accident.

It is only in a crisis that we look to our common concern.

The stress of a vast emergency rudely wakes us all from our local concerns and turns us to wider concerns. Then for the first time we look to a larger measure of cooperation, a more exact measuring of our resources, and, what is more important, a more imaginative and purposeful planning.

Two weeks ago I said that we were facing an emergency to-day more grave than that of war. This I repeat to-night.

That a great fear has swept the country few can doubt. Normal times lull us into complacency, we become lazy and contented. Then with the coming of economic stress we feel the disturbing hand of fear. This fear spreads to the entire country and with more or less unity we turn to our common Government at Washington.

If you live in a house that has been shaken by an earthquake of national proportions and the foundation has cracked and the roof leaks, it is right to mend the roof, but at the same time your house will not be safe until you have repaired the foundation as well. I want the house to stand through all the years to come as well as to keep the rain out of the top story.

CALLS FOR A POLICY TO HELP ALL

I am pleading for a policy broad enough to include every part of our economic structure, a policy that seeks to help all simultaneously, that shows an understanding of the fact that there are millions of our people who can not be helped by merely helping their employers, because they are not employees in the strict sense of the word—the farmers, the small business man, the professional people.

Help for them means a greater consumption not of luxuries but of the necessities of life, and this means more factory wheels turning in the cities, more employment for the strictly industrial population, for the railroad workers, and for the distributors. That kind of buying power makes itself felt more quickly than any other.

Not only among the sections of this country but among its economic units and the various groups in these units there must be common participation, planned on the basis of a shared common life, the low as well as the high. In much of our present plans there is too much disposition to mistake the part for the whole, the head for the body. I plead not for class control but for a true concert of interests.

The plans we make for this emergency, if we plan wisely and rest our structure upon a base sufficiently broad, will show the way to a more permanent safeguarding of our social and economic life. I favor economic planning, not for this period alone but for our needs for a long time to come.

AS TO POWER REGULATION

Take the example of electricity, a modern commodity that either is or ought to be in every home, a commodity that, it is said, actually turns the wheels of 65 per cent of our industries.

It is a simple, clear fact that for centuries the principle of the regulation of public utilities has been a component part of the common law, and that concentrated in its simplest terms this control has involved two very simple mandates: First, that the service itself should be adequate to the needs of the public; and secondly, that the price charged should be reasonable to the extent that it provides a reasonable return on the actual cash wisely and necessarily invested in the property.

I have stated the principle and the purpose of the principle which underlie government regulation of public utilities. Every court has recognized the principle, and it is only in the application of the principle that we have gone astray. The great problem to-day is how we shall return to a simple, clear-cut carrying out of the purpose of the common law.

Let me illustrate by telling you simply and briefly the story of the long fight which I have had in the State of New York for making available for the use of the public of the State a million and one-quarter horsepower provided by nature and capable of development at an exceedingly low price on the St. Lawrence River.

There is no doubt that because the people of the State have always owned the bed of the St. Lawrence River out to the international boundary, the people of the State and no private corporations have the definite right to build the necessary dam or dams to develop the power.

HOLD OF STATE STRENGTHENED

Twenty-five years ago, when the people of the State were little aware of their great heritage, a legislature attempted to alienate this great possession to the Aluminum Co. of America. This was happily frustrated, and then began a 20-year struggle to prevent a new alienation of this great possession under the guise of a lease running for 50 years or more.

In this contest my distinguished predecessor, Governor Smith, was happily able to prevent the control from passing out of the hands of the State. When I took office, I undertook at once a definite plan for the development of this great power, and I laid down a very definite application of the principle to which I have alluded.

In order to be absolutely certain that the actual possession of the power itself should never be alienated from the people, I insisted that the actual dam or dams and the actual power houses should be constructed by a public authority and always remain in the physical possession of that authority.

Then came the question of how and under what terms this power should be distributed to the actual consuming public; I laid down the principle that this task of transmission and of distribution should be offered in the first instance to private capital and private management, but under very definite terms. These terms were intended to carry out the purpose of getting the electricity into the houses of the people at the lowest reasonable price.

My very definite plan has been to invite private capital to contract with the State to do this transmitting and distribution on these entirely proper and reasonable terms. But at that point it became necessary to provide an alternative in the event that private capital was unwilling to undertake transmission and distribution on terms involving only a reasonable profit to that private capital.

I said in my message to the legislature at that time: "Are the business men of this State willing to transmit and distribute this latent water power on a fair return on their investment? If they are satisfied, here is their opportunity. If not, then the State may have to go into the transmission business itself."

HOLDS MERGERS TOO LARGE

That is the obvious development of any sound government control over private utilities—that government itself should not engage in the utility business if it can find private initiative and private capital willing to undertake the business for a reasonable and fair return on the capital which it is necessary and wise to invest in the project—and, on the other hand, if government is not able to find private individuals or corporations willing to do this, then government must step in and do it itself.

If, during this past generation, that fundamental had been observed by our courts, by all of our public-service commissions, by our legislatures, there would be no problem of the control of utilities to-day. It is an unfortunate fact, which is not denied by the leading bankers or the leading utility men themselves, that largely through the building up of a series of great merger and a series of great holding companies the capital structure, especially in the case of the electric utilities, has been allowed to expand to an extent far beyond the actual wise and necessary cash investment.

It is a simple fact that in thousands of cases throughout the United States electric utility companies have sought, and in many instances have succeeded, in obtaining permission to charge rates which will bring an unnecessarily large return, not on the cash investment, but on a definite inflation of capital.

I am putting this case very calmly and conservatively. It could be put much more forcibly, and it would be easy to make accusations against many of the great utility companies now operating in this country.

ELECTRICITY TOO HIGH, HE SAYS

Recrimination, however, is not particularly useful—it is more useful to state the principles than go back for centuries in such a way that the people of this country will understand those principles and will understand how, in losing sight of them, we ourselves the victims, the net result of our blindness, of our failure to regulate, and of our failure to say that if private capital will not operate for a reasonable profit, Government will have to operate itself—that is, in most places of the United States the householder and the farmers and the small business men are paying vastly more for that very necessary part of our modern life—electricity—than they have any right to be paying.

It is neither radical nor a violation of any principles of sound business for me to state in definite terms that public servants with a proper regard for the interests of the people themselves must exert every effort to restore the fundamentals of public control. And this applies not only in every State capital but also in the control by the National Government over those great sources of power which fall under the jurisdiction of the National Government.

Those who have read the papers these past few days have seen an example of the vast national scope of the public-utility structure. Interrelated companies stretch into literally dozens of States. Investors, customers, and management constitute a national community of interest of enormous importance. I wonder if it is not true that even those far in the upper reaches of such structure would not themselves recognize the soundness of national public protection of all the associated factors in this structure.

A very deep study over many years makes it clearer to me with every passing day that where a public service like the transmission of electricity passes beyond State lines and becomes interstate in its actual operation, in such a case the control can not effectively be maintained by States alone, or through agreements between neighboring States. That problem is national in its scope and can be solved only by the firm establishment of national control.

Electricity is a great unifying interest, doing more to make us a united nation than any other material factor. To control it for the common good requires national thinking by a national party.

HOLDS TARIFF CAUSES TRADE LOSS

The same broad national view must direct our dealings with the tariff. The Republican administration has greatly intensified the depression by its tariff policy. The Hawley-Smoot tariff law of 1930 was a drastic revision of the tariff upward.

The existing tariff levels were already high enough to protect American industries which needed protection. The increases which the Hawley-Smoot bill made were not based on any scientific analysis of tariffs. The increases were political favors. The consequences of the Hawley-Smoot bill have been tremendous, both directly and indirectly.

Directly, American foreign trade has been steadily dwindling. Indirectly, the high schedules of the Hawley-Smoot bill caused European nations to raise their own tariff walls, and these walls were raised not only against us but against each other.

The result has been that the value of goods exchanged internationally in the last year or so has been less than 50 per cent of what it was three or four years ago. When the Hawley-Smoot bill was passed, European States were endeavoring to negotiate reciprocal arrangements which might have caused the lowering of European tariff walls. Our action prevented such an arrangement, and since 1930, when Congress acted and the President signed the law, European tariff barriers have gone higher and higher.

This means a lower standard of living in many quarters because prosperity exists only when goods are exchanged internationally.

HOOVER IGNORED WARNING

Just before the Hawley-Smoot bill was presented to President Hoover for his signature, a thousand American economists told President Hoover that he should not sign the law. I am told that never before in history have so many economists been able to agree upon anything, but the faults of this bill were so open and palpable that they found easy agreement.

With really prophetic insight, they warned him in detail of what would happen, and the detail that they gave him is the detail of what has happened—no benefit to the farmers, injury to American export trade, weakening of the security of American investments abroad, increase of unemployment and encouragement of a world-wide tariff war.

President Hoover ignored this warning. Would he have ignored a warning by a thousand engineers that a bridge which the National Government was building would be unsafe?

To my mind, a proper tariff policy must be a complete reversal of the methods of the present administration. The scientific determination of economic facts and the scientific determination of probable results of proposed changes are all for good, and should, of course, be used. But this action in itself does nothing to bring about the actual reciprocal exchange of goods so necessary to us and to all nations. That is the only real method of making goods move.

The task of statesmanship is to determine what these products are, to bring about by bilateral or groups international agreements to effectuate their exchange. The world is looking for that type of statesmanship, for such a plan that goes far beyond mere scale reductions, that fills in the gaps in the mere advocating of "expert" tariff boards, and, above all, that provides a real beginning of that international resumption of business that everyone favors and expects.

JEFFERSONIAN PRINCIPLES REMAIN

If Jefferson would return to the councils of the party, he would find that while economical changes of a century have changed the necessary methods of Government action, the principles of that action are still wholly his own. As the great Virginian sat at Monticello in the twilight of his life he saw the rise of manufacturing and the growth of the cities, and he still held fast to the first principles that a truly national economy is many-sided.

A great disciple of Jefferson said: "Jefferson's principles are sources of light, because they are not made up of pure reason but spring out of aspiration, impulse, vision, sympathy. They burn with the fervor of the heart; they wear the light of the interpretation he sought, the authentic terms of honest, human ambition. And the law, in his mind, was the guardian of all legitimate ambition. It was the great umpire standing by to see that the game was honorably and fairly played in the spirit of generous rivalry and to open the field free to every sportsmanlike contestant."

That was spoken in 1912 by Woodrow Wilson. It was the voice that the people of the country recognized as the authentic and clear spokesman of the Jeffersonian heritage.

PLEADS "TO GET A NEW CAR"

There will be many in this Nation during the coming months who will implore you not to swap horses crossing a stream; there will be others who will laughingly tell you that the appeal should have been worded "do not swap toboggans while you are sliding downhill." But it seems to me that the more truthful, the more accurate plea to the people of the Nation should be this: "If the old car, in spite of frequent emergency repairs, has been bumping along downhill on only two cylinders for three long years, it is time to get another car that will start uphill on all four."

I say with Lincoln, "Having thus chosen our course, without guile and with pure purpose, let us renew our trust in God and go forward without fear and with manly hearts."

Jefferson labored for a widespread unity of thought, capable of directing united action, based on a fair and just unity of interest. Jefferson labored to bring the scattered farmers, the workers, the business men into a participation of national affairs. This was his purpose, and this is the principle upon which the party he founded was based. Let his party continue to dedicate itself to that great purpose. Let it present itself as a party of unity to carry out the purpose of social and economic unity throughout the Nation.

SOLVING OF DESTITUTION PROBLEM BY CHARLESTON, W. VA.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Charleston Gazette—West Virginia's most widely circulated newspaper—in its issue of April 17 tells a heart-warming story about the heroic, effective, and highly praiseworthy achievements of the county court, certain organizations, and the generous people of Kanawha County in healing the sick, feeding the hungry, and generally relieving the distress of the unemployed. I respectfully commend the story to the favorable consideration of the relief organizations of the country and request that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the Charleston (W. Va.) Gazette of April 17, 1932]

KANAWHA COUNTY SOLVES HER DESTITUTION PROBLEM—12,000 FED, CLOTHED, REHABILITATED DURING WINTER BY VOLUNTEERS AND OFFICIALS UNDER DIRECTION OF COMMISSIONERS

Kanawha County has met and is mastering the gigantic problem of sustaining and rehabilitating some 12,000 victims of unemployment within its borders. With the beginning of the winter of 1931–32 the majority of these people found themselves facing the possible fact of starvation. With the advent of spring, the tale is told that they have been fed, housed, clothed, given medical attention, and the majority of their children kept in attendance at the county schools.

Details of how relief work on such a scale was accomplished and by what agencies are only now becoming generally known, even to many who participated in the work of relief.

The desperate situation which existed in many county communities last fall drew the attention of officials and private citizens. The Kanawha County court, with an organization designed only to care for the small normal amount of poverty and destitution, found itself swamped with urgent calls for help. Many persons far back in the hills of West Virginia's "little empire," as the county is sometimes termed, actually believed they and their families might starve. Their appeals stirred the interest of prominent citizens of Charleston. A citizens' committee, headed by the Rev. Dr. John Gass, met and pledged to Dr. C. A. Ray, John C. Blackwood, and Henry Walker, members of the Kanawha County court, their assistance. They cooperated in getting private citizens to join with the court in a relief program.

The members of the county court were almost overwhelmed with reports of urgent need coming from various districts. They met the situation by reorganizing the county welfare department. Mrs. Pearl Poteet, of Charleston, was chosen to head the department. She was known to be an excellent organizer. The next step was to readjust the manner of distributing food to the needy.

The old system was to write an order for groceries on a store in the vicinity of the destitute family. This system had proved enormously expensive. A new system was instituted. Under direction of the court, a food-distributing depot was established by Mrs. Poteet at 109 Dunbar Street, in Charleston. Foodstuffs were purchased by the carload or in large quantities. D. K. Richardson was chosen to take charge. Richardson was assisted by unemployed men, some of whom helped in assembling and preparing the food for shipment in return for their supplies. Everything from the beginning was, and still is, handled according to suggestions from United States Government experts.

Conditions under which the food is handled are clean and sanitary. An efficient system for packing and shipping is used. Order sheets naming families who upon investigation have been found to be actually in need are sent to this station after being approved by the department head or her assistants. Each county district has its supervisor. Each supervisor is responsible for investigation of his own district.

DELIVERIES SYSTEMATIZED

County trucks are used to carry the shipments of weekly supplies to the several sections of the county. Each family head signs a receipt. From 300 to 400 orders per day are shipped. A total of 2,500 orders per week reached some time ago has been slightly decreased recently.

Menus for the food issued are changed weekly in conformance with Government specifications. One menu, listed for the period April 4–9, is as follows: For family of from two to three, 5 pounds flour, 10 pounds meal, 2 pounds bacon, 2 pounds beans, ½ pound coffee, ½ pound powdered milk, ½ pound oats, 2 pounds sugar, 1 gallon potatoes, 1 package salt, 1 can baking powder. This menu is expanded proportionately for families of larger size.

Many private agencies, including gas companies, wholesale groceries, local manufacturing plants, and individuals, joined with the county court in the relief program. These agencies are contributing immense amounts of supplies. Employees of a number of companies have voluntarily donated a percentage of their pay for the purchase of supplies. When necessary, the companies donated trucks.

OTHER DEPARTMENTS JOIN

Paralleling the institution of the systematic distribution of food from the Dunbar Street Station, other county departments were called upon to share in the work. In cooperation with Mrs. Poteet and the welfare department, Miss Elizabeth Goodall, county superintendent of schools, through teachers of county schools, made a survey of the needs of families in practically every community. This information was tabulated by the welfare department and checked by district supervisors. Every effort has been and is being used, Mrs. Poteet states, to avoid the attempts of unprincipled people who do not actually need help to "get something for nothing" from the county. This feature has been almost eliminated and is being strictly dealt with.

As this situation stands now, Commissioner Blackwood said yesterday, food for the unemployed is being purchased at lowest prices; information as to who is actually in need is at hand and the distribution is being handled economically and efficiently.

County farm women's clubs, under leadership of Miss Eleanor McClung, county home demonstration agent, and the county agricultural department, under direction of T. Y. McGovran, have aided in the food program. During last summer and fall these agencies, with the assistance of farmers who contributed surplus vegetables and fruits, canned an immense amount of such foods. During the past winter and this spring these supplies were sent out through the Dunbar Street Station. The women are seeing to it that all empty cans and jars are returned.

For a time from $1,500 to $2,000 worth of groceries were sent out from the station each week.

SICK CARED FOR

While the food problem is the largest, there are other important phases of the relief work which require detailed attention. Cases of sickness have been and are being cared for. This has been under the supervision of Dr. A. L. Amick, county health physician. The welfare department has had to act in cases of deaths where the county had to bear the expense. Tents had to be secured in many cases where families had lost their homes. Babies arrived in many families. The county has had to care for them.

The county poor farm, near Institute, 7 miles west of Charleston, has cared for many old and partially disabled persons. The farm, however, officials say, has been handled in such a manner under Superintendent D. H. McClung, that large quantities of garden and farm produce have been produced and stored so that these inmates have to some extent been self-supporting.

DISEASE PREVENTION

Dr. John Thames, of the county health unit, is given signal credit for the part his department has taken in the prevention of disease in communities where the unemployment percentage is the largest. County officials point to the fact that there have been no serious epidemics in these communities or in the county otherwise. They attribute the unusual record to Doctor Thames's activity and untiring perseverance in carrying on the work of immunizing as many persons as it has been possible to reach against typhoid fever, diphtheria, and smallpox. Smallpox has been almost wiped out in Kanawha County, they report.

LEGION ENTERS FIGHT

Early in the year substantial assistance was given in cooperation with the relief program by outside agencies, the county commissioners state. The American Legion, John Brawley Post, No. 20; the Red Cross; the United Fuel Gas Co.; the Friends Society of Pennsylvania; Sheriff D. H. Stephenson, of Kanawha County; private corporation; and Charleston business firms and individuals joined hands to help their more unfortunate fellows.

One phase of the work which was handled by the Legion in direct conjunction with the county welfare department under Mrs. Poteet was that of providing shoes and clothing for the most needy cases. During January Comdr. E. T. Williams, of the Brawley post, became interested and requested John Cork, of the Charleston Gazette staff, to address a Legion meeting upon conditions in the Cabin Creek coal fields, particularly among children of school age.

Immediately following this meeting Commander Williams secured through W. R. Fletcher, of the trust department of the Kanawha Banking & Trust Co., the use of an unoccupied business building at 215 Hale Street. Here a fully equipped relief station was established, manned by volunteer workers. T. J. Joan was placed in charge. A Legion campaign for shoes and clothes brought thousands of donations from Charleston individuals and business firms. Members of 1,400 families, who were in desperate need for clothing, were supplied. W. O. Taylor headed the Legion committee. Mrs. N. A. Barth, Mrs. John Walker, Mrs. Fred Walls, and Mrs. J. Boscher represented the Women's Legion Auxiliary and personally made many trips into the coal fields, where they fitted shoes on school children to enable them to continue school attendance.

"The Legion was glad to serve, but the generosity of Charleston people, also the newspapers and WOBU radio station, deserve the real mention," said Commander Williams yesterday.

A fund donated by Gazette employees was used by the Legion to buy milk for babies.

Full records of all who made donations are being preserved in the Legion archives.

RED CROSS HELPS

Soon, through the agency of the local department of the American Red Cross, which has been actively engaged in relief work, there is to be distributed 954,000 pounds of flour among unemployed in Kanawha, Putnam, and Clay counties. The wheat will be milled by the Charleston Milling Co. Feeding programs, school lunches, nursing service, and rehabilitation work in the form of distribution of garden seeds form a part of the organization program locally. Seed to the value of $8,000 has been distributed to date in the three counties. Boyd Stutler is president of the Charleston Red Cross chapter.; Mrs. Nell Huneke is secretary and field worker. Several other assistants comprise the local office personnel.

Rehabilitation of unemployed in Kanawha County is rapidly taking form. Where possible, families are encouraged to raise gardens. Farm-home demonstrators will supervise canning among the affected families during the summer. The county court will provide much road work for unemployed heads of families.

NOTIFICATION TO PRESIDENT OF CONFIRMATION OF W. HARRY KING

Mr. NORBECK. As in executive session, I rise to ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation on last Thursday of the nomination of W. Harry King to be member of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As in executive session, the Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation on last Thursday of the nomination mentioned by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be entered.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 472. An act to authorize business leases of unallotted Indian land; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 6184. An act for the improvement of the inland waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 7521. An act to provide a new Code of Civil Procedure for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing Code of Civil Procedure; to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

H. R. 8877. An act to clarify the application of the contract-labor provisions of the immigration laws to actors; and

H. R. 10600. An act to exempt from the quota husbands of American citizens; to the Committee on Immigration.

H. R. 8897. An act to authorize compacts or agreements between States relating to service of process and production of witnesses in criminal cases;

H. R. 9877. An act to repeal obsolete sections of the Revised Statutes omitted from the United States Code;

H. R. 10277. An act to transfer Lincoln County from the Columbia division to the Winchester division of the middle Tennessee judicial district; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 9591. An act to extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead entrymen;

H. R. 9970. An act to add certain land to the Crater Lake National Park in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 10744. An act to authorize the issuance of patents for certain lands in the State of Colorado to certain persons; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

H. R. 10494. An act to provide a postage charge on notices to publishers regarding undeliverable second-class matter; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

H. J. Res. 138. Joint resolution for the relief of the State of Idaho; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. J. Res. 305. Joint resolution for the improvement of Meridian Hill Park; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION REFORM

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD an address by Breckinridge Long, Assistant Secretary of State during the Wilson administration, before the national conference of the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform, April 12, 1932, at Washington, D. C., on the subject of "A Damaged Constitution."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A DAMAGED CONSTITUTION

Various arguments have been advanced in opposition to the eighteenth amendment, but the one which has been given least public attention is that directed at the constitutional situation which has developed since its adoption. This embraces the question of the propriety of including that subject matter in a constitutional document, and it is these aspects of the matter to which I ask your attention this evening.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

The Constitution is simply a set of rules to regulate the process of government. But it is a definite and rigid set of rules. The Constitution does not govern. It lays out a program through which government shall be achieved. The Constitution does not elect a President; it provides how he shall be elected. It does not elect a Congress, but provides how its Members shall be elected and who shall be eligible. It does not decide any cases at law, but it provides for the establishment of courts which shall try cases and decide them. It does not make any law nor declare any law, but provides how the law shall be declared.

In other words, the Constitution sets out an orderly plan of procedure in order that government may be achieved, and that desirable objective is attained under its authority when the steps outlined in it are followed. But it can not be attained under authority of the Constitution if the steps outlined in the Constitution are not followed.

When it comes to making law, the Constitution is specific as to how law shall be made. The first line in the first paragraph of the Constitution states, "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in the Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives."

This does not read "All legislative powers, except some * * *" which would indicate that other ways are provided for making laws. Nor does it read, "Some legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in Congress and other methods shall be also provided." Its language is plain, simple, all inclusive. It reads, "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives"—and nowhere else.

The words "legislative powers" as used in the Constitution in this connection need no further explanation. Their meaning at the time they were placed in the Constitution was well known, and has continued to be certain and definite since before 1787. Those words were used in the constitutions of New York, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia in the years between 1777 and 1784, before our Federal Constitution was drafted. Those words mean "the power to pass law" and when the Constitution was drafted and there were used the words "All legislative powers," it was meant to provide that no law could be passed unless it was passed by the Congress of the United States sitting in its legislative capacity and as a part of the other steps set out in the Constitution which it is necessary to follow in order to declare law.

A little further on in the Constitution (Art. I, sec. 7) it is provided "every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States * * *."

And a little further along in the same section appear the words "every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and the House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States * * *."

These sections of the Constitution do not read "some of the bills which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall * * * etc."; nor do they read "some orders, resolutions, or votes to which the concurrence of the Senate and the House of Representatives may be necessary, etc. * * *"; nor do these sections of the Constitution read "every bill, except what the Congress shall otherwise decide, etc. * * *"; nor do they read "every order, resolution, or vote, except when otherwise decided by the House and Senate, etc. * * *." The language of these provisions of the Constitution is just as plain, definite, simple, and unmistakable in its verbiage and in its meaning as it is possible to reduce sentences to writing in the English language. The intent is specific and the meaning of the words is clear. In each place it is plainly said "every bill and every order, resolution, or vote." In other words, there was no other way in which any bill, order, resolution, or vote could "become a law" or "take effect" other than by following the procedure so carefully set out in the Constitution of the United States.

That procedure was definitely agreed upon and carefully specified and it contemplated that in passing law the Congress of the United States would be sitting in its legislative capacity. By "its legislative capacity" is meant that function of the Congress in the exercise of which it passes laws. Each House of the Congress has other than legislative functions. The House of Representatives sits as a grand jury when it votes impeachments. The Senate sits as a court when it tries impeachments. The House sits as an election board when it canvasses the returns of the election for President. The Senate sits in a quasi executive capacity when it considers advising and consenting to treaties; or when it sits to confirm nominations made by the President. The President acts in a legislative capacity when he considers the bills laid before him after their passage by the Congress. And the Congress sits as a constitutional assembly when it considers amendments to the Constitution of the United States. And so the Constitution provided that when the House sat in its legislative capacity to consider bills, orders, resolutions, or votes, and passed them, they must be sent to the President for him to exercise his legislative function. It would have been quite superfluous to use in the Constitution all of the words "bill, order, resolution, or vote" had it not been the intention to use all the words descriptive of the activities of the Congress sitting in its legislative capacity. Nor would all those words have been used if it had been intended to leave open the door in order that some other method might be discovered for the making of laws.

The Constitution very plainly says that no bill shall become a law unless it has been acted upon by the Congress sitting in its legislative capacity and presented to the President so that he can perform his part of the legislative function. There is no power in the Congress to pass any law by any other method. Nor is there any authorization in the Constitution for the passage of any law by the use of any other method.

So we see that the Congress is bound by the provisions of the Constitution and restricted in its legislative activities to the steps laid out in the Constitution. And we have seen that the Constitution does not declare law and was not intended to be the body of law. Rather it is a set of rules carefully set out and intended to be entirely controlling as to the manner in which laws should be passed.

LAW

A law is something different. A law sets out a rule of conduct. "You shall not murder" is a law. "You shall not steal" is a law. "Railroads engaged in interstate commerce are required to do this and are prevented from doing that" is a law. "You shall not transport, manufacture, or sell intoxicating liquors" is a law. The framers of the Constitution contemplated—and the Constitution still provides—that all matters of that character shall be voted upon by the Congress sitting in its legislative capacity; and that, if passed by the Congress, the bill be laid before the President for him to exercise his legislative function in approving or disapproving the bill; and that that be done "before it becomes a law." The conclusion is inescapable that the Constitution contemplates a hard and finely drawn line of distinction between laws, as such, which declare rules of conduct, and by which the people or the institution of the United States are governed, on the one hand; and, on the other, the substantial and inexorable requirements of the Constitution which must be specifically complied with and which the Congress has no power to set aside.

AMENDMENT

There is a method of amending the Constitution. The steps to be taken to that end are just as carefully set out, and those steps have always been complied with. There is no doubt that those who framed the Constitution intended that the power of amendment should be used to make changes in the constitutional structure or in the method of operation of government, or to make additions to or subtractions from the powers granted to the Federal Government. But it was never contemplated that the power to amend should be used as a vehicle to place a law in the body of the Constitution; and to do so is to argue that the provisions of the Constitution deny its own specific language, where it requires every bill to be passed by the Congress sitting in its legislative capacity and presented to the President for the exercise of his legislative function before it shall become a law.

The power to amend has been used very sparingly. The first 10 amendments were added immediately the Constitution itself was adopted, practically as a part of the document and as the result of an agreement made by the various States as part of their ratifications. During the Civil War period and the stress and strain of that sectional strife the Constitution was amended three times. But, except for those two periods, that power to amend was used only four times up to the time of the adoption of the eighteenth amendment. These amendments were each directed at the structure of government. One of them limited the use of the judicial power of Federal courts. One changed the method of electing the President and Vice-President. Another increased the powers of the Federal Government by authorizing the Congress to levy taxes on incomes, and another changed the method of electing Senators. In none of them is there a declaration of law. Nor was it contemplated from the time the Constitutional Convention sat in 1787 until the passage of the eighteenth amendment that the power to amend could be used to pass a law. It was never dreamed that the Constitution could be so distorted as to set aside its own definite requirements of the manner in which law should be passed nor that that power could be used to circumvent the fundamental rules of the Government in America.

So that we arrive at a point in philosophy where, if we are correct in our statements—first, that the Constitution is an outline of a limited method of procedure; second, that the Congress is authorized to pass laws in only one way; third, that a law is a statement of a rule of conduct; and fourth, that the power of amendment can not properly be used to circumvent the expressed declaration of the Constitution as to the manner in which law shall be passed, then we must arrive at the conclusion that the eighteenth amendment is improperly a part of the Constitution of the United States of America.

There is no doubt that the Congress may propose an amendment to the Constitution to provide that laws may be made by some method other than that detailed in the Constitution, but until such an amendment has been adopted any attempt to give any vote of the Congress the status of law is a violation of the principles of constitutional government in the United States and an act in derogation of the authority of the Constitution itself.

There is no doubt that by constitutional amendment the Congress of the United States might have been authorized to pass laws to prohibit the importation, transportation, and sale of intoxicating liquors. If such an amendment had been adopted and the Congress had passed laws to carry it out, we would find ourselves in a vastly different position than we find ourselves to-day. We would find ourselves in a position that the Constitution itself and those who framed the Constitution contemplated we would find ourselves in if we so desired. In that case, and the Congress having passed laws to effectuate such constitutional provision, those laws could be repealed by the Congress by majority vote in case the people of the United States desired them repealed.

But the situation in which the eighteenth amendment has left government in the United States is one in which some of the fundamental principles of democratic government are violated and through which some of the well-considered arrangements of our plan of government have been rendered inoperative. The consequences of the improper use of the power to amend are apparent in the manner in which the delicately arranged system of checks and balances is disarranged.

CHECKS AND BALANCES

One of the most important features of our plan of government is this system of checks and balances by which the power delegated to one branch of the Government or to an official is shared by another branch.

We have already referred to one—that which requires the Congress, when it shall have passed a bill, to present it to the President in order that he may share the responsibility. If he signs it, it becomes a law. If he vetoes it, it goes back to the Congress, but then must be passed by a two-thirds majority in order to become a law.

Another we have referred to is the provision that the President shall not have plenary power to make appointments to office but that he shall first obtain the consent of the Senate before he shall appoint any person to office.

Another is that the President shall not be allowed to make treaties with foreign governments and possibly compromise the sovereign power of the United States without obtaining by two-thirds vote of the Senate consent for him to make any treaty arrangements.

Another is that after a bill becomes a law it may be submitted to the Supreme Court for its determination as to whether the Congress exceeded its authority in passing it.

The law contained in the eighteenth amendment was never submitted to the President of the United States for his approval or disapproval. It was not passed by the Congress sitting in its legislative capacity but was passed by the Congress sitting as a constitutional body and in a constitution-making capacity as distinct from its legislative capacity. Furthermore, this law is not, as intended by the Constitution, susceptible of interpretation by the Supreme Court for the very simple reason that when it became a part of the Constitution, whether properly or improperly, it assumed a character superior to the Supreme Court, for that court itself owes its own authority to the Constitution of the United States, which it must regard as superior to itself. Nor can the Supreme Court differentiate between parts of the Constitution. It can not say that one part is good and one part is bad. It must look upon the Constitution as a whole, and whatever obtains a place in the Constitution it must regard as superior to its own authority for the very reason that it is the source of its own authority. So that the Supreme Court is unable, provided the proper steps were taken to secure its adoption, to hold that an amendment is not a part of the Constitution; and that court finds itself under the particular necessity of declaring to be a part of the Constitution a law, even though every member of the court should be of opinion that such a law had no place in the Constitution.

Furthermore, rule by majority is one of the fundamental principles of American Government. Unless there is rule by majority, there is rule by minority. And rule by minority may be just as autocratic as rule by a dictator, and may assume any or all the unwholesome and unpleasant features of tyranny. While I do not say, for the simple reason that I do not know, that a majority of the people of the United States to-day are opposed to the eighteenth amendment, I do definitely say that if a majority of the people of the United States were opposed to the eighteenth amendment, they would be powerless to change it unless they were an overwhelming majority of two-thirds or three-fourths. And the effect of the eighteenth amendment is that, having been passed as a law through the power to amend, there is nullified, so far as that question is concerned, the operation of the rule of the majority which is an integral part of our system of political jurisprudence.

CONCENTRATION OF POWER

Another phase which disturbs the equanimity of our political existence is the inordinate power which the eighteenth amendment has placed in the hands of the Chief Executive. It has done more to centralize power than any decision ever made by the people of the United States or their representatives except a declaration of war. Attenuated particles of executive power run rampant through every section of the United States, on land armed to the teeth and on water represented by ships of war.

Some of these ships are boats transferred from the Navy, armed with cannon, and are so much of the character of warships that at a recent disarmament conference an attempt was made by some of the other governments to have them included in the naval strength of the United States and counted as part of the quota of tonnage to be allowed this Government on the seas. They are not officered by personnel of the Navy, but they are officered by men who got their training in the Navy; and in appearance they are indistinguishable from warships of the United States. And the farther they get from base and the farther away the armed officers on land get from Washington, the fewer become the contacts between them and the chief of an executive bureau who issues their orders, and the less amenable they are to the dictates of legal restraint.

The trouble is not so much with the orders which are given to them but in the situation that permits a concentration of power in the hands of the President which was never contemplated by the Constitution—and never contemplated for the very good reason that it was never intended that a law should be passed except by the methods prescribed in the Constitution. But the result is the same, and a power of unwarranted extent finds itself in the hands of the Chief Executive, with his prohibition navy on the sea and his prohibition army on the land engaged in enforcing a law which was passed in violation of the principles of constitutional government in the United States and which has become so embedded in the Constitution itself that even the Supreme Court must bow before it. It has set aside the checks and balances of government, it has disturbed the distribution of power, it has nullified the specific application of majority rule, and it has created a centralization of authority which is inimical to proper government in the United States, and it ought to be repealed.

MISTAKE

Many of us may have supported the eighteenth amendment in the thought that it was a moral and beneficent principle in full accord with the provision for government in this country. To have thought so seems now to have been a mistake. There is no moral turpitude involved in making a mistake, but there is a great deal of moral turpitude involved in continuing a mistake after it has been discovered to be wrong. And while we may not be censured for having believed that it was a good thing for America, we can not but be guilty of an act of great dishonor to ourselves and injustice to our country if we realize it is wrong and fail to do our part to rectify it.

Our duty is to preserve our Government and to restore our Constitution to its former purity; to pay to the memory of our ancestors who gave it to us the duty of preserving our inheritance and to pay to our progeny the duty we will owe them, handing down our institutions, not impaired but improved, that they may enjoy the privileges of the most satisfactory system of government the mind of man has yet evolved.

We speak of the Constitution, and should speak of it, with something of reverence, but we must remember that our Constitution is simply a means to an end. That end is good government, according to the will of the majority, in an orderly process, according to the rules, to protect the rights of the individual.

BEFORE THE CONSTITUTION

Government under the Constitution is not the first government of the United States. Nor can it be understood and properly appreciated without a knowledge of its predecessors and of the reasons which brought it into being. In the contemplation of current political activities, we are prone to forget the Revolutionary War, and its reasons, and the effect that our early history had upon the political principles of America. Bunker Hill, Valley Forge, and Yorktown are not just names in history. They have a meaning, without an understanding of which America's institutions can not be properly appreciated. But they were not fought to protect our Constitution. It did not then exist. They were fought for the principles of liberty and freedom and to establish those principles in America.

From the opening gun at Lexington, through the long years of campaigning, the cold winter at Valley Forge, to the eventual triumph at Yorktown, Washington led his valiant little army actuated by the highest of patriotic motives. They had suffered from a tyranny of government; from an improper use of the functions of government; from the effects of an excessive centralized power. They had had soldiers quartered upon them in times of peace. They had seen their friends removed from the neighborhood when charged with a crime and taken to a distant country for trial. They had seen suspended the writ of habeas corpus. They had had freedom of speech denied; they had been taxed without a voice in assessing the tax. And in order to redress these grievances they met in the Continental Congress and petitioned that they be not longer oppressed. And when armed ships on the sea and soldiers on land came in answer to their supplications, they declared their independence and fought and set up a government under the Continental Congress. They fought for things they considered more important than the leisure which submission would have afforded, more desirable than the wealth which might have dribbled down to them from an ingracious autocratic rule. They fought for their liberties; they fought to establish on a sound basis their right to the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. During the struggles they set up another Government, under the Articles of Confederation of the United States, and they set it up during the war with the purpose of effectuating the principles for which they were fighting. And after the war, when it appeared that their plan of government was not adapted as well as it might be for the accomplishment of those ends, they called a Constitutional Convention and drafted the instrument, parts of which we have considered, known as the Constitution of the United States. That instrument was proposed for the purpose of protecting and preserving the rights which had been so dearly won in the Revolutionary War and the leader of the victorious army himself sat as president of the convention which drafted it.

RATIFICATION

After the Constitution had been drawn and had been submitted to the States there arose against it violent opposition because it did not specifically preserve those rights. In the debates which ensued there arose two schools. One of them advocated the adoption of the Constitution as drafted because, they held, the Federal Government had not power to abrogate those rights or to interfere with them, because the Federal Government had only such powers as were specifically delegated to it. The other school held that they would not be satisfied unless those rights were specifically set out in the text of the Constitution as indubitable guaranties, set apart as things with which the Federal Government could not interfere. So it was agreed beforehand that the subject matter of the first 10 amendments would be immediately added. They became known as the Bill of Rights.

There is one thing which the historian can point out with certitude; that the Constitution of the United States would never have become operative had there been the slightest thought in the minds of those who agreed to its adoption that any of the guaranties of the Bill of Rights could be abrogated, altered, or repealed, for those were the things the Revolutionary War had been fought to attain. Some of the greatest statesmen and greatest patriots of that period, men whose names have come down to emblazon the pages of history and who will ever continue as beacon lights of patriotic virtue, were particularly opposed to the adoption of the Constitution as it was originally proposed and would have waged a successful fight to defeat it if it had not been a part of the understanding that the Bill of Rights be included. They were the reasons for government. They were the objects to be secured by government. They were the sacred thing which government was set up to protect. And had it not been for the agreement to insert the Bill of Rights as part of the constitutional document there would not have been a Government of the United States under the Constitution.

Nor was there any one of the men who sat in the Constitutional Convention and who drafted the Constitution, nor a single man who sat in any State convention to ratify the Constitution, who held to the thought that the powers delegated to the Federal Government could be used to impair the Bill of Rights, which was considered to be perpetual and not subject to modification, repeal, derogation, or denial.

So that if there is anything sacred about government in the United States it is the rights and liberties of the people of this country as guaranteed by the Bill of Rights, and government under the Constitution is the agency to be used to secure that end.

If the power of amendment can be used to prohibit the manufacture, transportation, and sale of liquor, and efforts in its enforcement can search and seize without warrant, or can transfer those taken to another jurisdiction for trial, then the power to amend can be used to require any other thing or to prohibit any other thing. Under that hypothesis, the power of amendment can be used to deny freedom of speech, the liberty of the press, the right to trial by jury, the right to a public trial, the freedom from search without warrant, or any of the other rights and liberties which the Revolutionary War was fought to attain. But when that is done the purpose of the Constitution is defeated, and the very reasons for its establishment are repudiated.

The people of the United States have the power to change the Constitution in any way they see fit. They have the power to repeal the whole Constitution or to abrogate any part of it just as they had the power to adopt the eighteenth amendment. But there is no power in America, nor any power on earth, which can destroy the Constitution and continue government under it. Either you have got to have this Constitution or you have got to have something else. If you are governed by this Constitution, you submit to government by a certain set of well-defined rules which declare an orderly procedure which must be followed.

When you deviate from that procedure, or when you prostitute part of it so as to divert it to another purpose, then you are no longer being governed by the principles of the Constitution of the United States. When you pass a law into the body of the Constitution in violation of its own provisions as to how a law shall be passed, then you violate the letter of the Constitution itself. And when that law as a part of the Constitution upsets the system of checks and balances of power, removes the subject matter from the contemplation of the Supreme Court, and concentrates an inordinate power in the hands of the Chief Executive which can be used, and from time to time has been used, to nullify the guaranties of the Bill of Rights, then you have by so much done violence to the principles of constitutional government as known in this country.

There is only one wholesome way to proceed. That is to repeal the eighteenth amendment and take out of the Constitution a law which should never have been in it, and restore that instrument to its former purity. If after that the people of the United States desire a prohibition law, let them procure it through the orderly processes provided in the Constitution. Let them authorize by a constitutional amendment that each State may decide such matters for itself, with power in the Federal Government to control the interstate features of it, or that the Congress may pass such a law by majority vote; so that when a majority of the people of the United States want to amend the law, to change the law, or to repeal the law, it too can be done by majority vote; and so that the Supreme Court can construe it as a law, like it does any other law, and stand as a bulwark between the rights and liberties of the American citizen, and defend them against the encroachments of unjustified Federal power.

But the first step in any program which contemplates continued government under the principles of our Constitution is to repeal the eighteenth amendment.

RELIEF SITUATION IN 40 CITIES—ARTICLE FROM THE SURVEY

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a symposium on the relief situation in 40 cities, which appears in the Survey of this month's issue, and ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Survey, April 15, 1932]

HOW THE CITIES STAND—RELIEF: GOING UP—WORK: STATIC—FUNDS: GOING DOWN

By telegraph, by air mail, and by post the Survey has collected from correspondents in 37 of the largest American cities swift summaries of the unemployment-relief situation at the moment when winter breaks into spring. Fitted together they make a sorry picture for a proud country to contemplate. Practically all the letters tell the same story. Without plans, without strong national leadership, with meager and uncertain funds these cities have some way, somehow muddled through the winter, keeping their people alive, but at what cost of broken spirit and human suffering only God knows.

Now, with the break of spring they find themselves in no better case. Still planless, with no sign of improved employment, with relief needs growing and relief funds dwindling to exhaustion, they turn blind eyes to the future, where already the specter of another winter is rising.

A comparison of the reports indicates that, relatively speaking, New England and upstate New York have the situation in hand better than other sections of the country. The industrial cities of the Middle West and the large cities of Pennsylvania are in desperate plight. The huge relief funds raised in New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia have been unequal to the staggering load in these centers of industrial dislocation. Complete breakdown is imminent. The fallacy of the idea that private funds could cope with a situation of such proportions as this one is remorselessly exposed. Private funds have been little more than a thin emollient on a deep wound. Even in the South, where there is slight tradition for the use of tax funds for outdoor relief, city and county officials have been forced into new policies. In Washington, which has no established system of public outdoor relief, President Hoover has himself asked Congress for $600,000 to take up the burden which exhausted private resources can no longer carry.

State action, first launched by New York last September, has been slow and reluctant. But New Jersey, Rhode Island, Wisconsin, Illinois, Pennsylvania, and, probably by the time these words are read, Ohio have moved, fumblingly and inadequately perhaps, to create at least a thin cushion for the present and a pdecedent for the future. The tragic desperation of the situation is illustrated in Pennsylvania, where a pending court decision is holding up a possible State fund of $10,000,000. Spread over the whole State, this sum will be the merest temporary poultice to the existing human misery, yet it represents the only hope in sight.

More disturbing than the evidence of past muddling is the lack of evidence of any real statesmanship for the future. No rational adult can be blind to what lies ahead. The summer will bring little surcease in human need. Next winter will be worse, not better. Yet Congress is deaf, legislatures are adjourning, cities and counties are temporizing with pinchbeck appropriations and private social agencies are in positions they can not sustain. There is no evidence of any real facing of what is on the doorstep, let alone any preparation to deal with it.

New York is the only one of the States that has looked beyond the moment. The 1932 legislature has provided $5,000,000 to extend the program of the Temporary Emergency Relief Administration to November 15 and has agreed to submit to the voters in November a $30,000,000 bond issue, which would carry it through 1933.

In the following pages the Survey gives its readers the picture of conditions as it has come from those closest to what is happening. It has full confidence in the judgment of its correspondents, including those few whose names are withheld.

THEY SPEAK FOR THEMSELVES

Akron, Ohio: Funds from the community fund and the city now budgeted will carry the present relief program to the end of May. The city has agreed to appropriate funds to carry through the calendar year, but its ability to do so depends on the special session of the legislature. Should this prospect fail, and dire necessity develop, more private funds might be raised, but we hope this will be unnecessary. The peak of relief cases was reached in February, but direct relief expenditures are less than a year ago. This is due to the drop in commodity prices, to the city's work-relief program, and to the staggering of work by the large rubber industries. We have had little change in employment in the past 18 months, but there is no indication of improvement. No crystallized community opinion on Federal relief is evident. (E. J. Larrick, executive secretary, community fund.)

Atlanta, Ga.: Relief funds now in sight are adequate for another four or five months. Fulton County has appropriated $150,000, the only public fund applicable to unemployment relief, and $52,000 is still collectible from the emergency relief fund pledged last fall. When this is exhausted the county will be asked for further funds. February saw the highest point in relief applications. If last year's experience repeats itself there will be a considerable drop in applications in May and June and a sharp rise the succeeding months. I do not see signs of a pick-up in industry, but the American Legion has produced about 1,500 temporary jobs and has influenced a good many industries to take measures to care for their employees. There is a decided division of opinion among social workers on Federal relief and a definite opposition to it on the part of business interests. Atlanta has up to now been able to care for its unemployed relatively well, and I believe that if any grave crisis arose funds could be secured from public and private sources to continue this care. (Frank Miller, executive secretary, community chest.)

Birmingham, Ala.: Family relief, normally $84,000 a year, mounted to $245,000 in 1931. We estimated a total of $284,000 for 1932, $200,000 budgeted as emergency. But the case load has gone far above estimates and the emergency fund will be exhausted by April 1. New estimates put the 1932 requirements at $630,000. The county contributes nothing to family relief. The city, contrary to precedents, is contributing $1,250 per month, and will, I believe, assume a larger responsibility when private funds fail. There is no indication of county action, though 20 per cent of the relief load is outside the city limits. There are no State funds in sight and there is little hope of industry absorbing any of the unemployed. Gardening and Federal-aid road work are the only prospect. I am of the opinion that the city and county together can and should take care of the situation without Federal aid. (H. J. Early, director community chest.)

Boston, Mass.: Relief expenditures have been mounting and more and more families are seeking aid. It looks as though the curve would follow last year's, with the figures just about double. The department of public welfare, which carries the bulk of the load, expended $975,839 in February, 1932, as against $578,063 in February, 1931; the Family Welfare Society, $38,106 against $17,789. As yet white-collar folk have not come to the relief agencies in very great numbers, though there is evidence of increasing distress in this group. The State department of labor and industries reports a slight increase in employment, particularly in manufactures, in Boston and throughout the State. (Roy M. Cushman, executive secretary, council of social agencies.)

Buffalo, N. Y.: Relief funds are in hand or substantially guaranteed to continue the present program for another year. We expect additional appropriations from the city on July 1. The county has already provideil money for the calendar year, and State aid has been extended until November, and possibly through 1933. Our chest campaign comes this spring; but if it should be necessary, we could probably raise more funds in the fall as we did in 1931. Relief demands are still increasing; and even if business picks up at an early date, it will be, in my judgment, at least a year before the relief situation begins to show a change. My impression is that local opinion is opposed to Federal relief. (David C. Adie, executive secretary, council of social agencies.)

Chicago, Ill.: Funds are not sufficient to give adequate relief to all who apply. However, all families do receive something. I believe that food is adequate and that no one is suffering from cold. Most evictions are being prevented. All funds in sight were exhausted in January, but State funds, which may amount to $20,000,000, will carry the present program until August 1. We certainly expect further county and State money, but probably not until the next regular session of the legislature in January. I think more private funds could be raised early this summer, and I hope the effort will be made. I believe that our peak came in February, but the change in systems of accounting due to the transfer of all employment cases to public funds has delayed comparable figures. A slight improvement in the relief situation seems probable, and there are certain slight indications of improvement in business, especially in banking. The majority of social workers and the trustees of social organizations appear to favor Federal relief in the form of State aid. (Joel D. Hunter, general superintendent, united charities.)

Cincinnati, Ohio: Relief allowances are not adequate, many of them are dangerously small, but even so all funds in sight will be exhausted by the end of March. Relief demands will probably continue to increase as more people exhaust their private resources. There is little prospect of a change in employment conditions, and we must anticipate a heavy relief load next fall and winter. We hope that the special meeting of the legislature will provide aid through local and perhaps State funds, but at the best these will be inadequate for industrial communities. Unless large private funds are made available the inadequacy of relief will be even more apparent the rest of the year than it is now. We anticipate difficulty in our chest campaign for $2,500,000, of which $500,000 is for unemployment relief. For the most part the community feeling is against Federal relief, but I personally think that if the situation continues much longer we shall have to come to it. Local governments are now staggering under the load. Certainly State aid is inevitable. (Fred H. Hoehler, commissioner of public welfare.)

During February 14,000 of the 21,000 families registered with our social agencies were given relief. They are increasing at the rate of 1,000 a month and with the prospect of only a slight falling off during the summer and of relief needs next fall and winter considerably in excess of the past. Unemployment relief, exclusive of other relief, is now running at the rate of $325,000 a month. On this basis we face a deficit of approximately $2,500,000 beyond any funds in sight from either private giving or public appropriations. This estimate takes into account the $500,000 item for direct unemployment relief which we hope to raise in the April chest campaign. The governor's program, now before the special session of the legislature, will produce part of the deficit and may provide a way whereby Cincinnati, through bond issues, can secure the balance. I sense a little more optimism here concerning business, but I am convinced that next fall and winter will require far more money from taxation than has been expended from these sources up to the present time. A way must be found by which the States and the Federal Government can back up the local communities if real suffering is to be avoided. (C. M. Bookman, secretary community chest.)

Cleveland, Ohio: Relief funds, public and private, are not adequate at the moment, and the present program can not be continued through May. The peak of relief families will probably come the end of March. We expect only a slight decrease through the summer, and unless conditions improve the load will begin to rise again in September. It is possible that more private funds could be raised this spring if necessary, but we believe that this would make next fall's campaign much less likely to succeed. We hope and expect to secure additional public funds as a result of the present special session of the legislature. There are no indications of employment picking up sufficiently to change the relief situation. In so far as we can sense community feeling it is that given legislative authority our own city and county resources will be sufficient to meet the needs of the community without Federal relief. (Raymond Clapp, director Welfare Federation.)

Columbus, Ohio: Standards of relief are utterly inadequate, but the present program, such as it is, can be continued for about two months. The private emergency fund is being stretched thin to last through the year, but the city fund must soon be replenished if we are to go on. Relief demands are increasing and we see no prospect of improved employment except a little seasonal work. No new large amounts could be gained from private sources. We are having the hardest possible time collecting last fall's pledges. Community opinion seems divided on Federal relief with social workers generally favoring it. Our situation is tragic with our only hope in the action of the special session of the legislature. State aid will enable us to maintain present standards.

Federal aid would enable us to improve them—a vital necessity. (Stockton Raymond, secretary community fund.)

Dayton, Ohio: Since January 1 the city has provided the bulk of relief funds which have been administered by the Family Welfare Association. At the rate we are going these funds will be exhausted by June 1. The association's funds, for items other than food and fuel, will last until November. Relief demands reached a peak on March 1, and have not receded. If the experience of other years is a guide our load should be reduced by half by early summer, but of this we have no assurance as there is no sign that employment will pick up to any substantial extent. I doubt very much if funds could be raised from private sources this spring, but we hope that the special session of the legislature will enable the city and county to secure funds to see us through the year. The feeling toward Federal relief is distinctly divided. (Arch Mandel, executive secretary community chest.)

Denver, Colo.: Relief funds, both public and private, have been adequate up to now, but will not support the present program beyond May 1. We shall probably reach our peak in March, with a considerable improvement in April and May due to seasonal employment. We are expecting further and increased appropriations from the city. No help is expected and probably would not be possible from the State. More private funds could probably be raised, though it would be difficult to raise enough to carry on at the present rate. Unless the general situation improves we shall have a much harder time next fall than we have had the past fall and winter. We see no signs of an improvement sufficient to ease up the relief situation. The community feeling, I believe, is against Federal aid, and I think we shall be able to handle the situation without it, but I am told that in other sections of the State it is greatly needed. (Guy T. Justin, executive secretary community chest.)

Des Moines, Iowa: Relief funds are inadequate and can not carry the present program longer than three or four months. More private funds can, I believe, be raised if necessary, but we anticipate additional county appropriations to help carry the load. The peak came in February. The summer will be lighter, but next fall and winter will be the same as this, or worse. So far as I can see it will not be better, though there are some slight indications of a pick-up in industry. This community appears opposed to Federal relief. (Charles I. Madison, secretary community chest.)

Detroit, Mich.: Public and private relief funds are adequate at the moment, though relief per family is at the lowest rate for two years. The present program can be continued through June only if employment picks up definitely. Relief demands are increasing daily and the 1932 peak is evidently not yet reached. The public welfare department had 16,000 families under care last November and now has 27,000. Present indications are that automobile employment will improve rapidly during the next three months and so relieve the situation. After that no one can guess. The city welfare fund of $7,000,000, budgeted to July 1, is now slightly behind its schedule. Since January the emergency relief committee has raised three quarters of its million-dollar goal, and will raise the rest, but I doubt if any more private funds could be raised this spring. The business community generally is against Federal relief and is now looking toward State action, though as yet State officials have refused assistance. These attitudes may change rapidly, however, if city and county funds are exhausted and employment drops again after the seasonal pick-up. (Percival Dodge, secretary community fund.)

Fall River, Mass.: Funds in sight, public and private, will support the present program about one week. What will happen after that no tongue can tell. Probably more private funds can be raised this spring in the event of an acute situation. Relief demands appeared to reach a peak in mid-March, though there are no indications of a pick-up in industry. "Positively do not approve" is the sentiment of the community toward Federal relief.

Grand Rapids, Mich.: About 90 per cent of the dependent families in the metropolitan area are eligible for care by municipal and county authorities. Municipal funds, including a calamity bond issue of $700,000, will be exhausted on March 31. The county is in better shape and anticipates no difficulty in caring for its dependents for the rest of the year. Funds for private agencies are wholly inadequate and will probably be exhausted in July. The peak in relief came in February, with seven public and private agencies expending $106,715. I believe that we shall have but little falling off in demand during the summer, and that next fall it will be greater than ever before in our history. There is no evidence of an improved employment prospect. We might possibly raise more private funds, but no campaign is likely. At the present time a committee of one hundred, appointed by the city commissioners, is attempting to study the set-up, methods of operation, and needs of our municipal welfare department. Both of our daily papers and perhaps a majority of our citizens are opposed to Federal relief. The chapter of the American Association of Social Workers has declared in favor of it. (Victor S. Woodward, secretary welfare union.)

Hartford, Conn.: Total relief funds for the Hartford metropolitan area are adequate in that they are providing, I think, nearly everything which the general sentiment of the community demands. We estimated total relief expenditures for the calendar year 1932 at $1,625,000, the community chest to cover about one-third and the department of public welfare the balance. The chest will meet its schedule. The city will undoubtedly follow its usual custom of making deficit appropriations according to need. Relief expenditures are running about 20 per cent above the estimates, and will probably be nearer $2,000,000 for the year than the total estimated. Applications for relief began to decline in January, but expenditures remain steady. We expect a drop in April but unless there is a very substantial improvement in employment the decline will not be as great as we hoped for. At the present moment there are no indications whatever of an improvement sufficient to change the situation within the next six months. The sentiment in this community is definitely and predominantly opposed to Federal relief in any form. (Leroy A. Ramsdell, executive secretary council of social agencies.)

Kansas City, Mo.: Private relief funds are nearing exhaustion and there is no public fund for unemployment relief. The city has been providing staggered work for some 6,000 men, but this program has now been greatly curtailed. The Provident Association, the chief family agency, has exhausted its allotment of $400,000 and will require as much more to carry its load to November 1, the end of the fiscal year. Relief expenditures have been dropping since the peak of $96,000 in December. We have some hope of getting upwards of half a million accumulated income from an estate still in litigation, but if decision is delayed we shall have to look elsewhere for funds. There is talk of some sort of local tax for direct relief only. That failing we should have to try for more private funds, though the general feeling is that such an effort would be disastrous, both in the amount raised and in its effect on next year. We anticipate some seasonal improvement in business but not enough to affect the relief situation materially. There is no strong feeling here in favor of Federal relief. The local chapter of the American Association of Social Workers is strongly divided. Business leaders seem to feel that somehow we will take care of the situation without knowing just how it is going to be done. (C. W. Pfeiffer, secretary charities bureau.)

Los Angeles, Calif.: Relief funds, public and private, are inadequate, with demands on the county welfare department increasing, and demands on private family agencies slightly decreasing. Funds in sight will support the present program until May 1 when, it is hoped, the county will make an appropriation to carry the load to July 1, the end of its fiscal year. Such seasonal employment as is developing is entirely unequal to the need. The community is divided in its attitude toward Federal aid, but most of the social agencies seem to favor it for work rather than for direct relief.

Milwaukee, Wis.: Public and private relief funds seem adequate at the moment, but demands are still increasing and it is impossible to tell how long the present program can be continued. The State emergency-relief fund is helping the general situation. More private funds could probably be raised, but there is no evidence that this will be considered necessary. Some support for Federal relief is heard, but an emphatic division of opinion among taxpayers is apparent. There are no indications at the present of enough improvement in industry to ease up the demands for relief.

Minneapolis, Minn.: Public and private relief funds are reasonably adequate at the moment, and with additional funds for public relief, which we have every reason to believe the city will provide, the present program can continue through the year. Relief demands are increasing, and we hope for little during the summer than a flattening of the curve, with another rise in the fall. I see no industrial development sufficient to ease the relief situation. There are different opinions here regarding Federal relief. The Hennepin County Farmer-Labor delegates have indorsed it. Others favor local responsibility. Most people seem to feel that Minnesota can meet its own relief problem. (Otto F. Bradley, executive secretary, community fund.)

New Haven, Conn.: My impression is that we are doing a more extensive job in relation to need and a more adequate job on individual cases than was done in previous depressions, though we still have nothing to boast about. Funds now in sight, public and private, will carry the present program through the current year. It will not be necessary to raise additional private funds this spring. The city is not making specific appropriations for public relief but is charging the excess to a special account, thereby creating a deficit which it hopes to wipe out, if necessary, by a special tax over a period of years. A State fund has been discussed, but no action taken. The local industrial situation holds no promise of any easing of relief demands. We do not anticipate a better condition next fall, but we do anticipate a particularly difficult time in fund raising. In so far as there is any community opinion on the subject, it seems opposed to Federal relief. There is a widespread feeling that the possibility of State funds has not been sufficiently explored. (John B. Dawson, secretary, community chest.)

Newark, N. J.: Relief funds, public and private, are inadequate, with private agencies obliged to limit intake and the public agency barring certain groups—childless couples and nonresident families—with some unfortunate consequences. Relief demands are distinctly increasing, with the peak yet ahead. The spring pick-up of work will hardly keep pace with the increasing number of families who are at the end of their rope. Additional private funds might be raised this spring, but it would have to be undertaken by an independent group outside of the federation, and there seems little likelihood of such activity. Political leaders are averse to taking responsibility for increased taxation, and city, county, and State appropriations are all smaller than the admitted need. There are as yet very few indications of industrial improvement. Federal relief is not generally understood and most people seem opposed to it.

New Orleans, La.: Since July 1, 1931, unemployment-relief funds totaling $50,000 a month have come from a 5 per cent salary contribution from city and State employees and appropriations by two State boards. On March 1 the city and State announced general salary reductions and all salary contributions ceased. Pressure is now being brought for a city bond issue of $750,000 to last one year from May 1, which would relieve but not meet the need. No more private funds are in sight. Unless employment conditions improve, of which there is no indication, relief needs will increase. The proposed bond issue is a first step in the use of city funds for relief. Public sentiment in favor of Federal relief is weak.

New York, N. Y.: Relief funds are inadequate and will not carry the present program beyond June 1. Demands and expenditures are both increasing month by month. March, with an expenditure close to $6,000,000, is the highest to date. Relief expenditures, from all sources, public and private, from October, 1931, to April, 1932, add up to approximately $24,501,210. For the next six months, to October 1, we have available about $11,000,000. To maintain the status quo till that date that is to care for a number equivalent to those now being cared for by public and private agencies and to meet the needs of new applicants at the rate at which they are now applying would take an additional $25,000,000. By reducing the work-relief wage from three days a week to two and reducing the numbers receiving care on the theory that fewer will need help during the summer we might get by with an additional $20,000,000 for the six months. The future plan committee of the council's coordinating committee is now working on the program with Frank J. Taylor, commissioner of public welfare. I do not believe that any substantial amount will be raised privately this spring. Further public appropriations must be forthcoming. There is no evidence that business conditions are improving or that the relief load will ease off. Bankers, business men, and the press are on the whole opposed to Federal relief. (William Hodson, executive director welfare council.)

Omaha, Nebr.: Private funds have carried the bulk of unemployment relief here, up to the present, fairly adequately. But the program can not continue more than two months with funds now in sight. We hope that relief demands will begin to fall off in April, but from all indications the drop will not be the normal decrease or even the decrease experienced last year. We do not anticipate that the seasonal pick-up of unemployment will be sufficient to affect the relief load materially. (Philip L. Ketchum, director community chest.)

(NOTE.—Private funds in Omaha consistently carry 75 per cent of the outdoor relief program, and taxation for relief purposes is low. An effort is being made to secure a county appropriation of $300,000 for relief for the remainder of 1932. Should this fail an attempt will be made to induce the governor to call a special session of the legislature. A supplementary community-chest campaign this spring could not be expected to realize more than $150,000. In general, the community appears to be opposed to Federal relief.)

Philadelphia, Pa.: Relief funds are at the point of exhaustion. We have had no public funds since December 23 and we shall be most fortunate if the private funds secured through the united campaign in November last until May 1. Even should the Talbot bill for State aid be declared constitutional and the city receive $2,500,000 from that source it would last only a little more than two months. The committee for unemployment relief is spending at the rate of $50,000 a day. Sixty thousand families are receiving relief. The financial situation of Philadelphia is such that no great help can be hoped for from the city. Since pledges to the united campaign continue to fall due until next October it is difficult to see how additional private funds could be raised. Our chief hope for the future lies in the calling of a special session of the State legislature. There is no improvement in the industrial situation. Taking the community as a whole there seems to be no united sentiment in favor of Federal relief. (Karl de Schweinitz, executive secretary, community council.)

Pittsburgh, Pa.: The Allegheny County Emergency Association, with 18,000 families dependent upon it for relief, has exhausted its resources. Its outdoor relief budget, distributed through six family welfare agencies, was to have lasted until fall, but due to the continued increase in relief needs and the collapse of the outdoor relief program of the directors of the poor, it has all been expended. Funds earmarked for specific work-relief projects have been diverted to meet these relief needs, and the work program, affecting 10,000 additional families, has been suspended. This move will only carry the outdoor relief load for three weeks. The poor tax has been doubled, but funds from this source will not be available until July. Budgets of the private agencies can not carry any additional load. The city council, at the request of a joint committee from the welfare fund and the emergency association, has agreed to submit a $5,000,000 bond issue to the voters in April. The county commissioners have been asked to submit a $10,000,000 bond issue for work relief on public projects, but have not yet given their decision. The city council has appropriated $260,000 to provide relief until other funds can be secured. The directors of the poor may match this. A drive to raise 28,000 subscriptions of $100 each to carry as many families until summer has just started. At present relief demands are increasing, but at a slightly slower rate than in midwinter. Opinion has tended to regard Federal relief as a last resort, but there is probably less opposition now than several months ago, and there is still a question as to whether State and local resources have been fully tapped. (Frederick F. Stephen, director, bureau of social research, federation of social agencies.)

Providence, R. I.: I question very much whether the word "adequate" is applicable to any relief program at the present time. However, the program in Providence is operating efficiently. Public emergency relief funds will be exhausted by August 1. Last November the State appropriated $1,500,000 for unemployment relief, and an additional appropriation is now proposed to carry the program through the calendar year. It is generally agreed in Rhode Island that unemployment relief should come from tax funds and be administered by directors of public aid. We believe that more private funds could be raised this spring, but are confident that it will not be necessary. Unemployment is not increasing, but there is a rising curve of relief applications due to depleted individual resources. We expect to reach the peak the end of March, with little change during the spring months. Indications of improved employment conditions are not encouraging. This community is generally opposed to Federal relief, and it is my personal opinion that Rhode Island is well able to meet the situation for months to come. (Henry L. Burt, executive secretary community fund.)

Richmond, Va.: Funds in sight, public and private, are apparently sufficient to carry the present relief program through 1932. The adequacy of the scale of relief to maintain normal family life is open to question. Relief demands are heavier than at any time, and we anticipate little change. Unemployment seems to be static. We have no State funds for outdoor relief, but the county supervisors seem to be planning to increase appropriations for the area adjacent to the city, and we expect additional appropriations from the city. I do not believe additional private funds will be necessary this spring. The local press, the chamber of commerce, and the wealthier citizens are opposed to Federal relief, while individuals representing labor favor it. (Arthur A. Guild, director community fund.)

Rochester, N. Y.: Relief funds appropriated to date are not adequate for the balance of the calendar year, but the chest campaign will be held in May, and the municipal authorities are expected to make further appropriations. The number of cases under care apparently reached its peak in January; but as employment conditions are not noticeably improving, no immediate reduction in relief requirements is expected. Community opinion is divided on Federal relief.

San Francisco, Calif.: Funds in sight, adequate at the moment, will carry the present program to July 1, the beginning of a new municipal fiscal year. How adequate the new municipal appropriation will be we can not say. Relief demands for families are still increasing, but for single men decreasing. We anticipate March as the peak, but we do not anticipate anything better than a leveling off of the curve during the summer. November will probably bring a large increase in relief demands. More private funds might be raised this spring, but this, in my opinion, would have an unfortunate effect on the regular chest campaign next fall. The governor's State unemployment commission is studying relief conditions throughout the State and will presently hold public hearings to discuss possible participation by the State in the relief program. But no aid from this quarter can be expected before next winter, if at all. I see no indications of a sufficient revival of local industry to affect the relief needs. The usual seasonal pick-up promises to be much less than normal. There is considerable community feeling in favor of Federal relief chiefly on account of the practical difficulties of getting sufficient funds locally. Municipal officeholders seem to feel that the Federal Government should participate in the program. (Ray W. Smith, executive secretary community chest.)

Seattle, Wash.: At the moment relief funds, public and private, are adequate. The county is supplying from $125,000 to $150,000 a month for emergency relief, and I see no reason to doubt its continuance of necessary appropriations. The city, however, is running into tax limitations and further help for work relief is in doubt. Relief demands for homeless men reached a peak in late February and for families in late March. We expect a drop in relief requirements of from 20 to 30 per cent by August or September. Then, unless general conditions improve, the curve will turn upward. Those closest to the relief problem are inclined to believe that Federal relief will be necessary next winter, but there is a substantial body of influential public opinion which does not favor it. (John F. Hall, executive secretary community fund.)

Springfield, Mass.: Families on aid have tripled in a year, and expenditures for outdoor relief more than doubled. The work-relief program, with public and private effort closely coordinated, has been useful and productive. I believe that March will see the peak of the year. Even though industry shows no sign of picking up, there is more optimism in the community than I have seen for a long time. The spirit of the community is strong and I believe that whatever the needs may be they will be met. I do not believe that Federal relief would be welcome here until all other resources are exhausted. (Fred Stephenson, executive manager community chest.)

St. Louis, Mo.: Relief funds in St. Louis appear to be adequate to meet present needs. The crisis fund of approximately $1,123,000 raised early in the spring by popular subscription—$700,000 of it from wage earners, including school-teachers—plus the $600,000 promised by the city should be sufficient to carry the present program to the end of 1932. The peak of relief requirements should be past by the end of March. There has not been at any time any serious suggestion of State funds nor any indication that the community considers Federal relief as desirable or necessary. The county, an area of 1,500 square miles surrounding the city, has appropriated $23,000 for relief purposes.

and some people believe that it will get by on this. There is a general feeling and some evidence that employment is picking up, enough at least to hold relief at its present level and perhaps to ease it off a little before the end of the year. (Robert W. Kelso, community fund.)

St. Paul, Minn: I would not describe St. Paul's relief as adequate, but it is furnishing basic necessities in a way which prevents hunger and cold. City and county officials, as well as those of the chest and of private agencies, believe we can meet our obligations until 1933, when new budgets become effective, though there are certain factors which may throw off our calculations. Monthly relief bills have risen steadily to a peak of $120,000 in March. We should drop to $80,000 in April, and stick fairly close to $50,000 during the summer months. It does not now appear that additional private funds will be necessary. Employment conditions show no substantial gain, but on the other hand we do not anticipate any new large-scale dislocation. There appears to be sentiment against Federal relief, largely on account of a spirit, almost of revolt, against increased taxation. (Pierce Atwater, executive secretary, community chest.)

Washington, D. C.: Relief funds are not adequate, and a chest deficit of perhaps $300,000 for the year due to excess relief expenditures seems probable. This means that the present program could not be continued beyond October 1. President Hoover has approved a joint resolution, now before Congress, for $600,000 for outdoor relief. This, if it passes, will relieve the situation greatly. March is probably the peak month, though we expect an increase rather than a decrease in white-collar applicants. If the appropriation fails, I believe that further private funds could be raised. (Elwood Street, director community chest.)

Washington has no system of public outdoor relief. Resources of this committee, $250,000 from the community fund, will be exhausted by May 1. We are informed that about 1,000 men will be put to work on District projects on April 10 and that several thousand will be so employed by July 1. This should relieve the situation so far as laborers are concerned. (Paul L. Benjamin, executive secretary District of Columbia Committee on Employment.)

Relief demands are increasing and will probably continue to do so, as the committee on employment ceases operations during April. We believe Washington sentiment to be against Federal relief, though the local chapter of the American Association of Social Workers has approved it. (Walter S. Ufford, general secretary associated charities.)

Worcester, Mass.: Relief funds, public and private, are adequate at the moment. The community chest will not need to raise any more funds this spring, but further city appropriations will undoubtedly be necessary before the end of the fiscal year, November 30. Relief demands are still increasing, though we expect a seasonal falling off beginning in April. There is no indication of any improvement in employment conditions. I believe that the people of this city are opposed to Federal relief. (David W. Armstrong, executive secretary community chest.)

LETTER OF J. W. BATCHELLER, FORMER PRESIDENT OF THE SOUTH DAKOTA FARMERS UNION

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter written by Mr. J. W. Batcheller, former president of the South Dakota Farmers Union, to Hon. John A. Simpson, president of the National Farmers Union.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GAYVILLE, S. DAK., March 29, 1932.

MR. JOHN A. SIMPSON,
President National Farmers Union, Washington, D. C.

FRIEND J. A.: Well, this time I got you on the air and was more than pleased with all addresses, as were all the others who were listening in with me, in front of a store in Mission Hill.

Have just written Senators FRAZIER, WHEELER, and THOMAS (though words seem inadequate) my appreciation of that opportunity, of listening in, and the merchant took down the date April 23, at which time he expects to get a bigger audience for you, and incidentally more business for himself.

Some of the big dailies are getting back of the Frazier and Wheeler bills, but I don't see anything yet in the press relative to the Thomas-Swank bills. If the people had the opportunity to vote on all of those measures, they would carry strong at the polls.

Congress has now been in session until my pile of RECORDS is something like 2 feet high (piled in consecutive order) with our real relief measures out in the woods. It may be considered out of order for Congress to establish a new precedent by taking the people into consideration, but if they have sense enough "to pound sand," they should know that they have played horse long enough unless the breeding of revolution is their objective. This year, in this fine farming country, there will be a general defaulting in both taxes and interest, farmers are without ambition or hope and are stating that they are done working for nothing. One neighbor who has fine improvements but against whom foreclosure proceedings have been started says his ambition is all gone. Another told me to-day that the loaning agent called on him recently and asked him if he could pay his interest and taxes and he told him, "No"; then he was asked what he proposed to do, and he said he could do nothing but let them have the place. The agent said, "We do not want it, but we shall pay the taxes in the hope that conditions will right themselves." The farmer who has not some outside income is simply out of luck but mighty potential timber for the remonstrance that is brewing.

Personally I feel that the conditions and time are decidedly opportune for national group action against the exploiting centralized money power and that the call for organization should go out as never before, not for the organization, promotion, financing, and operation of every description of cooperative enterprise but for group action on a few fundamentals that all can understand and with but small initial expense. If Congress had vision and initiative enough to prevent a catastrophe, such would not be necessary; but Congress is hopeless as far as we are concerned, making the demand for group action that will go over their heads, imperative. If Congress is as hopeless as I view it, we are wasting valuable time with all our beseeching, pleading, and praying, for a plan of organization should be launched that would sweep the Nation.

Once a month is not often enough for your voice and message to be heard over the "national hook-up" if millions are to respond to your leadership, in whatever methods must be pursued in attaining our goal, that of saving the American farm home and popular government, and allow me to state that while we have national holidays to celebrate and laud the abilities and achievements of past leaders that neither ancient, medieval, nor modern history or times have anything on the National Farmers Union for outstanding leadership, and we propose to give you such support as you may command, so come on with your orders until this little confiscation party is blown sky high. You told us to use postal cards, but I don't know what those things are, so you will have to excuse me.

Fraternally yours,

J. W. BATCHELLER.

CAUSE OF LOW PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, so much consideration has been given to the question of overproduction as a contributing cause of low prices for agricultural products, that I find of unusual interest a series of articles written by H. M. Harden, and I ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OVERPRODUCTION IS NOT CAUSE OF LOW PRICES PAID FOR FARM PRODUCTS—STATISTICS PROVE THEORY OF OVERPRODUCTION FALSE, MISLEADING, AND UNFOUNDED, AND NOT BASIS OF PROBLEM—PRICE DECLINE CAUSED BY SCARCITY OF GOLD AND CURRENCY RESTRICTION

By H. M. Harden

A farmer down in Martin County is reported by the Fairmont Sentinel to have said at a taxpayers' meeting: "We used to get a good price for flax until the county agent told us to raise more flax. Then we got an overproduction and down came the price."

This sincere farmer is simply confused and deluded by the flood of overproduction bunk that has filled the press and the atmosphere since the general deflation of farm and commodity prices.

The production of flax, either here or abroad, has had nothing whatever to do with the great decline in its price. The United States does not produce as much flax as it consumes, and our annual imports of flaxseed average around 18,000,000 bushels. The production of flax in the United States in 1930 was 21,240,000 bushels. In 1931 the United States production was 11,018,000 bushels, yet the average farm price for flax was $2.12 in 1930 and $1.23 in 1931. The total production of flax in the 15 chief flax-growing countries of the world was 123,486,000 bushels in 1928–29; and the average American price was $2.17 per bushel. The same countries produced 122,769,000 bushels in the crop year of 1929–30, and the average American price was $2.28 per bushel. The production of these countries for 1930–31, as so far reported and estimated, was 122,347,000 bushels, or practically the same total as for the past four crop years. While total production of flax has remained comparatively stable, we find that the average American price dropped from $2.12 in 1930 to $1.23 in 1931; and the average price for January last was $1.16 per bushel. These figures prove beyond any question that there has been no overproduction of flax, either in America or abroad; yet the price paid to American farmers has fallen from an average 4-year price of $2.22 per bushel to $1.16 in January last.

Our farmer friend, who is quoted above, is in error in blaming his county agent for the low price of flax. In fact, his county agent had ample reasons for urging farmers to increase flax acreage on clean, well-prepared land. As stated above, this country is a flax-importing country, and there is a tariff of 65 cents a bushel on flax that is effective under normal conditions and raises the American price of flax far above the world price. Consequently the county agent had good grounds upon which to advise increased flax production upon lands well adapted and well prepared for this crop.

NO OVERPRODUCTION OF CORN

When we study the corn-price situation we also find, as with flax, that there has been no overproduction of corn. In fact, we find that there has been decreased production of corn. The average annual production of corn for the years 1923–1926, inclusive, was 2,740,000,000 bushels, and the average price received by farmers in that period was 85 cents per bushel. In the 4-year period of 1927–1930, inclusive, the average corn production was 2,569,000,000 bushels, and the average price received during that period was 83 cents per bushel. It will be noted that during the 8-year period of 1923–1930, inclusive, corn production was practically stable, and so was the price. The production of corn in 1931 was 2,081,000,000 bushels, or 574,000,000 bushels less than the average for the preceding eight years. Was this overproduction? Still we find that the price of corn following this short crop has fallen from an 8-year average of 84 cents per bushel to 33 cents per bushel in January, 1932.

NO OVERPRODUCTION OF HOGS

We find exactly the same conditions in hog production and prices as with flax and corn. Hog prices are at the lowest levels for a generation. The purchasing power of hogs was in December and January last the lowest it has been in 54 years. Has there been such a tremendous overproduction of hogs as to cause such a condition as this? Let us see. The average number of hogs in this country for the four years 1923–1926, inclusive, was 60,740,000 head; and the average price received by farmers in that period was $9.35 per hundredweight. The average number of hogs in the country in the 4-year period of 1927–1930 was 56,513,000, and the average price received was $9.17 per hundredweight. The number of hogs in the country in 1931 was 58,955,000, and the year's average price received dropped to $5.89 per hundredweight. There were 2,745,000 fewer hogs in the country in 1931 than in the 4-year period of 1923–1926, inclusive. Still the average price received in this 4-year period was $9.35 per hundredweight, and the yearly average of 1931 was $5.89, and it dropped to $3.76 per hundredweight in December and January last. With more than 2,000,000 less hogs in 1931 than in 1923–1926, the farmers sold their hogs last December and January for $5.59 per hundredweight less than in 1923–1926, or for $11.18 less per 200-pound pig. That made a difference to Minnesota farmers of only $33,000,000 a year. So this price fall does not amount to anything very serious, though it might possibly affect farmers' "hoardings" a trifle. All of the figures as to production and prices given above are taken from the reports of the United States Department of Agriculture.

UNDERCONSUMPTION AND OVERPRODUCTION

The great decline in farm prices can not be truthfully attributed to an overproduction of farm crops. There is a temporary oversupply of wheat and cotton in America, owning not so much to overproduction as to decreased buying power and economic conditions in foreign countries and to trade barriers erected in retaliation for the prohibitive industrial rates contained in the Grundy-Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act. Wheat and cotton are our great surplus crops; and as long as American farmers are denied by our Coolidges and Hoovers an effective tariff on these surplus crops, we are at the mercy of foreign conditions and markets. However, the price of wheat and cotton has not fallen more precipitately or more proportionately than have the prices of corn or hogs or flax, or than farm prices as a whole.

It is nothing new to hear the cry of "overproduction" in times of panic like the present. It has always been so. In every panic that history records half-baked pseudoeconomists have said that the falling price levels were due to overproduction, and the press and platform have parroted the falsehood, innocently usually, and with intent and purpose by some. And there are many people who give but casual thought to such subjects, who confuse underconsumption with overproduction. Something may happen, such as great unemployment, that will seriously affect the consumption of food or other products. But this is a problem of consumption, not production. The fact that unemployment and general business depression results in the slackening of building and construction activities and the consequent decrease in the demand for lumber or for flax for linseed oil and paints, for instance, does not imply at all that there is an overproduction of lumber or of flax. The per capita production of either may have remained stable over a long period of years, or even have decreased, yet the price might fall under such conditions. Obviously this would in no respect be a problem of production.

MONETARY CONDITIONS CAUSE DECLINE

The fact of the matter is that we are now in the midst of a general commodity price decline; and in this situation the farmer, as always, stands naked in the economic storm. The real cause of this price decline is a monetary one, not one of production. Just a point here. In 1929 an ounce of gold would buy 1,260 pounds of corn. In June, 1931, it required 2,033 pounds of corn to buy an ounce of gold. Yet the 1930 corn crop was the smallest crop in 29 years. We find a similar situation with hogs. In 1929 an ounce of gold would exchange for 194 pounds of hogs in Chicago.

In 1931 it required 318 pounds of hogs at Chicago to buy an ounce of gold, though the supply of hogs then was 10 per cent less than in 1929. The value of gold, by which everything else is measured, has gone up, and commodity price levels have necessarily come down. General declines in price levels adversely affect all lines of business as we are seeing them affected at the present time. Debts are doubled and trebled; the same with taxes and all dollar-fixed charges. The most potent cause of panics is a fluctuating price level, and conversely, the most potent remedy for their prevention is a stabilized price level. Farmers are the greatest sufferers through fluctuating price levels because they are by nature wholly unable to control production, and unorganized and unable to control what they do produce. Price levels can be controlled and maintained through national currency and credit control. Inflations can be launched that will raise price levels, as was done during the late World War. Deflations that precipitately cause price declines can be brought about through curtailing currency circulation and through credit restrictions, as farmers well found out in 1920 and as everybody else found out in 1929. What is needed to be done is to restore commodity price levels to the 1921–1929 average and then keep them there. It can be done. There is no question about that at all. We possess all the necessary governmental and financial machinery to accomplish this end. All that we need is the will to see that our Federal servants do as we want done.

DEBTS HAVE MULTIPLIED

Average prices now paid to farmers for their products are 60 per cent less than they received before the World War. The debts owed by farmers have been multiplied by four in terms of commodities with which they must pay them. This is a situation so serious that it is, in fact, dangerous. Farmers are not responsible for bringing about this condition because they "overproduced" their crops. That theory is bunk and piffle; pure and unadulterated. However, farmers will be responsible for the continuation of such conditions if they supinely submit to the present dishonest monetary and economic system and permit themselves to be defrauded out of the just fruits of their investments and their toil.

FARMERS' ECONOMIC STATUS NOT GENERALLY UNDERSTOOD—PROSPERITY WILL NOT RETURN UNTIL BUYING PRICE HAS BEEN RESTORED—OVERPRODUCTION OF FARM CROPS NOT THE CAUSE OF LOW PRICES

By H. M. Harden

Ever since the beginning of the deflation of agriculture in 1921 wheat and its producers have featured the newspaper headlines, and doubtless the average citizen sincerely believes that the entire American farm problem is wrapped up in wheat alone. Nothing could be further from the truth. Wheat is, in fact, almost a minor farm crop in America. It accounts for less than 10 per cent of the normal annual income of our farmers. True, wheat growers have suffered economically for many years. So have other farm producers, but the wheat grower has received 99 per cent of the publicity.

The tremendous reductions in farm prices have affected every farm producer, not simply the wheat producer. The general level of farm prices to-day is at the lowest point in a quarter of a century. The farmer's dollar is at the lowest ebb in American history. The index number of prices paid to farmers in the United States, based upon 100 for the period 1910–1914, was, in May, 1931, down to 84, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. This was a drop of 45 points in one year and 62 points below 1929. In October, 1931, the index number of prices paid to farmers fell to 68, a drop of 16 points since May of last year. Since then farm prices have fallen still further, and now in midwinter we have 10-cent eggs, 20-cent butter, and 3-cent hogs.

LAND PRICES FALL

Reflected in farm-land prices this condition shows, according to the Yearbook of Agriculture, farm-land values in Indiana, for example, are 28 per cent below their pre-war figures. Indiana is not a "wheat State" or a "1-crop" State, nor can its farms well be classed as "marginal lands." What wonder that farm-mortgage foreclosures are rampant the Nation over? What wonder that the Minnesota Rural Credits Bureau finds more than 2,000 farms upon its hands with hundreds more to follow?

Minnesota and Wisconsin are the two greatest dairy States in the Union. The Federal farm statistician at Madison states that milk producers in Wisconsin are receiving below $1 per hundred pounds average for their product. The same conditions, of course, prevail in Minnesota, and our butter producers are to-day in the sorriest economic plight they have ever faced. Possibly there are some "sick" dairy farmers as well as sick wheat farmers that we read so much about in the public prints.

MINNESOTA FARMERS' LOSS

For some definite figures on what has been going on in the economic status of the farmers of Minnesota let us refer to the statistics of 1929 and 1930. In Minnesota the value of all the 1930 crop is given by the State Department of Agriculture as $87,477,000 less than the value of the 1929 crop; though the production was almost exactly equal. The same authority shows that the decline in the value of all the livestock on Minnesota farms was $76,810,000 in this same period. This gives a total loss in values suffered by Minnesota farmers of $162,000,000 in a single year. This, by the way, is almost the exact amount of money that Andy Mellon handed back to himself and other multimillionaires out of the United States Treasury that same year. This terrific loss was in the State of Minnesota alone, the greatest butter State in America, and the State in which farmer cooperation has reached its greatest development and achieved its highest ideals on this continent. And remember that dairy products are practically the only products of the farm to which the tariff is more than a meaningless scrap of paper. But 20-cent butter, 10-cent eggs, and 3-cent hogs don't spell so much prosperity after all. Evidently the old familiar formula for farm prosperity, the "cow, the sow, and the hen," which has done such valiant duty for city newspaper space fillers and pseudo farm papers for a generation, has lost some of its potency.

HIGH TAXES AND FIXED COSTS

In the face of these price conditions for the products that he has to sell, the farmer finds himself up against the highest fixed charges that he has ever known. His direct annual taxes have increased from $344,000,000 in the United States in 1914 to over $999,000,000 at the present time. The prices of farm machinery have increased at least 75 per cent above pre-war figures. It required 540 pounds of butterfat to purchase a twine binder in Minnesota in 1914. To-day it requires 1,000 pounds of butterfat to make the same purchase. Even a greater spread is shown when all farm products are included. Freight rates, which the farmer pays coming and going and with no opportunity to pass on to others, are 150 per cent over pre-war rates. It requires to-day from two to four times the amount of farm products to pay the farmers' fixed costs and marketing than it did in 1914.

The farmers of the United States have lost over $25,000,000,000 in the total value of their property since 1920, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. In the same period the farmers' buying power has been reduced to the extent of more than $10,000,000,000. Is it any wonder that thousands of factories are closed and that millions of unemployed men are walking our streets?

THE "BUNK" OF OVERPRODUCTION

We are told upon every hand that the terrific decline in farm prices is caused by overproduction. This is the same excuse that has been given in every panic since history has been recorded, so it is not strange that it is given in the Hoover panic. There has never been a real overproduction of food products in the world since Joseph stored the surplus of the "seven fat years" in Egypt in Biblical times. Never have statistical data been forthcoming to prove that there was an overproduction of food and textile products the world over. There will be none to prove it now. The per capita production of farm products is to-day less than it ever has been in America. The per capita production of food products the world over has never in all history exceeded the growth of population. There has been an overproduction of "overproduction bunk," that is all. Dr. G. F. Warren, of Cornell University, and recognized as the greatest farm economist in America, says in a recent publication: "Frequently some one sees one factor that is a minor one and attributes everything to this. The most striking cases of such misrepresentation occurred after the Napoleonic wars and after the World War. In each case common opinion attributed the fall in prices to overproduction. No one has presented any statistical evidence of overproduction. The line of reasoning is about as follows: 'Overproduction causes low prices. Prices have fallen precipitously, therefore there is enormous overproduction.'" Further, Doctor Warren says: "Popular opinion attributes the depression to overproduction. According to this explanation, the world is producing so much that it can not possibly be sold; therefore numbers of persons are not able to buy their necessities. According to this theory, if each of us is to have more, each must produce less."

REAL PRODUCTION DECLINED

The United States produced over 3,124,000,000 bushels of corn in 1912. It has not produced as much in any year for the past 11 years. This country produced 16,134,000 bales of cotton in 1914, 17 years ago. This production has been equaled but once since then. The production of farm crops of all kinds has not increased, nor has the per capita acreage of crop land. The National Industrial Conference Board found that the per capita acreage of crop land declined over 16 per cent in the period from 1900 to 1925. This same authority found that the per capita production of farm crops in the United States was less in the period of 1922 to 1925 than in the period of 1910 to 1914.

The board further states that between 1920 and 1925 there was a decline of about 13 per cent in the number of livestock on farms. The decrease is still greater at the present time. There were 64,507,000 cattle on farms in the United States in 1914. In 1930 there were 57,976,000 cattle, or a reduction of 6,540,000 head. There were 69,000,000 hogs on American farms in 1923; in 1930 there were but 52,000,000, or a reduction of 17,000,000 head.

Again quoting Doctor Warren, of Cornell, "the production of crops in 1930 was the lowest per capita production that has occurred at any time in the last 40 years. The total crop production per capita of 1930 was 8 per cent less than 1929."

CROP-PRODUCTION CONTROL

The same people who are urging the false theory of "overproduction," talk about crop-production control through acreage control. This is so impossible, so utterly silly, that it would seem that no man whose knowledge of plant growth and agriculture extends as far as the growing of a row of radishes in his backyard would ever propose it. An area of 53,000,000 acres of wheat in 1914 produced 891,000,000 bushels. In 1929, an area of 61,000,000 acres of wheat produced 800,000,000 bushels. This shows that 8,000,000 acres less produced 91,000,000 bushels more in 1914 than in 1929. In 1914, 36,000,000 acres of cotton produced 16,000,000 bales. In 1928, 45,000,000 acres of cotton produced 14,000,000 bales. Nine million acres less produced 2,000,000 more bales.

The National Industrial Conference Board report states, "The fluctuations in yield per acre are a more important factor in the instability of agricultural income than the changes in acreage." Mordecai Ezekiel, agricultural economist of the United States Department of Agriculture, says in his Kinds of Agricultural Surpluses: "During the last 20 years, 95 per cent of the changes in spring wheat production were due to differences in yield, and 85 per cent of corn production differences were likewise caused by yield changes. As a whole, perhaps, three-quarters of the annual variation in crop production is due to yield and lies beyond human control through acreage adjustments." It is readily evident that the matter of crop control through acreage control is a brilliant example of the tail trying to wag the dog. Weather, weeds, plant diseases, and pests are the major factors in crop production, as anyone knows whose farm experience extends at all beyond the curbstones of a city street.

THE FARM-BOARD PROGRAM

After the disastrous and tremendously expensive gambling excursion of the Federal Farm Board in the market pits of the country, it now comes forward with "acreage reduction and farm production limited to domestic consumption" as the only relief for distressed agriculture. Well, what more could be reasonably expected from this board and the agricultural marketing act? As Wallace's Farmer, of Iowa, says: "Farmers never took much stock in the plan for handling the surplus laid down in the Hoover farm bill. They expected little from it and are not disappointed. Since a half-baked program that nobody wanted collapsed, it is insisted that no control of the surplus is possible, and that the only thing left is to drive more farmers to town to add to the city bread lines until acreage is reduced to a point where annual production will just satisfy domestic demands. The administration has no other remedy for the farm surplus than the old one—starve more farmers out until production is reduced to fit domestic demand."

Already more than 5,000,000 farmers have been driven from the land by the economic collapse of agriculture during the past 10 years. Eight million or more able-bodied men are walking the streets vainly seeking employment to keep themselves and their families from starvation. Medical and social welfare authorities tell us that more than 6,000,000 American children are suffering from malnutrition. An economic conference in Europe last winter announced that there were 900,000,000 people in the world on the verge of hunger. In the face of such conditions it is almost criminal to talk of the overproduction of foodstuffs and suggest reducing the world supply of food. Such is the philosophy of defeat and despair and an admittance that civilization itself is a dismal failure.

MUST BE SURPLUS CONTROLLED

The problem of handling American crops produced in excess of domestic consumption, so at least that tariffs will be made effective upon that portion consumed at home is possible of solution. A measure to this effect, the McNary-Haugen bill, was twice passed by large majorities by both Houses of Congress. It was vetoed by Calvin Coolidge, with Herbert Hoover at his back urging him on.

Continuing to permit these temporary and seasonal crop surpluses to depress our domestic markets to world-price levels is to deny an American market to our truly basic and all-important industry. Why should not all classes of citizens recognize our national farm problem as it actually is and seek to grant agriculture economic equality with other industry?

Why not face the problem like men and dispense with the twaddle of farmers doing this or that on their farms, switching from this crop to that crop, and all such devilish nonsense? If, for instance, we reduce our wheat acreage, what are we going to produce on those abandoned acres? If we devote them to barley, oats, rye, corn, cattle, hogs, sheep, poultry, or dairy products, we but increase the surplus or near surplus of each of these, and our economic situation is in no way bettered. Substituting one surplus crop for another answers no question or solves no problem. If we abandon the acres to tares and thistles, it but means that a few more million farmers are forced to the labor-glutted cities to join the march of the 8,000,000 who are now walking the streets and existing through measly charity in the richest Nation in the world which refuses to feed its starving citizens.

It is undesirable and even dangerous for the Nation to face a possible shortage of food crops, so if society is wise it must sooner or later solve the problem of surplus crop production in a way that will not destroy agriculture and the very basis of our civilization. It is as impossible to foretell the yield of farm crops as it is to stay the course of the suns through space, so why prattle about controlled production?

Let us face this farm problem as it really is, and let each and every branch of agriculture recognize the mutual interest that inevitably exists between them. And let all of us recognize the incontrovertible fact that all other factors influencing our economic welfare as a nation are inseparably bound up with the welfare of agriculture.

COMPARISON OF 1913 PRICES WITH 1931 SHOWS FARM STATUS—FIGURES TELL STORY OF DECLINE OF PRICES OF FARM PRODUCTS

By H. M. Harden

The deplorable economic situation of farmers is hardly sensed by other classes of our people. It may be readily granted that "times are hard" for farmers, but, so they are for millions of other people just now. However, farmers as a whole, with the exception of a few particularly favored groups, such as the dairymen, have been suffering economic hardship since the great deflation of agriculture engineered by the Federal reserve bank in 1920. Still, during that same period the urban population of the country enjoyed a measure of general prosperity that reached its zenith in 1928 and 1929. It was said that the Nation was prosperous, forgetting for the time that our agriculture as a whole was not prosperous. This group, consisting of practically one-third of our population, and the producers of our greatest annual new wealth, was not sharing in the prosperity enjoyed by the industrial groups of the Nation.

On the other hand their debts were increasing, their taxes more than doubling, and the spread between the prices they received and the prices they paid ever widening. They were paying the cruel price of currency deflation years before its dire effects reached the urban centers.

The table below depicts in the most striking manner possible the unhappy price situation of the farmer. Added to this is the further fact that the farmer bears a most unjust share of the total tax burden from which he has no escape under our present system of taxation. This table shows the amount of the various farm products required in North Dakota to purchase a given amount of farm machinery in 1913 and in June, 1931.

The column at the left shows the amount of the different farm products required to purchase a twine binder, a grain drill, a 2-bottom gang plow, and a wagon in North Dakota in 1913. The column at the right shows the amount of the same products required to make the same purchase in June, 1931. The figures are from the department of farm economics of the North Dakota Agricultural College at Fargo.

Here are the figures:

		1913	June, 1931
Barley	bushels	1,176	6,341
Rye	do	982	5,470
Flax	do	354	627
Wheat	do	604	2,051
Beef cattle	pounds	8,727	18,000
Hogs	do	6,637	17,200
Sheep	do	9,816	27,800
Lambs	do	7,854	12,800
Wool	do	2,945	8,000
Butterfat	do	1,745	4,415
Poultry	do	4,446	7,449
Eggs	dozens	2,244	7,351

These figures apply directly to North Dakota, but exactly the same general price situation exists the Nation over. The prices of some farm products have changed slightly since last June; some have fallen radically, notably hogs and butterfat.

It would be well if every city resident in the land could see this table and grasp its portent. It pretty well tells the tale of "what ails agriculture."

STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are no resolutions coming over from a previous day.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate, being the bill providing appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, and so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This being the regular morning hour, the calendar is in order. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be laid before the Senate. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9349) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

PUBLIC WORKS BOND ISSUE—AMENDMENT TO REVENUE BILL

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the revenue bill, which will shortly be brought to the Senate, and ask that it may be printed at this place in my remarks and also that it may be printed in the regular form and lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be received, printed, and lie on the table, and will also be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. TYDINGS to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, is as follows:

TITLE—EMERGENCY CONSTRUCTION ACT OF 1932

SEC. —. (a) There is hereby created a special fund in the Treasury to be known as the "emergency construction fund" and to be administered by the Secretary of the Treasury as hereinafter provided. For the purpose of providing funds to carry out the provisions of this title the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to borrow on the credit of the United States a sum not to exceed $1,500,000,000 and to issue bonds therefor to be known as "emergency construction bonds" in such form as he may prescribe. Such bonds shall be in denominations of not less than $50, shall mature in not less than 10 years from the date of their issue as hereinafter provided, and shall bear interest payable semiannually at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not to exceed 4¼ per cent per annum. The principal and interest of such bonds shall be payable in United States gold coin of the present standard of value, and such bonds shall be exempt both as to principal and interest from all taxation (except estate and inheritance taxes and surtaxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

(b) Such bonds shall be offered at not less than par as a popular loan under such regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury as will give all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to participate therein. Any portion of the bonds so offered and not subscribed for may be otherwise disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par. No commission shall be allowed or paid in connection with the sale or other disposition of any such bonds. All amounts derived from the sale of such bonds shall be paid into the emergency construction fund.

(c) That in issuing the said bonds for said loan the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue certificates, according to what is known as the serial annuity plan, and each series as issued shall be lettered, beginning with the letter "A," and so on down the alphabet until the entire amount of $1,500,000,000 shall have been issued, so that the entire principal shall be redeemable as follows:

Series	Amount	Redeemable
"A"	$150,000,000	1 year from date of issue.
"B"	150,000,000	2 years from date of issue.
"C"	150,000,000	3 years from date of issue.
"D"	150,000,000	4 years from date of issue.
"E"	150,000,000	5 years from date of issue.
"F"	150,000,000	6 years from date of issue.
"G"	150,000,000	7 years from date of issue.
"H"	150,000,000	8 years from date of issue.
"I"	150,000,000	9 years from date of issue.
"J"	150,000,000	10 years from date of issue.

(d) As soon after the passage of this act as may be practicable the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause said bonds to be prepared and shall advertise them for sale in such manner as he may prescribe: Provided, however, That in the event all of said bonds are not sold promptly upon said offering by the Secretary of the Treasury he shall again offer the bonds remaining unsold at the next earliest practicable date and make such adjustment with the purchasers of said bonds as to interest as the difference between the date of said bonds and the time of purchase shall make necessary.

(e) Said bond issue shall bear a date to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury and not longer than 60 days after the passage of this act.

SEC. —. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions and limitations of the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, it shall hereafter be lawful to manufacture, sell, transport, furnish, and possess without obtaining permits therefor (except such permits as may be required under the internal revenue laws or regulations made pursuant thereto), beer or other similar fermented liquor containing 2.75 per cent or less of alcohol by volume; but no such beer or other liquor may be sold, transported, or furnished except in bottles of pint or half-pint capacity. The provisions and limitations of section 37 of title 2 of such act, as amended and supplemented, shall apply to the manufacture of such beer or other similar liquor; except that where there is developed in such manufacture beer or other similar fermented liquor containing more than 2.75 per cent of alcohol by volume, such liquor may be withdrawn from the factory or otherwise disposed of upon the reduction of the alcoholic content thereof to 2.75 per cent by volume, or less.

(b) There shall be levied, collected, and paid on all beer and other similar fermented liquor, containing one-half of 1 per cent by volume, or more, of alcohol, brewed or manufactured, and hereafter sold, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States, by whatever name such liquor may be called, in lieu of all other internal-revenue taxes imposed thereon, a tax at the rate of 24 cents per gallon, to be collected under the provisions of existing law; except that (1) such tax shall be paid by means of stamps to be affixed to each bottle, and canceled or destroyed, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and (2) the provisions of existing law prohibiting the bottling of fermented liquors on brewery premises shall not apply to beer or other similar fermented liquor manufactured under the provisions of this section.

SEC. —. All taxes levied in the preceding section shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and the first $150,000,000 per annum so received, plus an amount equal to such interest as may be due on the bond issue hereinbefore referred to, shall be kept in a special fund for the purpose of the payment of interest due, and of redeeming said bonds in accordance with said serial plan hereinbefore provided, and any amount over and above the amount required for said redemption and interest shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. —. (a) The emergency construction fund shall be used for the purpose of providing for the emergency construction of certain authorized public works with a view to increasing employment and carrying out the policy declared in the employment stabilization act of 1931. The following amounts are hereby appropriated from such funds: To the Department of Agriculture, $252,314,755; to the Department of Commerce, $3,424,582; to the Department of the Interior, $200,843,300; to the Department of Justice, $4,100,000; to the Department of Labor, $71,170; to the Navy Department, $25,109,000; to the State Department, $1,453,520; to the Treasury Department, $33,949,950; to the War Department, $420,014,130; to the Architect of the Capitol, $15,037,083; to the Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission, $2,750,000; to the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission, $500,000; to the Inland Waterways Corporation, $815,000; to the Mount Rushmore Memorial, $350,000; to the Panama Canal, $11,250,000; to the Office of Public Buildings and Public Parks, $1,250,000; to the Smithsonian Institution, $6,500,000; to the Veterans' Administration, $20,232,000; to the municipal government of the District of Columbia, $3,535,400; and for rivers and harbors improvements, flood-control projects, and the building of additional roads, $400,000,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall allocate the $400,000,000 above mentioned to said rivers and harbors improvements, flood-control projects, and roads in such amounts as he may deem wise. All amounts to roads shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture among the several States in the manner provided by section 21 of the Federal highway act, as amended, and shall be available for expenditure on highway projects approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, in the same manner, so far as practicable, as other funds appropriated for carrying out the provisions of such act; except that no part of such amounts apportioned to any State need be matched by the States. (b) The amounts so appropriated, except the $400,000,000 above mentioned, shall be expended on the authorized construction projects covered by the report of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board transmitted to the Senate January 25, 1932, pursuant to Senate Resolution No. 127, Seventy-second Congress, first session, agreed to January 7, 1932, and shall be made available at such times and in such amounts as may be necessary to complete such projects at the earliest practicable date. In the event that an appropriation has heretofore been made for any such project the amount thereof shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. —. This title may be cited as the "Emergency construction act of 1932."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, last winter when we discussed the La Follette-Costigan bill, so-called, I believe that many who were sympathetic to its aims voted against it, not because it was not needed but because the revenue with which to carry on the relief work was not available, the bill did not provide the means of raising the revenue, and we were confronted with an increase in our national deficit if we voted to support that bill without revenue-raising provisions being incorporated therein.

The amendment, which I have offered provides for a $1,500,000,000 bond issue to carry on all the construction projects which have heretofore been authorized by Congress, and, in addition thereto, $400,000,000 for rivers and harbors, flood control, and good roads, the road appropriation not having to be matched by similar appropriations from the States. The amendment also provides the means of raising the revenue to amortize this bond issue. The bond issue would be upon the serial annuity plan and would be liquidated in full in 10 years, at the rate of $150,000,000 per annum plus the interest on the outstanding bonds from year to year; so that the amount of revenue required to discharge this bond issue would be about $200,000,000 annually.

The projects to be undertaken are set out briefly in the amendment. The Department of Agriculture would have allocated to it, in round numbers, $252,000,000; the Department of Commerce, $3,400,000; the Department of the Interior, $200,800,000; the Department of Justice, $4,100,000; the Department of Labor, $71,000; the Navy Department, $25,109,000; the State Department, $1,453,000; the Treasury Department, $33,900,000; the War Department, $420,000,000; the Architect of the Capitol, $15,000,000; the Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission, $2,750,000; the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission, $500,000; the Inland Waterways Corporation, $815,000; the Mount Rushmore Memorial, $350,000; the Panama Canal, $11,250,000; the Office of Public Buildings and Public Parks, $1,250,000; the Smithsonian Institute, $6,500,000; the Veterans' Administration, $20,232,000; the Municipal Government of the District of Columbia, $3,535,000. These sums in the aggregate will require about $1,000,000,000 of revenue. In addition to the above, provision is made to expend an additional $400,000,000 on river and harbor projects, flood-control projects, and roads, making a total expenditure of $1,500,000,000.

Congress has heretofore authorized about a billion dollars' worth of construction for which appropriations have not been made. This plan would make money immediately available to start each and all of those construction projects. One billion five hundred million dollars is, roughly, about $100 per capita, or about $400 for each family in the United States, and by amortizing the debt gradually over a period of 10 years no very large amount of money would be needed.

I intend to offer this amendment to the tax bill in two forms. The first one, in which I have presented it this morning, provides that the revenue shall be raised by legalizing the sale of 2.75 per cent beer and placing a tax of 24 cents a gallon upon it, which, according to the figures we have from the Government departments, will raise about $500,000,000 annually. The beer would be sold only in bottles. A 3-cent stamp tax would be placed upon a pint bottle, and so on, graduated for various sizes.

In the event that that amendment is defeated, I then hope to have another available putting an additional tax upon luxuries to raise a sufficient sum of money to amortize the bond issue; for example, a stamp tax on checks of larger denominations than $10; a tax upon shoes costing more than $6 a pair; a tax upon clothing costing more than $50 a suit.

Perhaps neither of these plans will be adopted. I hope that one or the other will be; and I hope that the one I have offered to-day will be the one which will be adopted, because it places no new tax upon any present commodity that is legal. It does not increase income taxes. It does not increase inheritance taxes. It does not increase the excise taxes on automobiles or radios or refrigerators; but it picks out an article which is now being sold in unlimited quantities, and from which the criminal element of our country is reaping millions upon millions of dollars, and makes it bear the total cost of a $1,500,000,000 employment campaign.

Need I recite briefly the conditions which exist in the country? The State of Mississippi already owns 25 per cent of its entire area, because it has been forced to take over that land through tax sales. The school-teachers in that State have not been paid for a year. In Chicago they have not been paid for a very long time. Distress messages reach Congress daily. Senators rise every morning and read long telegrams and letters into the RECORD. Editorials are written about the matter; and yet, in my judgment, there is no chance of getting a relief bill through this Congress unless the means of furnishing the money to pay the bond issue necessary are provided in the bill which authorizes that bond issue.

Therefore it was thought that many Members perhaps would vote for a relief proposal if the money were provided with which to carry it out. At the time the La Follette-Costigan bill was being debated I heard many men say that they would be glad to vote for the measure if the revenue were at hand with which to pay for the work it contemplated. The revenue is at hand in this amendment. Not only will this small tax raise enough money to pay the sinking-fund requirements and the interest on the bonds, but it will raise $300,000,000 annually besides, which can go into the General Treasury and be used for regular governmental expenditures.

The money derived from this tax, as provided in the amendment, would go into a specially dedicated fund in the Treasury. It would not be mixed with the general revenues but would be segregated to the reconstruction sinking fund; and after enough money had come in each year to pay the sinking-fund requirements for that year, plus the interest, the Secretary of the Treasury could transfer the overage, or the amount not so required, for general expenditure purposes of the Government.

A short while ago there was a famous trial in this country. A notorious gangster by the name of Al Capone, after the expenditure of $500,000, was haled before the bar of justice, not to answer for racketeering, not to answer for bootlegging, not to answer for vice, not to answer for graft, not to answer for murder, not to answer for the distress which his organization had brought upon the city of Chicago, but for what? He was brought before the bar of justice for failure to pay his income tax on his ill-gotten gains! Thus the Government, by indirection, shared in the profits which this man had accumulated, we are told, by the conduct of the largest racket in all the pages of history.

If we can take that kind of money, and can not put this business out of business, it strikes me that we can at least raise the alcoholic content, not to 4 or 5 or 6 per cent but to 2.75 per cent, which I am told by leading medical authorities is the dividing line between what is and what is not an intoxicating beverage. With 10,000,000 people unemployed in America, with a distress already great and destined to be infinitely greater next winter, with community funds unable to cope with the situation now and the prospect of not having such community funds next year because of the increasing depression, what are we going to do to take care of these people when the snows of next November and December fall? Perhaps they are quiet now because it is warm, because there is yet some hope in the springtime or in the harvest to come, or in the milder days which are in contrast to those of last winter, when sufficient fuel and food and clothing was not available; but this winter what are we going to do?

Those men who think we should do nothing, whether they be rich or poor, are but inviting their own destruction. The thing that has happened in other countries can happen here if we are not wise enough to anticipate the situation, and to provide for it to the best of our ability.

Next winter the prospects are that at least 10,000,000 people will still be without employment. They will in many cases be without food and clothing and shelter; yet we have made no provision for them in this Congress. I understand that we are to adjourn in about 60 days; and if that happens possibly nothing will be done by this Congress unless we are reconvened to consider what will then be an extremely grave problem.

It does seem to me that the part of godliness, the part of statesmanship, the part of humanity and the part of common sense dictate that we should levy this tax upon the one thing which will furnish the necessary revenue without injury to business, without hurt to any individual, and thereby secure the funds to enable this huge program of a billion and a half dollars to be put into effect immediately.

I venture to say that if we get through the present depression with no worse situation than we have to-day, and next November and December and January come without community funds sufficient to handle the situation, with no increase in employment, and probably a decrease, it will be too late then to do what we can do now by levying this simple tax upon 2.75 per cent beer.

Think of it! Here is a source of revenue which will provide $500,000,000 annually to a Government which is $2,500,000,000 in the red at this hour; to a Congress which is sitting day after day and combing the whole economic fabric to find where it can levy another dollar of taxation in order to get the means of balancing the Budget and providing sufficient money to run the Government.

Do we go out and tax this unlawful industry, this beer racket? Of course not. We raise the income taxes. We put taxes upon automobiles and radios and refrigerators. We put taxes upon admissions to moving-picture theaters and amusements of all kinds. We further take from the people the little money they have left through the form of this taxation, while we let Mr. Capone and his ilk conduct a business upon which not a single dollar of taxation is levied; and we call ourselves righteous in permitting this illegal product to enrich the pockets of gangsters, while 10,000,000 people storm the streets and ask for employment and many more millions are in want of food and clothing and shelter.

I have made from time to time in this body some remarks against prohibition. It is not my purpose to-day to make a speech either for or against prohibition. I purposely fixed the amount of alcoholic content in this beer at 2.75 per cent because the medical authorities said that that much alcohol in beer is not intoxicating. Therefore I ask those who feel that prohibition is a wise thing what justification is there in voting against this amendment if the product upon which the tax is laid is not intoxicating?

There is no magic in the figure of one-half of 1 per cent. We all know why that figure was inserted in the Volstead Act. It was not because a beverage containing 1 per cent of alcohol is intoxicating—ah, no! Everybody conceded that a beverage having 1 per cent of alcohol by volume is not intoxicating; but the figure was inserted in the act because it was thought that if we approached too close to the point where a beverage ceased to be nonintoxicating that fact would be taken advantage of by the illicit brewer and it would be very difficult to get convictions.

I am not thinking about the illicit brewer. He is here. He is in every town and hamlet and village and countryside and city and State in this country. He is making millions and is financing crimes in all its horrible ramifications. He has furnished the money to employ annually his legal staff. His policemen are on the pay roll; and quite often—I say it with shame—his slimy hand reaches up to the judiciary itself, because through political manipulations, unfortunately, some of those high officials are not beyond the gangster's reach. I am not thinking of the gangster. I am thinking of the unemployed of the coming winter.

Defeat this amendment if you will. Say you will not put this tax on 2.75 per cent beer. Defeat this program, and provide no revenue to carry it out in another way, and I make the prophecy that next winter we will rue the day when we did not use this expedient as a means of providing a fund to raise a billion and a half dollars to defray the cost of putting this large building program into operation, employing millions of people, giving them a chance to earn a decent and respectable living, and at the same time dealing a terrific blow at that criminal element which has enriched itself while 10,000,000 people are out of work, 40,000,000 are poorly cared for, and the gangster rides through the streets in his Rolls-Royce, with thousands of dollars in his pockets. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

STATE, JUSTICE, JUDICIARY, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9349) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, the pending amendment being that of the Committee on Appropriations, on page 69, line 24, before the word "Provided," to strike out " $200,000 " and insert " $175,000," so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of Commerce, under such regulations as he may prescribe, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to establish in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce a foreign commerce service of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1927," approved April 12, 1930 (46 Stat. 163), to furnish the officers in the foreign commerce service of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce stationed in a foreign country, without cost to them and within the limits of this appropriation, allowances for living quarters, heat, and light, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1765 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 70), $175,000.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement, prepared at my request, on the effect of the reduction in the bill providing for foreign and domestic commerce. I hope that something may be done before the bill is finally passed looking to a reconsideration of this item.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

DUPLICATION BETWEEN STATE AND COMMERCE OFFICERS ABROAD

There was a time when the rivalry between consular and foreign commerce officers in the field caused unwarranted duplication of effort. It was a natural result of the introduction of the new commercial attaché service in 1914. Before any effective steps could be taken to eliminate the duplication, misunderstandings arose between the two departments in Washington and there followed a period when the relations between the two services left considerable to be desired. After many efforts to iron out the differences the two departments finally got together in 1929 on a really friendly cooperative basis and the functions of the two services were carefully defined in an agreement that has completely altered the former competitive attitude of the two departments.

The new plan of cooperation was tried out first in England, where it became effective in April, 1930. The complete success of the plan later led to its adoption in France and Germany, where it has also worked out to the complete satisfaction of all parties concerned. On the basis of this demonstration the two departments are now arranging to put it into effect formally in all countries, although it has already been adopted informally in many other countries than England, France, and Germany.

There is now no real duplication anywhere, as both departments will readily testify. There are two or three cities where petty personal differences are still gossiped about, but even there no duplication of effort is tolerated by the departments. The personal element can not be entirely eliminated as between different services any more than they can be in a single service, but so long as such situations are kept down to a very low percentage no real harm can result.

The experience gained in the course of reaching a satisfactory arrangement with the State Department has been of great benefit in reaching a similar agreement with the Department of Agriculture in advance of any duplication between the new agricultural attaché service and the commercial attaché service.

SERVICES RENDERED

Some idea of the usefulness of the bureau may be gained when it is stated that a new record in the number of demands upon it has been established for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1931. During that year there was an increase of more than 1,000 requests a day as compared with the previous year. In numbers the total services rendered was 3,966,000, as compared with 3,362,000 for the preceding year—an increase of 9 per cent. At the present time the bureau is answering inquiries on business topics at the rate of 12,000 a day. The cost of handling an inquiry has decreased from $2.38 in the fiscal year 1921–22 to $1.28 in the fiscal year 1930–31—a decrease of 46 per cent.

During the fiscal year 1921–22 the number of services rendered were 505,661 and the appropriation for maintaining the bureau was $1,211,010. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1930–31, the services and appropriation were $3,966,000 and $5,086,660, respectively. Thus during that time the appropriation increased approximately four times, while the number of services rendered increased approximately eight times.

DOLLARS-AND-CENTS RESULTS

Each year the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce attempts an evaluation of the results of the services it has rendered. For many years past this total, which is based upon written statements of American firms, has continued to increase. For 1929–30 the report showed slightly in excess of $50,000,000. For the fiscal year 1930–31 the foreign trade of the United States shrank approximately 35 per cent in value. This factor of diminished export trade, due to unfavorable business situations in world marts and continued price declines, created a very unfavorable setting for the compilation of the dollars-and-cents report this year.

In spite of this unfavorable situation, the report for 1930–31 shows that American firms, as a result of the bureau's services, have received new business and direct savings to the extent of $57,554,813. The real significance of this increase lies in its coincidence with the increased figure for services rendered. This is no chance coincidence. It means that a large number of firms, as indeed several have stated, have, in their effort to reduce overhead, turned to the bureau for services and advice that have an immediate and tangible value.

Accordingly, the total of over $57,550,000 becomes this year a more significant percentage of our total foreign trade; it furnishes evidence that in periods unfavorable to domestic trade the bureau plays an increasingly important rôle in the development and maintenance of our foreign trade. It includes very few estimates of the intangible services which, because of their nature, bar any evaluation, but which, nevertheless, constitute a large part of the total activity of our offices.

WHY INDUSTRY CAN NOT DO WORK BUREAU IS DOING

1. The Government represents the public interest in a business enterprise. Trade associations and individuals, therefore, come to the bureau to secure aids in the development of the betterment of various types of trade practice:

First, because the Government represents nonpartisan relationship between buyer and seller;

Second, because the label of the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, or of the Department of Commerce, helps convince the industry of the soundness of the program; and Third, because the participation of the Government adds authority to the collection of figures and statistical and economic information.

2. The bureau represents industry in its relationship to other Government departments in such questions as have to do with international relations.

3. Trade associations, desiring to study certain types of markets or interindustry relations, may do so only through the cooperation of the bureau. Such classes of statistics as post-office receipts, income taxes, and Census Bureau statistics in a variety of forms are only available to another Government bureau. They are collected confidentially, and yet the totals are of public interest for the benefit of all concerned.

4. The bureau is the small business man's organization. While it performs service for large firms, 80 per cent of its services are rendered for small firms. The latter can not afford extensive foreign organizations.

5. Government representatives have entrée to certain foreign governmental sources which representatives of private firms would not have.

6. Small firms often do not like to place their figures at the disposal of large firms.

FOREIGN-TRADE PROMOTION—OTHER NATIONS

On a per capita basis America's expenditures on her foreign-trade promotion are at present only about 80 per cent as large as that of the United Kingdom and 50 per cent of the Canadian expenditures. If the appropriations of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce were on the same basis as those of the Canadian Commercial Intelligence Service, the United States would spend $8,400,000 instead of $4,815,900.

The British Government estimates for the fiscal year 1932–33 assign $1,829,000 (this represents a small decrease over the previous fiscal year which will be applied to cuts in salaries, allowances, traveling expenses, etc., but no curtailment of personnel or activities is contemplated)—or about 4 cents per capita—for work of the Department of Overseas Trade. The Government also operates an export credit guaranty department, for which a revolving fund of £26,000,000 ($126,529,000 at par) was made available in 1919. This department guarantees a proportion of the face value of bills of exchange in the case of applications made to the department and approved by it for the purpose.

In addition to the above, a yearly appropriation is granted to the Empire Marketing Board, the purpose of which is to stimulate the sale of Empire products in the United Kingdom, as partial compensation for preference granted to British products in British Empire tariffs.

In Japan the appropriation for the Department of Commerce and Industry for 1932–33 is estimated at about $4,900,000, but there is no way of telling just how much of that amount goes for the promotion of foreign commerce. The amount is believed to be very small, as most of Japan's trade-promotion work is done through Government aid to industries which produce for export, and through other subsidies. One form of aid has been the encouragement of export guilds. Since 1925 subsidies to such guilds has totaled $150,000 per year.

In 1929 a law was passed recompensing exporters for 70 per cent of losses incurred on shipments to certain undeveloped markets. Export bills, valued at about $1,640,000, were issued April 1 to December 31, 1931. The amount of indemnification paid by the Government by the end of 1931 was $32,600. The Yokohama Specie Bank early in 1930 lowered its rate on export bills. Other aid to exporters has taken the form of low-interest loans under Government guaranty, and Government request to shipping companies for lower freight rates on export commodities.

The official organization for trade promotion in France is the Office National du Commerce Exterieur, a part of the Ministry of Commerce. There are approximately 56 commercial attachés and commercial agents stationed abroad. In addition, there are about 15 French commercial bureaus in various foreign cities. These bureaus act as intermediaries for the French manufacturers and exporters, they display samples, and render other services for which a definite scale of fees is established. In addition to these fees, the commercial bureaus receive subventions from the French Government.

CLOSING FOREIGN OFFICES

The suggestion has been made that in the interests of economy it would be advisable to close some of the foreign offices of the Department of Commerce in view of the decline in the foreign trade of the United States. This would be a shortsighted policy, and such a move would be especially unfortunate at this particular time. It would be analogous to doing away with our military forces in peace times. There are many American firms which have abolished their foreign offices and who are looking to the Department of Commerce for advice and information which was formerly furnished them through their own branch offices. If the foreign offices are closed, no one will be available to carry on the trade-promotion work they are doing; no one will keep American firms informed of financial, tariff, and legal developments which take place; and there would be no one to whom American business might turn for advice and assistance in entering foreign markets. British, French, German, and Italian firms would be greatly encouraged by this retreat of American effort in maintaining its foreign commercial position and would lose no time in impressing upon local business men that Americans are only interested in finding markets for surplus stock. All the effectiveness of the Government's foreign-trade service would be nullified at a time when it is most needed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask that the pending amendment to the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is on page 69, line 24, in the item for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, where the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] proposes to strike out "$175,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas is not in the Chamber at the present moment, and I am willing that this amendment may be passed over for a while.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Washington, in charge of the bill, about the amendment on page 66, the item relating to domestic commerce and raw-materials investigations. The amount of the reduction is found on lines 21 and 22.

I was not a member of the subcommittee, but as a member of the full committee heard the reports in general. I desire to ask the Senator whether some special consideration was given to this item.

Mr. JONES. It had consideration, just like every other amendment to the bill. It is true enough that we made a pretty large cut in this item.

Mr. COPELAND. I expected to have some material to present this morning, but it has not come to my hand yet. This affects the bureau which furnishes all the material we use in formulating tariff matters.

Mr. JONES. Let me suggest to the Senator that if he is expecting some material and shall desire to go back to the item when the material arrives, I do not think there will be any objection to that.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JONES. That is merely to save time.

Mr. COPELAND. I do think we ought to give some special thought to this particular item, because it has a bearing upon our getting income from our imports. I will bring it up when I get the material to which I have referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from New York that when the period for the introduction of individual amendments arrives, he may have an opportunity to present his amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be willing to go back to it when the material to which I have referred is furnished me.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I notice the Senator from Texas is now in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment which was passed over and the amendment to the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 69, line 24, the Senator from Texas proposes to strike out "$175,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to take up any time in the discussion of this amendment. It is up to the Senate to do exactly what it sees fit to do. But I want to give some comparative figures, so that they may go into the RECORD, and so that this mode of dealing with appropriations may be adequately judged. These figures have been furnished me this morning, and I assume them to be correct.

In the Department of Commerce there are 189 men who are drawing rental allowances. Their rental allowances average $926.

In the State Department, the appropriations for which we passed and approved, there are 1,336 receiving rental allowances, and those allowances average $1,250 to the individual. So in this haphazard, higglety-pigglety, wibblety-wobblety mood of dealing with appropriation bills we have already approved allowances to the officials of the State Department, 1,336 in number, with an average of $1,252 to the individual, and now we are to cut down the allowances of 189 in the Commerce Department where the average is $926.

In addition to that there are 40 such allowances made under the Department of Agriculture, and we have approved the appropriations. That we all stand for, because my friend upon my right, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], in charge of the agricultural appropriation bill, has put it through with that celerity and ability and alacrity which always have distinguished his legislative activities.

Under the Department of Labor there are 108 individuals who are drawing rental allowances at the present time. In the Treasury Department there are 91, and it seems as if at this particular moment at least we are "soaking" the Commerce Department and soaking no other department at all.

There is one other thing I want to say about the activities of those who represent the Commerce Department in foreign lands. Personally, of course, I know nothing of it. I have had little or no experience with it; but from the State from which I come I have literally hundreds of telegrams from those who are engaged in foreign commerce testifying to the worth of the Department of Commerce in relation to foreign countries and in aiding commerce there. These people from the State from which I come insist that the work of the officials of that department that has been done has been of extraordinary value, and to destroy it or to impair it or cripple it at the present time would cripple our commerce.

We have grown so hysterical in this time, Mr. President, that we are utterly unable to see the paradoxical position in which we place ourselves. We stand here upon this floor and we yap and whine about unemployment day after day, we tell of the miseries of our people, and how it is impossible for them to obtain work, what an outrageous and shameful thing it is that in a country such as ours six or eight million people are tramping the streets begging for work, and hungry, and then, sir, at the very time that we indulge in these lachrymose, eloquent appeals, we adopt a rule by which we put out on the streets a great many employees of various departments, and with these people we thus put on the streets swell the ranks of the unemployed.

We are hysterical, and worse. It would be infinitely better if the entire executive department could be securely confined upon the Rapidan and the entire Congress lost in the woods for a period of a month, until we get our heads upon our shoulders again and our feet upon the ground. We are dealing here in paradoxical and I might almost say in idiotic fashion with appropriation bills, and with human beings affected by appropriation bills. There never was an excoriation more deserved, in my opinion, than that uttered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] the other day upon the method of procedure in relation to our appropriations.

I have read these figures of the Commerce Department as to the number of people who are receiving out of the Treasury of the United States any allowances for quarters at all, and I compare them with those of the other departments we have already agreed should have just that sort of thing; and I say, sir, that if we play the game on the level, let us make our rule applicable to all or make it applicable to none. That is good sportsmanship and it is good legislation.

Calling the attention of our eminent friend from Texas and the Senator from Washington to this situation, I leave it to the Senate to determine as it sees fit.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, supplementing what the Senator from California has just said, I call attention to a statement I put into the RECORD a few minutes ago showing the benefits that have been derived from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. One paragraph of this statement I read:

> Each year the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce attempts an evaluation of the results of the services it has rendered. For many years past this total, which is based upon written statements of American firms, has continued to increase. For 1929–30 the report showed slightly in excess of $50,000,000. For the fiscal year 1930–31 the foreign trade of the United States shrank approximately 35 per cent in value. This factor of diminished export trade, due to unfavorable business situations in world marts and continued price declines, created a very unfavorable setting for the compilation of the dollars-and-cents report this year.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I shall take just a moment of time. I may say to the Senator from California, in classic expression:

Never shake thy gory locks at me!

The Senator and I voted the same way on the resolution adopted by the Senate providing for a 10 per cent reduction in the appropriation bill. In framing these amendments the committee has sought in as wise and just a way as possible to comply with the orders and directions of the Senate of the United States. That is the principle we have followed in making the amendments. As a committee we have accepted the verdict of the Senate and we have tried to comply with it just as nearly as possible.

As I understand, the amendment of the Senator from Texas is to reduce the amount provided in the committee amendment, on page 69, line 24, to $100,000. The amendment takes care of the appropriation for light, heat, fuel, and so forth, of our employees abroad under the Department of Commerce. The provision is made pursuant to a law passed by Congress just a couple of years ago. I refer to the act of April 12, 1930, an act to amend an act to establish in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, a foreign commerce service of the United States, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1927. This act was passed April 12, 1930. The act provides that—

The Secretary of Commerce may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, furnish the officers in the Foreign Commerce Service of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce stationed in a foreign country, without cost to them and within the limits of any appropriation made for this purpose, allowances for living quarters, heat, and light, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1765 of the Revised Statutes.

And so on. In other words, we are simply complying with a law solemnly passed by the Congress of the United States providing for these service officers free light, heat, quarters, and so on. The appropriation is made pursuant to that law. I hardly think it is right for the Senate of the United States, within a year or two after it has passed a solemn act, to refuse to appropriate the money for the quarters and light and fuel which those representatives of the Government abroad have to have. They have relied on this legislation enacted by Congress. Of course, we can cut it all out if we desire to repudiate, I might say, the act we have passed. It seems to me the proper thing would be to repeal the law and then we could, of course, refuse the appropriation.

I may say that personally I was opposed to the enactment of the law. I could not see any reason why we should furnish to those in the Foreign Service their heat, light, and quarters any more than we should furnish our citizens here in this country who were serving the Government with their light, heat, and quarters. It may be all right for us to furnish transportation from their homes to their places of work abroad, and yet we do not make that provision for employees in this country. Some of our Government employees may come from the Pacific coast to fill positions here in the city of Washington, but they are not furnished their transportation. They are not furnished their heat, light, and fuel after they get here. But we have enacted legislation providing that the Foreign Service officers shall have an appropriation for their light, heat, and quarters.

I do not think it is the wise thing or rather the proper thing and the just thing for Congress to turn right around after enacting the legislation and refuse to appropriate the money. That is the only ground that I have for the appropriation. In the beginning I was not in favor of the law and did not believe in it, but I have found many times that Congress does not do always the things that I would like to have done. Congress does not do always what I approve, but it goes on and passes what it thinks is wise and proper legislation. Congress enacted legislation providing for light, heat, and quarters for clerks in the Foreign Service. The only purpose of the amendment is to carry out that legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I dislike to take further time of the Senate, but I am amazed at the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and the doctrine enunciated by him just now. That doctrine means we can not economize at all because his theory is that if we have once passed an appropriation bill carrying these items, or if we have ever passed an authorization act, we are bound by it; and therefore we might as well close the Congress so far as doing any economizing at this time is concerned.

The Senator from Washington said we had provided for the item; and that because we authorized it some years ago, we must still cling to the same old unfair and unjust practice. I thought the Appropriations Committee had a function to perform. I did not know the Appropriations Committee was merely a rubber stamp simply to fill in the blanks in the forms of authorizations. I thought the purpose of an authorization was to remit the matter to the judgment and discretion of the Appropriations Committee, and then it was up to the Appropriations Committee to say whether or not the appropriation ought to be made. But the Senator from Washington holds up his hands and exclaims that the committee is impotent, the committee has no function, the committee is required to report appropriations for everything on earth which Congress in some remote moment may have authorized.

Mr. President, for the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] I have great respect personally and as a Senator. I admire his courage, his ability, and his power as an adversary, if I may so phrase it. But, Mr. President, when a vote is had in this body, the bells ring in every office in the Senate Office Building and in the Senate wing of the Capitol. Those bells also ring in the departments. What happened here yesterday? The bells rang down in the Department of Commerce before the RECORD was printed, and here they come from that department, rushing up to the chairman of the Commerce Committee and saying, "For God's sake, cut somebody else, but do not cut us." They produce the figures. The Senator from California argues that because there are 1,436 men in the State Department getting more rent and more fuel than 189 men in the Department of Commerce, therefore we ought not to cut anybody. But, Mr. President, we have to start somewhere. If we are to economize and cut down appropriations we have to begin somewhere. I shall join with the Senator from California, when we come to the Department of State appropriations, in endeavoring to cut down their allowances. I shall join with the Senator in cutting down the allowances of representatives abroad for the Department of Labor and for the Department of Agriculture. But we can only deal with one item at a time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that we have already passed the item in the Department of State?

Let me make a correction, so there will be no misapprehension about it. It is true that I happen to be chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, but the Senator is entirely in error in saying that after yesterday's proceedings anybody rushed down here with all sorts of figures with respect to this bill. I have been talking on this bill for some days while it has been pending in relation to various items. The Senator from Texas has not been here and has not had, of course, the pleasure of listening to what has been said in that regard.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas is unfortunate in that respect in not being here to listen to what the Senator from California said. I always enjoy listening to him. I shall say in justification for my absence that I have been serving on the Finance Committee, and I dare say the labors there are no less arduous than in this Chamber.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the Senator's labors have been more to the purpose, but do not let the Senator from Texas get the idea that I am anxious to cut the appropriations for the Departments of Agriculture and State. The reason why I invited attention to the fact that this is exceedingly unjust was to show the unfairness of the assault upon the one department—the Commerce Department. That is all.

Mr. CONNALLY. Under the rules of the Senate we can attack only one item at a time. The reason I attack this item is that in the brief time I was able to attend the session of the Senate on yesterday we reached the item. If I had been here when we reached the Department of State item, I would have attacked that item as well. I want to say in reply to the Senator from California that I expect to ask unanimous consent, and I dare say the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] will not object, to return to those items and treat them in the same way we are treating this item.

I appeal to Senators again that this is one place where we can economize without hurting anybody. I want to read briefly from the statistics. The Senator from California said that in the Labor Department we have 108 representatives abroad. In the Department of Agriculture the Government has 40 agents in foreign countries, receiving salaries and receiving allowances for house rent, light, and heat. In the Department of Commerce there are 189 such foreign representatives and in the Department of State, 1,436.

I do not care when the provision was enacted into law, it was not right then, and under present conditions it is absolutely wasteful, absolutely injurious and unfair to the people of the country and to other employees. Let me read some of the items of the State Department. I am not referring now to ambassadors; I am not talking about ambassadors who have to maintain embassies or ministers who have to maintain the legations. I am talking about secretaries and clerks.

In Argentina the counselor draws $1,900 for house rent, heat, and light. The first secretary draws $1,500 from the Federal Treasury for house rent. In Austria the secretary draws $1,400 for rent, and the second secretary draws $1,500 for rent. Everybody knows that under present conditions in Austria, with its depreciated currency, living conditions on the same standard and on the same scale are much cheaper than they are here in America.

In Belgium the counsellor draws $1,400 a year for house rent and the third secretary draws $1,200 a year for house rent. In Brazil, at Rio de Janeiro, the counsellor draws $1,250 and the third secretary draws $1,350 house rent. In Canada the first secretary draws $1,550 and the second secretary $1,350.

I might go on, Mr. President, and Senators, through the whole category of foreign posts and read similar items. In Denmark the counselor draws $1,560 a year for rent. In the Dominican Republic, in Santo Domingo—just think about rents in Santo Domingo! The houses down there do not even have doors and windows in them! They are kept open the year around. For rent in Santo Domingo the third secretary draws $1,050. In Finland the second secretary draws $1,100. In Paris one counselor draws $1,400, another $1,500, the first secretary $1,500, another secretary $1,500, and a second secretary $1,500. In Paris alone for house rent, not of the ambassador, but of the clerks and secretaries, this Government is paying out about $7,500 a year, and yet we hear talk about economy, retrenchment, cutting out duplications, and overlapping.

Mr. President, if the Senate and the Congress allow these items to remain in the bill as they have been allowed by the committee, it will be a denial of every profession which the administration and which the Congress are making to the American people. We are going to drag the American taxpayer across this Chamber soon.

With one hand we are going to examine his vest pockets and see if he has anything in them, cigars or tobacco, and then we are going to investigate his pants pockets and see if he has any money in them to buy anything other than food and clothing; and if he has, we are going to take it out. With one hand we are going to search the American taxpayer all over the Senate Chamber for the few pennies he may have remaining, while with the other hand we are going to hand out to 1,436 foreign service clerks—not ambassadors, not ministers, but clerks—an average of $1,252 a year for house rent, which was never allowed in the history of this country until a few years ago. Then we are going to hand out to the Labor Department an appropriation for house rent for 108 clerks in foreign countries, and then we are going to allow the representatives of poor, distressed, and depressed agriculture, 40 of them abroad. While the American farmer at home is almost starving to death, these emissaries of American agriculture in foreign lands are to get not only their salaries, their travel pay to and from their foreign post, but their house rent in addition, which the American farmer has to pay.

Mr. President, this is unjustified. It simply means the Senate will not economize. It simply means that Congress will not cut down. It simply means that the Budget and the President and the Secretary of State will not economize and do not expect to economize. I submit that this item is absolutely unjustified. I do not care how many appropriation committees submit it, I do not care how many Budget officers sent it up, I do not care how many Presidents say they want it, this item is not justified and I hope the Senate will adopt my amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, in considering a matter like this I do not think that we should be extreme at all. I think we have a perfect right to face the situation. It does not mean because we propose this amendment here that the committee is not in favor of economy, that the Budget is not in favor of economy, that the President is not in favor of economy. As I said a while ago, it is simply a provision to carry out the law. It is not, as suggested by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], merely an appropriation proposition, not a question of whether it has been pending a few years or not, or that the committee does not have to make it. It is not the ordinary appropriation.

This is an appropriation looking to compensation of employees of the Government of the United States. Congress, not 6, 8, or 10 years ago, but just a couple of years ago seemed to feel that our representatives abroad, whether of the humblest class or of the highest class, for that matter, were not being paid what they ought to be paid; that they were not receiving the compensation which their services justified, and so, in its wisdom, it provided that, in addition to their salaries, quarters, rent, light, heat, and so forth, should be furnished along certain lines. We did that by legislation carefully considered, carefully studied, and passed, after deliberation by the Senate and House of Representatives, and approved by the President.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. The committee received the estimate for this item and has simply provided for those estimates. Now I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understood the Senator from Washington yesterday to say that the only justification on earth for this item was that, as the employees of the State Department were getting these allowances, Congress provided them for the employees of the Department of Commerce.

Mr. JONES. No; I certainly did not make that statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I understood him yesterday to say that the argument for this item in the pending bill was because the employees of the State Department were receiving the same allowances, and that, therefore, the employees of the Department of Commerce should also receive them.

Mr. JONES. If I did make any such statement as that, it was entirely unwarranted.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not want to misquote the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I know the Senator from Texas does not; I know he is sincere.

Mr. CONNALLY. But the Senator said he was opposed to the provision, did he not, a while ago?

Mr. JONES. I said to the Senator that when the legislation was originally passed I was not in favor of it, but a majority of Congress did not agree with me.

Mr. CONNALLY. But the Senator does not surrender his views simply because a majority of the Senate does not agree with him, does he?

Mr. JONES. Certainly not.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator had those views then, has he not the same views now?

Mr. JONES. I certainly have, but I do not believe when there comes before this body an item of appropriation that has been authorized and provided for by Congress in the regularly constituted way that I am justified, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in setting myself up against it.

If I were in a position such as the Senator from Texas is in, I should feel perfectly free to take his position and to assume his attitude, but I think the Senate of the United States should consider the situation, and that I, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, have been directed to report this amendment. Therefore, I am simply calling the attention of the Senate to the situation, and it is up to the Senate to say, under all the circumstances, what it will do with reference to this item. I repeat, it is simply carrying out the law which we solemnly passed just a year or two ago—not many years ago, but only a year or two ago. We have cut the amount down; we have acted as we did on various other matters, taking into account the conditions which confront the country and the people. We could cut all these employees off; we could cut everything off for which we now provide; but I do not believe that the people of the country would approve such a policy as that. We have reduced the appropriation. My recollection is that last year it was $250,000, although I am not positive about that. At any rate, the appropriation passed the House of Representatives at $200,000 and we have cut it down to $175,000. I think that is an ample reduction, under all the circumstances, and that it is as far as we should go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment to the committee amendment. We might just as well go to the mat on some of these economies right now, rather than talk economics all day, and then when amendments are proposed to effecuate them, vote against such amendments.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Copeland	Johnson	Sheppard
Austin	Costigan	Jones	Shipstead
Bailey	Couzens	Kean	Shortridge
Bankhead	Cutting	Kendrick	Smith
Barbour	Dale	La Follette	Steiwer
Barkley	Dickinson	Logan	Stephens
Bingham	Dill	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Black	Fess	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Blaine	Fletcher	McNary	Tydings
Borah	Frazier	Morrison	Vandenberg
Bratton	George	Moses	Wagner
Brookhart	Glenn	Neely	Walcott
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Norbeck	Walsh, Mass.
Bulow	Gore	Nye	Watson
Byrnes	Hale	Oddie	Wheeler
Capper	Harrison	Patterson	White
Caraway	Hatfield	Reed
Carey	Hayden	Robinson, Ind.
Connally	Hull	Schall

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] in the Chamber at the moment. He evidently has just stepped out. I think it is hardly fair to him, after a quorum has been called and he had requested the yeas and nays, that the question should be decided in his absence. I think we had better have a roll call, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I understand, however, that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I am permitted to vote, and vote "nay."

Mrs. CARAWAY (when her name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. Therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I do not know how he would vote. Therefore I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). Upon this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is absent on account of official business. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this question I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], who is ill. I understand that if he were present he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED (after having voted in the negative). Has the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. REED. I have a general pair with him. Therefore I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. TYDINGS. I find that I can transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. I therefore wish to be recorded as voting "yea."

Mr. SMITH. I find that I can transfer my pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE]. I do so, and vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG].

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is detained at a committee meeting.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] are absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—28

Ashurst	Bratton	Glenn	Neely
Austin	Bulow	Gore	Sheppard
Bailey	Byrnes	Hull	Smith
Bankhead	Capper	Kean	Stephens
Barbour	Connally	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Barkley	Couzens	McKellar	Tydings
Black	George	Morrison	Walsh, Mass.

NAYS—37

Bingham	Costigan	Fletcher	Jones
Blaine	Cutting	Frazier	Kendrick
Borah	Dale	Goldsborough	La Follette
Brookhart	Dickinson	Hale	Moses
Carey	Dill	Hatfield	Norbeck
Copeland	Fess	Johnson	Nye

Oddie	Shipstead	Thomas, Idaho	Walcott
Patterson	Shortridge	Vandenberg	Wheeler
Robinson, Ind.	Steiwer	Wagner	White

NOT VOTING—30

Broussard	Hawes	Long	Swanson
Bulkley	Hayden	McNary	Townsend
Caraway	Hebert	Metcalf	Trammell
Coolidge	Howell	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Davis	Keyes	Pittman	Waterman
Glass	King	Reed	Watson
Harrison	Lewis	Robinson, Ark.
Hastings	Logan	Smoot

So Mr. CONNALLY'S amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 70, line 19, before the word "of," to strike out "$4,869,531" and insert "$3,905,000."

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent that the clerks may have authority to correct the totals. This is a total.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I think the committee ought also to recommend an allowance for the funeral of economy and have it publicly buried.

The Senate has just turned down an amendment proposing to reduce an item that is absolutely unjustified in any sort of times—good times or bad times. The Committee on Appropriations now ought to report an amendment for a public funeral for Old Man Economy.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington if he will not permit the other item in this subdivision of the bill relating to customs statistics to be considered at this time?

Mr. JONES. To what item does the Senator refer?

Mr. COPELAND. It is on page 67, the item having to do with customs statistics. The amendment is on line 15, page 67.

Mr. JONES. I am perfectly willing that we shall consider that, and have it reconsidered if we have adopted it, so as to have the discussion.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be reconsidered for the purpose of the discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To which amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. COPELAND. The amendment on line 15, page 67.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from New York is agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this item, when it was considered by the Budget, was submitted to the House at $385,000, and the House reduced it to $360,000. Then by this amendment it is reduced to $250,000—a reduction, as you see, of $135,000, a very radical reduction.

This bureau is the one which gathers statistics regarding our exports and imports. It is this bureau which gives us all the material upon which we found our tariff law. It is on the basis of this material that the Finance Committee is now considering a tax bill. It is a matter of vital importance not only to the manufacturers of our country but to the farm interests as well.

I have in my hand a letter from Mr. Chester Gray, the Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation. He says:

> I do not mean to indicate any one particular activity of this bureau—

That is, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce—> which I, as Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, find to be of extra service to agriculture; but you will permit me, I know, to suggest that the section of customs statistics is of vital importance in much of the data which I accumulate for our various activities in the Farm Bureau.

Then he goes on to say:

> The customs statistics have been accumulating for decades, and to reduce the appropriation for this work or any other activity as is contemplated would be equivalent to undoing and neutralizing all the appropriations which Congress has given to this work heretofore.

I have a similar letter from the Brookings Institution, in which they speak of the vital importance of the activity of this bureau in carrying on their work.

I have a letter on the subject from the Tariff Commission; and, of course, without the material which this bureau furnishes to the Tariff Commission it would be utterly lost in carrying on its activities or in determining the relative values of the various proposals which are put before it. The chairman of the commission writes me under date of this morning as follows:

> My attention has been directed to a recent announcement that the staff of the customs statistics section in New York would have to be cut by some 53 persons out of a total of about 150 to come within the proposed new appropriation. This causes us some serious concern. The general and detailed statistics of imports and exports prepared by that organization are the basic data of trade. Our special demands on them are always numerous, and have been increased by the studies we have been called upon to make arising out of the unsettled economic situation, and the very close interest in the immediate changes in the trend of imports and exports. In these times, when reliable and prompt statistical data are so important, it seems fundamental that the means for providing them be maintained at the best possible efficiency.

Mr. President, this is not a mushroom organization, as I said. It was for many years a bureau of the Treasury Department, and I refer to section 194 of the Code, title 15, where we find the law by which this activity was transferred from the Treasury to the Department of Commerce. Also, when that transfer was effected, the Bureau of Customs Statistics was combined with the Division of Foreign and Domestic Commerce into one office, and that office operates largely in New York. Practically all of the work is done in the customhouse in New York, and it is assembled here in Washington. Ninety per cent of the work is done there.

If this amendment which we have been considering should be agreed to, it would mean that 57 out of 155 employees in the New York office would be discontinued. The office is already short of help to the extent of 19 officials, if I may call that to the attention of the Senator from Washington; 9 have been discontinued by reason of tabulating machines having been put in and there are 10 vacancies. As a matter of fact, in the office here the reduction would not mean much because only three employees would be discontinued.

I appeal to the Senate not to reduce this item in this radical way. I think that after cutting out, as the House did, $25,000, it would be a great economic mistake for us to reduce the appropriation further by the sum of more than $100,000. So I hope this amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hope the action proposed by the Senator from New York will not be taken, not because I am not sympathetic with his plea nor because I do not want to see the work done to which he refers but the argument he makes would apply to almost every item in the bill. Leaving the item as it came from the House now would not furnish any assistance in the writing of the tax bill now imminent, because that will be passed on before the money appropriated at this time would be available.

The committee has done the very best we possibly could, we have felt. I know this is quite a cut, but there are other things we have had to cut more, and some we cut less. I hope the action of the committee will be sustained.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Blaine	Caraway	Dale
Austin	Borah	Carey	Davis
Bailey	Bratton	Connally	Dickinson
Bankhead	Brookhart	Coolidge	Dill
Barbour	Bulkley	Copeland	Fess
Barkley	Bulow	Costigan	Fletcher
Bingham	Byrnes	Couzens	Frazier
Black	Capper	Cutting	George

Glenn	Kean	Norris	Thomas, Idaho
Goldsborough	Kendrick	Nye	Thomas, Okla.
Gore	La Follette	Oddie	Trammell
Hale	Logan	Robinson, Ark.	Tydings
Harrison	McGill	Robinson, Ind.	Vandenberg
Hatfield	McKellar	Schall	Wagner
Hayden	McNary	Sheppard	Walcott
Howell	Morrison	Shipstead	Watson
Hull	Moses	Smith	Wheeler
Johnson	Neely	Steiwer	White
Jones	Norbeck	Stephens

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on page 67, line 15, where the committee has reduced the figure from $360,000 to $250,000, I move that the figure be made $300,000 in lieu of the committee amendment. My amendment would mean a cut of about 16 per cent. If I can get support in the Senate to this proposal, everybody can have a perfectly clear conscience that he has voted for a 50 per cent reduction, and a little better.

We should not reduce this item as is proposed. I have presented the argument of the American Farm Bureau Federation, so apparently the farmers want the item retained at the figure as it passed the House. I have presented the argument of the chairman of the Tariff Commission. The Tariff Commission relies upon the information gathered by this bureau and can get it nowhere else.

That activity should not be practically annihilated as it will be if the committee amendment is adopted. If we expect to have revenue from the operation of a protective tariff, we must get our information. If we are going to help our farmers to know how much competition we are having from abroad in the way of importations of farm products into the United States, this is the way the information is gathered. There ought to be left enough of that bureau so it can go forward with its activities. If I can get support, it will be a reduction of about 16 per cent as I figure it. I appeal to the Senate that the amount may be changed and in lieu of the committee amendment the figure may be placed at $300,000.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I realize full well the difficulty of the committee in meeting the order of the Senate. I do not want to blame the committee for trying to obey the order of the Senate. I should say, however, that I can but feel that this method of legislation with respect to appropriations is almost mob rule. It is hysteria. I have voted to send back some of the appropriation bills, because I thought that one or two votes of protest might bring about a uniform program, a comprehensive program for reduction of expenses in all departments. I do not think it can be done in this way. Of course, we can have reductions, but it is done in a way like hacking promiscuously at a tree, taking a swat here and a swat there, but there is no order in it.

I believe we are the only government that is reducing its commercial research force throughout the world, a force which has for its purpose or business the discovering of new avenues of commerce and new sources of supply of raw material and who have for their business and purpose the extension of the commerce of the country they represent. I believe the commercial service of the British Government has had a reduction in salaries of about 11 per cent, but I am informed they have not retired one person out of that service. I am informed, reliably, I believe, that this bureau of the Department of Commerce has succeeded in bringing $57,000,000 of new business a year to this country.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. JONES. May I suggest to the Senator that this item has nothing to do with foreign commerce. It deals with domestic production and investigation.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I find on page 66, lines 19 to 21, the following:

> To investigate the conditions of production and marketing of foreign raw materials essential for American industries.

Mr. JONES. Production and marketing.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Has not that anything to do with foreign commerce?

Mr. JONES. This is to investigate conditions of production and marketing of foreign raw materials.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Produced abroad and necessary for our commerce.

Mr. JONES. The marketing of foreign raw materials in this country.

Mr. COPELAND. It certainly has to do with our commerce. It is a very important thing that we may know in this country just what is going on abroad in order that we may regulate our production here. In that sense it has a lot to do with the transfer back and forth of products, both importation and exportation. I think the Senator from Minnesota is not far wrong in his statement.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. With all due respect to the Senator from Washington, I find the words "and to investigate the conditions of production and marketing of foreign raw materials essential for American industries" at the point indicated. This is a cut of more than 10 per cent, as the Senator from New York has called to our attention. It seems to me that there are other places where we can make more substantial and more necessary reductions than in this item.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I invite attention to the fact that in 1928 the appropriation for this purpose was $199,000; in 1929, $290,000; in 1930, $309,000; in 1931, $380,000; and in 1932, $518,000, showing that this is quite a liberal appropriation. We did not spend that much when we had excellent trade and commerce, when we were busy, and certainly this year is not a time to increase the appropriation. There is no reason in the world why the committee's estimate of $300,000 for this purpose should not stand, and I hope the Senate will confirm it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, of course when we have a preconceived notion about a thing every phenomenon of nature appears to support the position taken. I suppose I have a preconceived notion about it. But when we have an economic depression, when we have a falling off in business, in commerce, in manufactures, in agriculture, when we have a depression such as that from which we are suffering at this moment, what does the prudent man do? He finds how he can improve his business. If there was ever a time in our history when we should make an effort to improve economic conditions in America as regards manufactures and agricultural production, production in every industry of America, it is now.

I say that it is an evidence of hysteria on our part to pursue such a course as that suggested by the committee. It is amazing to me to see men ordinarily brave so swept off their feet and changed by clamor that the mere cry for economy, the word "economy" is enough to induce a vote at once for any project, no matter what it is, no matter what its results may be, that reduces appropriations.

Mr. President, I am for economy. There is no State in the Union where the balancing of a Budget is so important as it is in the State of New York. We pay 30 per cent of the taxes of the country. It may be said that New York is the reservoir into which flows the gold of the Nation. I do not care how it gets there; when the taxes are paid New York residents are the ones who pay the taxes. It is a matter of great concern to my State whether we have an economically administered National Government or not. It means much to us. We want the Budget pared to the bone, but it is bad business, Mr. President, to cut off, among other institutions, this particular bureau which is collecting the information which informs the farmer and the manufacturer whether or not we shall proceed in planting a certain crop or putting out larger quantities of a given product.

Mr. President, it is a very shortsighted policy, in my judgment, if we go too far in this matter. I think we go farther than we should if we reduce the item as I have suggested, but that will be the $25,000 cut off by the House and about a 16 per cent reduction by the Senate. That is going far enough as I view it, and I hope the Senate will take that view.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this activity has had $500,000 for the present fiscal year, and with the amount allowed by the committee I believe it can carry forward its work. We allow $300,000 in the bill, and that is ample for the next fiscal year. I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a list of the units in the United States which have been served by the Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce and the number of firms that have reported as a result of service they have rendered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. Understanding that he would vote as I intend to vote, I am permitted to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). Making the same announcement with reference to my pair that I made before, I vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement regarding my pair that I made a while ago, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). On this vote I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is necessarily absent on account of official business. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TYDINGS (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. I understand that, if present, he would vote the same as I shall vote. I therefore wish to be recorded. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and let my vote stand.

Mrs. CARAWAY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] are detained from the Senate by a committee meeting.

I was also requested to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES];

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] are detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 54, as follows:

So Mr. COPELAND's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon the amendment reported by the committee.

NOMINATION OF FRED A. BRADLEY

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I notice that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is now in the Chamber. I should like to ask him, if I may, what became of the Bradley investigation?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, as the Senator from New York knows, the nomination was recommitted to the Finance Committee on his recommendation. The Finance Committee instructed me to inquire of the Attorney General whether or not his department would conduct the investigation. I conferred with the Senator from New York about the matter, and, after the conference, I informed the Attorney General of the result of the conference. The Attorney General stated that he had no authority to conduct the investigation, but that, if the Finance Committee would take charge of it, as a committee, he would be willing to lend us three persons from the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice for that purpose. The Senator from New York was informed of that and expressed his acquiescence in the plan. Thereupon I conferred with the head of the Bureau of Investigation, Mr. Hoover. He came up to see me; his assistants then came up, and we had a conference about it. It occurred to me at the time, I will say very frankly, that it would be necessary to introduce another resolution and have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but, after examining the original resolution, I found that in the usual language of such resolutions it conferred authority upon the Finance Committee to conduct the investigation.

That is all there is to it. Those in charge are now examining all the information which the Senator had and from which he read on the floor of the Senate. They are ready to go on to Buffalo to make the investigation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it will be recalled that I made no charges against Mr. Bradley. I merely recited to the Senate the facts relating to the four or five alleged investigations which had been made into the conduct of his office. My complaint was that no investigation had been complete or conclusive. When I was asked by the Senator from Indiana what I would suggest in the way of investigation, I pointed out reasons why other agencies might not be used, and suggested that the Department of Justice make the investigation. Now, I learn from the Senator, as I learned by gossip this morning, that the Finance Committee has a feeling it has authority to employ these men and to go forward with the investigation. So this morning I returned to the Finance Committee the official records which I had and they have been turned over to the investigators.

Now, this is what I want to speak about: I told the Senate how inconclusive were the past investigations; I told the Senate the methods which were used; that every single committee or agent in the past that had been appointed to do this work was taken into camp by Mr. Bradley, wined and dined, and treated gloriously. I had supposed that when the Department of Justice undertook an investigation, it would be conducted in what I used to read about as a boy was the method of detectives. I thought detectives wore false whiskers and used dark lanterns and that their methods were such that they worked their way into those recesses from which they would be barred if they went in well-known attire and with their natural faces undisguised. I have read, as I have no doubt the Senator from California has, a great many modern detective stories. I thought that was the way such things were done.

But what do we find in this case? We find that three men are chosen, and immediately the Department of Justice gives the names of these men to the Buffalo press; and in order that the people in Buffalo may make no mistake as to who these men are, the Department of Justice furnishes photographs to the newspapers. In order to obtain those photographs it was necessary to tear them from the identification slips which these men, when they entered the department, had filled out and to which their photographs were attached. That is what the Department of Justice has done in this particular matter.

Are we to have this investigation ruined in its very inception by exactly the same methods which have made all the other investigations mere farces? I can not understand such procedure.

Mr. President, I have no desire to pillory Bradley; I have no desire to ruin Bradley; I have no desire to send Bradley to jail; but certain questions have been raised; I presented the evidence here, and the Senate took the view that it was necessary there should be a complete investigation, an investigation on the square, an honest investigation, a thorough investigation. And now, to my amazement, I find that the work of these men has been interfered with at the very beginning. Even before they have gone to Buffalo, newspapers have carried their pictures, given their names and ages and their records. They have given full publicity to every bootlegger in the county of Erie and every bootlegger on the border between New York and Canada. They have sent word in advance to Mr. Bradley, and Mr. Bradley has announced to the press that he will receive the investigators with open arms and supply them with office equipment and even a stenographer.

That is a fine kind of an investigation! If that is the way the investigations are conducted by the Department of Justice, I am not surprised that crime is rampant in the United States.

Mr. President, I wish to say further that that was not the way to begin an investigation of charges so serious as those which have been laid before the Senate. I am amazed beyond words that what I have indicated should be the primary act of the Department of Justice in beginning an investigation of the serious charges alleged against the collector of customs in Buffalo.

I have expressed my sentiments. I am not a member of the subcommittee or of the full committee. I have nothing to do, officially or otherwise, with this investigation; but I am here to say that there is going to be an honest-to-goodness investigation this time, or else the country is going to know that the Government is so impotent that it is impossible to make such an investigation.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I assume that the mere fact that an investigator has had his picture published in the paper will not prevent him from making a full, free investigation of the matter he set out to investigate. If a man has to go out and disguise himself with old clothes and false whiskers and a painted face and all that sort of thing, or if a man has to come from the underworld and the underground section of the city in order to be a sleuth and detect people in crime or alleged crime, it is scarcely possible that the Department of Justice will engage men of that kind, or employ them for that or any other purpose.

So far as I know, the Department of Justice had not anything to do with this matter except to lend three men to the Committee on Finance. The gentlemen came up to see me, and I said, "We will turn over the papers to you as far as we have them in our custody," which we did; and the Senator from New York was requested to hand over his papers, which I understand he did.

I suggest to the Senator with all due courtesy—I could not do otherwise—that he wait until the investigation shall have been held, and then criticize it if he likes; but I can not see that the Senator has a just cause of grievance against these men who are going out representing the Department of Justice simply because their names have been published broadcast to the world. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. These pictures and this information were given out by the Department of Justice. Does the Senator from Indiana think it is a good way to begin an investigation to herald the news to everybody that these are the men who are going to make the investigation?

I have no fault to find with these men. I think they are excellent men. I have not any fault to find with them; but I have fault to find with the Department of Justice because after lending those men to the committee, and saying that the department could not go on with the matter, the department interfered to the extent of giving wide publicity by name and by picture to the people of Buffalo to the fact that these are the men they have loaned to the committee to make this investigation.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, these three men really are not representing the Department of Justice or the Bureau of Investigation. They have simply lent us those men for this purpose. The investigation is being conducted under the supervision of the Committee on Finance. When these men get over to Buffalo, what is the most natural thing in the world for all of those newspaper fellows to do? They are a smart bunch there, as everywhere else. They will immediately become acquainted with all of these men. They would not be there two hours when every newspaperman in town would know all about it. They would get their names. They would publish their pictures. What is the difference whether they are published the day before they go there or the day after? It is dead certain that in a matter of that kind, involving a prominent man of the character of Mr. Bradley, in view of his acquaintance there and his relationship there, everybody in all that country would know the names and be familiar with the faces of the three men conducting the investigation. They could not go over there and go down in a cellar somewhere and run an investigation. They have to send out for witnesses and conduct the investigation in the open as a matter of course.

I think the criticism offered by my friend from New York is a captious one; and I suggest to him in all kindness that he wait until they report and then criticize the report, if there be criticism to be made against it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it was not fair to these fine men to interfere with them in the plans they had; and in view of the fact that everybody in Buffalo now knows what they look like and who they are, I will say that they intended to go there and remain under cover just as long as they could. Now the Department of Justice has interfered with the work of the committee and has given publicity to the fact that these men are on the way and who they are.

Mr. WATSON. When the Senator says "the Department of Justice," whom does he mean?

Mr. COPELAND. I mean that the newspaper that got the pictures that were published in one of the Buffalo papers got them in the Department of Justice, from Mr. Hoover's bureau. That is where they came from; and it was from that bureau that these men came. I contend that after that bureau had loaned these men to the Senate of the United States for a specific purpose, it had no business to do what it did. The bureau should have washed its hands off the matter and permitted these men to go forward in their own way, and not have interfered with them at the very beginning of the investigation.

Mr. WATSON. I think the investigation will come out all right. I think the Senator is unduly alarmed about the situation.

Mr. COPELAND. I am not alarmed about the situation, except that I want the truth to be known. If these men succeed in finding that Mr. Bradley is one of the angels that is accidentally on earth, I shall be glad; but I do not want anything to interfere with the righteous pursuit of the investigation by these men who have been selected by the committee to do the work.

STATE, JUSTICE, JUDICIARY, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9349) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, this morning the appropriations for aircraft in commerce and air navigation facilities, in accordance with the recommendations of the committee, were very seriously cut.

I opposed this cut in the committee but agreed in the committee with others who proposed other cuts that I would not make an effort on the floor to change the action of the committee, which, after all, was taken at the order of the Senate and caused very serious cuts in many items in this bill.

I can not, however, refrain from saying that I think it extremely unfortunate that the item for air navigation facilities, which consists largely in the lighted airways, had to be cut to the extent that it was cut.

In this connection, I desire to have read at the desk a telegram I have just received from the president of the Air Line Pilots' Association, who is himself a transcontinental night mail pilot. It tells how serious this matter is; and I am putting it in the RECORD in the hope that when this bill goes to conference, the conferees may find some way, or there may be some way found before we finally finish with this bill, of seeing to it that the dangerous and hazardous work of air mail pilots be not made more dangerous by foolish economies in cutting down the amount of work done by the weather reporting by radio and the protection granted by the lighthouses on the lighted airways.

I ask that the telegram may be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., April 19, 1932.

Senator HIRAM BINGHAM,
United States Senate:

The Aeronautics Branch of the Department of Commerce has taken a drastic cut in the House and if the Senate cuts their appropriations further, it will mean dangerously crippling a department whose function has a paramount place in commerce and in war. We must not curtail the normal development of the commercial airways. If this cut is made by the Senate, still more of our fellows will be put out of work. Practically half are already idle. Further reduction will mean that approximately 32 airways inspectors will be laid off, 2,000 miles of lighted airway abandoned, 5 radio-communications stations shut up, 10 radiobeacons discontinued, and 175 employees laid off, curtailment in teletype weather broadcast, and reduction in maintenance of intermediate landing fields. If the military value of the work of the aeronautics branch, Department of Commerce, is underestimated it is a grave blow at the very heart of national defense. Our air force can move swiftly at night over lighted airways and concentrate at any point on our seacoast or border. I plead with you, for the good of national defense, any air-commerce appropriations, and in particular this present appropriation, be not cut further. In addition to my duties as president of the Pilots' Association, I fly the transcontinental night air mail from Chicago to Omaha and am fully acquainted with the air-commerce situation in this country. Therefore, due to my knowledge of the situation, I feel that our request for consideration is not beyond reason.

DAVID L. BEHNCKE,
President Air Line Pilots' Association.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 70, line 20, before the word "may," to strike out "$2,052,120" and insert "$1,650,000," so as to read:

Total, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, $3,905,000, of which amount not to exceed $1,650,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of the Census," on page 71, line 16, after the designation "Secretary of Commerce," to strike out "$1,041,250" and insert "$862,125"; in line 17, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$782,330" and insert "$672,330"; and in line 19, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$130,000," so as to read:

For expenses for securing information for and compiling the census reports provided for by law, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; per diem compensation and expenses of enumerators, special agents, supervisors, supervisors' clerks, and interpreters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses; the cost of transcribing State, municipal, and other records; temporary rental of quarters outside the District of Columbia; not to exceed $5,000 for the employment by contract of personal services for the preparation of monographs on census subjects; not to exceed $26,000 for constructing tabulating machines and repairs to such machinery and other mechanical appliances, including technical, mechanical, and other personal services in connection therewith in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and the purchase of necessary machinery and supplies; and not to exceed $2,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the collection of statistics when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Commerce, $862,125, of which amount not to exceed $672,330 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, including not to exceed $130,000 for temporary employees who may be appointed by the Director of the Census under civil-service rules, at per diem rates to be fixed by him without regard to the provisions of the classification act of 1923, as amended, for the purpose of assisting in periodical inquiries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, at the end of line 11, to strike out "$39,900" and insert "$35,000," so as to read:

Testing machines: For maintenance and operation of testing machines, including personal services in connection therewith in the District of Columbia and in the field, for the determination by the Bureau of Standards of the physical constants and the properties of materials as authorized by law, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 23, after the word "field," to strike out "$32,320" and insert "$25,000," so as to read:

Investigation of fire-resisting properties: For investigation of fire-resisting properties of building materials and conditions under which they may be most efficiently used, and for the standardization of types of appliances for fire prevention, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 6, to strike out "$101,570" and insert "$90,000," so as to read:

Investigation of public-utility standards: For investigation of the standards of practice and methods of measurements of public utilities, such as gas, electric light, electric power, water, telephone, central-station heating, and electric-railway service, and the solution of the problems which arise in connection with standards in such service, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $90,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I very much dislike to interfere with or interrupt the rhythm of legislation. I desire, however, to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the several cuts in the Bureau of Standards. I assume that the chairman thinks that there is no way to avoid it, because of the attitude of the Senate in instructing the committee to make a certain amount of reduction.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the committee considered that very carefully; and in view of the attitude of the Senate and the action is has taken, we felt that we had cut that pretty reasonably, under the circumstances. There are a good many things which the Bureau of Standards can put off for a while.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the cut proposed in the appropriation for the Bureau of Standards is a good example of what I regard as false economy. The Bureau of Standards, from every point of comparison, is an aid in finding new wealth which I do not think is duplicated anywhere in the machinery of the Government. It is more than a great university. The salary accounts amount to a little over half a million dollars, but think how small an amount that is in contrast with what it takes to run any great university of the country, whose work is to find new things, rather than merely to distribute knowledge.

The Bureau of Standards is one of the most outstanding research organizations in the world, and what seems to me so unwise is to make cuts in the appropriations for some of these expert activities, where the salaries are very low. The present Presiding Officer [Mr. MOSES in the chair] will recall that when President Stratton resigned as head of the Bureau of Standards he was getting only $6,000 a year, and he was called away to take charge of one of the greatest research organizations of the world, where he received a salary of $25,000 a year. That is an illustration of the sort of sacrifice the scholarship found in that institution is now making for the Government. The cost in dollars and cents entailed by their activities is made up many times over in results to the Government.

I think every Senator here will recall the incident of one of the scientific research men of the Government who was experimenting in the extraction of gasoline from crude oil and discovered a method by which the increase in the amount of gasoline produced from a given amount of crude oil would more than ten times pay all the cost for a year of the Bureau of Mines, with which this scientist was connected. The morning after his announcement was made every great oil company was at his door in an endeavor to purchase the rights to the discovery, but the doctor was working under a contract such as we make with everybody who goes into any of our expert departments, providing that if there is any new discovery upon which there might be either a patent or a copyright, the man who makes it has not the ownership of it but has to turn it over to the Government for which he is working.

The single discovery to which I have referred, as I have stated before, was, in actual increase of wealth measured by dollars and cents, so vastly beyond what the entire institution would cost per year that it seems to me senseless on the part of the Federal Government to cripple an institution doing that sort of work.

It has just come to my attention that one of these research men has been for some time attempting to ascertain the secret of the light from the firefly, making the statement that that is the most perfect light with the least expendiure of energy that is known. Science seems to be led to believe that there is a possibility of finding the secret; and if it should be found, think of the revolution which would be made in the creation of light for utility purposes, to say nothing about any other direction in which it might be used.

If we look over the divisions of the work of the Bureau of Standards, dealing in colorization, dealing in refraction, dealing in various phases of activity which to-day are claiming the highest research in the universities of the world, we come to the conclusion that here is an institution in which are employed people engaged who are poorly paid, devoted to their work, seeking only to discover what is not yet known, in order to add to the sum total of the knowledge of the world, to say nothing about what they are doing in making tests for industry.

Mr. President, it seems to me that it is like saving at the spigot and letting it run loose at the bunghole, when we cut down the available fund stated for the administration of such a research unit as the Bureau of Standards.

I am saying nothing at all about the plant, about the ground, about the numerous buildings, or about the equipment of the buildings. I am speaking of the research carried on by these devoted men, the result of which is to add to the wealth of the country, materially speaking, to say nothing about any other element.

I had hoped that the Bureau of Standards at least would be saved these severe cuts which have been made.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I can not add to what has been said by the Senator from Ohio. I believe entirely that what he has asserted is exactly the fact.

From another standpoint, too, the cut against science in this bill is obvious in what has been done to the Bureau of Standards. It is asserted here—and something was said about it yesterday—that the Bureau of Standards has been treated exactly as every other activity of the Government has been treated. The actual mathematical demonstration is that the Bureau of Standards has been cut 19 per cent. The sacred cow of the Senate, the prohibition-enforcement sum appropriated, has been cut exactly 10 per cent, and when the endeavor was made to cut it further in order that the money thus taken might be applied to scientific pursuits, the amendment was beaten by 2 or 3 to 1 yesterday.

Very well; that is past. But here is a cut in a scientific department of the Government which does its work not only for the Federal Government but for the States, the cities, the counties, and every other political subdivision in the United States. Here is a department whose appropriation is cut in such a fashion that the department will be materially crippled in the future.

If you do not believe in that department, eliminate it. If you do not believe in it, cut out all of the appropriation and have no Bureau of Standards. But when through the years you have built up scientifically a Bureau of Standards that is doing the job, to cut off one-third of its employees and its active workers, as this bill practically will do, is something that will be crippling ultimately to the Government.

You can not build up this kind of scientific organization overnight. It takes years and years and years to do the job; and after the job has been done then at one fell swoop to destroy it, even in part, makes it a very, very difficult thing again to create the bureau.

I realize there is no use at this particular time—and in the singular mentality that afflicts us and the peculiar intellectual astigmatism that is ours—to deal at all with any of these items, and I am not going to attempt to do so. But I want the RECORD to show at least what is being done to the Bureau of Standards so that we may ultimately know in the days that are to come exactly what this hysteria has carried into accomplishment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 78, line 6, to strike out "$101,570" and to insert in lieu thereof "$90,000," so as to read:

Investigation of public-utility standards: For investigation of the standards of practice and methods of measurements of public utilities, such as gas, electric light, electric power, water, telephone, central-station heating, and electric-railway service, and the solution of the problems which arise in connection with standards in such service, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 12, after the word "law," to strike out "$46,160" and insert "$40,000," so as to read:

Testing miscellaneous materials: For testing miscellaneous materials, such as varnish materials, soap materials, inks, and chemicals, including supplies for the Government departments and independent establishments, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, as authorized by law, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 16, after the word "field," to strike out "$82,280" and insert "$74,280," so as to read:

Radio research: For investigation and standardization of methods and instruments employed in radio communication, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $74,280.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 23, after the word "field," to strike out "$15,180" and insert "$12,000," so as to read:

Color standardization: To develop color standards and methods of manufacture and of color measurements, with special reference to their industrial use in standardization and specification of colorants, such as dyestuffs, inks, and pigments, and other products, paint, paper, and textiles, in which color is a pertinent property, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 6, after the word "field," to strike out "$45,160" and insert "$40,000," so as to read:

Investigation of clay products: To study methods of measurement and technical processes used in the manufacture of pottery, brick, tile, terra cotta, and other clay products, and the study of the properties of the materials used in that industry, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 20, after the word "field," to strike out "$48,020" and insert "$40,000," so as to read:

Standardizing mechanical appliances: To develop methods of testing and standardizing machines, motors, tools, measuring instruments, and other apparatus and devices used in mechanical, hydraulic, and aeronautic engineering; for the comparative study of types of apparatus and methods of operation, and for the establishment of standards of performance; for the accurate determination of fundamental physical constants involved in the proper execution of this work; and for the scientific experiments and investigations needed in solving the problems which may arise in connection therewith, especially in response to the requirements of aeronautics and aviation for information of a purely scientific nature, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 24, after the word "field," to strike out "$25,180" and insert "$22,000," so as to read:

Investigation of optical and other types of glass: For the investigation of the problems involved in the production of optical and other types of glass, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $22,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 5, to strike out "$57,100" and insert "$50,000," so as to read:

Investigation of textiles: To investigate textiles, paper, leather, and rubber in order to develop standards of more durable quality and methods of measurement, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 17, after the word "field," to strike out "$82,520" and insert "$75,000," so as to read:

Sugar standardization: For the standardization and design of sugar-testing apparatus; the development of technical specifications for the various grades of sugars, especially involving the standardization and manufacture of sugars; for the study of the technical problems incidental to the collection of the revenue on sugar and to determine the fundamental scientific constants of sugars and other substances; for the standardization and production of rare and unusual types of sugars required for the medical service of the Government departments; and for other technical and scientific purposes, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $75,000.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Nebraska offers the following amendment: On page 80, line 17, to strike out "$75,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$94,520, of which sum at least $19,520 shall be available for the purpose of additional work on the problem of producing sugar from the Jerusalem artichoke."

Mr. JONES rose.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Washington reserve the point of order, if he had in mind to make one?

Mr. JONES. I intend to make a point of order that the item is not estimated for and has not been reported by a standing committee of the Senate, but I reserve it for the present.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, it must be obvious to everyone that we have done nothing for the farmer thus far during this session of the Congress, nothing of a specific character to alter his economic situation; and as compared with other industries, agriculture has been a major sufferer. It is for that reason that I am offering this amendment. It is for that reason that I am standing here and am about to make a unanimous-consent request that the question of the suspension of the rules may be submitted to the Senate for the purpose of making it possible to act upon the amendment which I have offered.

The purpose of the amendment is to enable the Bureau of Standards to continue the work which has been under way in that organization for a number of years to develop a method of producing sugar from artichokes at such a price that the sugar can compete with sucrose—that is, cane and beet sugar.

I am not thinking of this from the standpoint of sugar; I am thinking about it as a possibility for another crop for the farmers in this country; and if anyone needs relief and help at this time, it is the American farmer.

We are importing into this country every year about 4,300,000 tons of sugar. The value of that sugar is somewhere in the neighborhood of $250,000,000. It is possible that a large proportion of that sugar can be produced in this country if a cheap method of production of levulose can be developed.

This is what the Bureau of Standards has been working upon for years. It has already accomplished the production of corn sugar. The Bureau of Standards has made corn sugar a commercial fact in this country—yes, in the world. All that is necessary, in my opinion and in the opinion of officials of the Bureau of Standards, to make levulose, the finest sugar known, the sweetest sugar known, 75 per cent sweeter than cane or beet sugar—that is, sucrose—available in this country and make it producible upon a commercial scale at prices at which it can compete with sucrose, is to carry forward this work.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, am I right in my recollection that some work has already been done by the Bureau of Standards on this matter?

Mr. HOWELL. They have been working on this problem since before 1925.

Mr. COPELAND. And have made considerable progress?

Mr. HOWELL. They have made great progress.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator desires an appropriation in order that the activity may be continued?

Mr. HOWELL. Yes; they are reaching the point now where they can see the light. Without funds they can not go on. I am talking not so much for sugar, but for another crop for the American farmer.

Mr. COPELAND. But the Senator is not altering my own conviction that here is a product which might in time become essentially an American product, and that there might be developed this new crop for the farmers and also a new sugar for the American people.

Mr. HOWELL. It is a fact that the artichoke is a native tuber. It was discovered in this country near Cape Cod before 1620 by Champlain. The artichoke was subsequently developed in France, and there are about 200,000 acres of artichokes grown annually in France to-day. They use artichokes for sheep and cattle feed. The artichoke is a native of this country and grows in nearly every State in the Union. It is a tuber which grows upon the root of a native sunflower plant, and the advantage that the production of artichokes has over the production of beets is that hand labor is not required to produce the tuber. As we are aware, the cost of weeding and thinning out and topping beets is about $25 an acre, but artichokes can be produced as corn is produced. They can be planted by machinery, they can be cultivated with corn cultivators, and they can be dug with potato diggers. In other words, it is an American crop for American workmen. It is well known that American workmen will not weed, thin out, and top beets even at $25 an acre.

All that is requested to continue this work, which seems to be reaching the point of fruition, is an increase of $12,000 in the appropriation above what was estimated by the Bureau of the Budget. It is a fact that at Ames, at the University of Iowa, there is a levulose plant in operation at the present time, producing about 20 pounds of levulose a day. Of course, manufactured upon so small a scale, the cost of levulose production is high, but all the levulose is being sold to a pharmaceutical company. It is a sugar that can be consumed by diabetics. This plant is in operation every day; but, of course, the cost of production is so high that the sugar could not compete with sucrose.

What the Bureau of Standards is attempting to do is to cheapen the process so that the sugar can be made in competition with ordinary sugar and thereby make possible another crop throughout this country for the American farmer. It would be a material aid to the farmer. I have already invited attention to the fact that we have done nothing of a constructive character for the farmer during this session of Congress. We have loaned him some money, not nearly so much as we have to other interests. We have given aid in some cases where he was suffering from drought and storm. But we have done nothing for him of a constructive nature during this session of Congress. Here is a possibility, at a small cost, of contributing to this work and end. In view of these facts, I request unanimous consent for a vote upon a suspension of the rules that we may act upon the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for a vote upon his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I shall have to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, if I heard aright, the Chair did not state my proposition. I asked unanimous consent for a vote on a suspension of the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it comes to the same thing.

Mr. HOWELL. I had hoped the Senator from Washington would not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state it in the terms desired by the Senator from Nebraska although the Chair is of the opinion that it comes to the same thing. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for suspension of the rule in order that a vote may be taken upon his amendment.

Mr. HOWELL. No, Mr. President; I did not ask for that. I asked for a vote on a suspension of the rule. I wanted to proceed just as if I had filed a request or motion for a vote upon suspension of the rule yesterday. I do not ask that this be considered unless two-thirds of the Senate desire it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair now understands the Senator to desire to wipe out all proceedings whatever up to the question of taking a vote upon the matter of suspending the rule, waiving the notice and the time required by the rule. Is that correct?

Mr. HOWELL. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submits that unanimous-consent request to the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. I shall not object if we can proceed to a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the question is, Shall the rule be suspended in order that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska shall be considered?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, no one having answered to the call of the roll, I ask permission to withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida withdraws his suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

CANCELLATION OF FOREIGN DEBTS

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to take a short time to discuss a matter not connected with the bill before the Senate. Recent events have brought the subject of the debts owing to the United States by foreign countries up for discussion again. I do not think it unfortunate that the subject has been brought up for discussion at this time. We are soon to have a great and solemn referendum upon almost all political questions, and it may not be unwise to have this subject freshly before the people from this time until after the election.

It has been proposed again that the debts owing to the United States should be canceled in the interest of world economic recovery. It is contended that the debts impede economic recovery, and that the United States, as it were, is standing in the way of such recovery; that by insisting upon those debts being paid it embarrasses the progress which would otherwise be made in economic affairs.

Mr. President, it is well to recall that we once made a reduction of these debts. We did so upon the argument that it was in the interest of financial and economic betterment of world conditions. If we should turn back to the debates upon that subject or turn to the newspapers of that day, we would find that argument advanced that the reductions were essential to the economic and financial progress and recovery of the world. But, while we made a reduction, and a very large one, as I shall undertake to show in a few moments, it did not have the desired effect. The recovery did not take place. The improvement was not at hand.

It was by reason of the fact, in my judgment, that the policies and programs obtaining in Europe made recovery impossible. It is my contention now that although we should cancel these debts in their entirety, if the policies now obtaining in Europe and the programs now offered to the world from that continent should continue to obtain, the cancellation of the debts would not have the slightest effect upon the economic recovery of the world. Economic recovery calls for a broader and more drastic program than cancellation of debts due the United States.

These debts, Mr. President, are debts owing to the American taxpayers. I have no doubt that the American taxpayer looks upon them as an economic factor and that if a program could be offered which would assure the betterment of world conditions, the opening of markets and a restoration of business in a general way, the American taxpayer would be perfectly sympathetic in the consideration of such a proposition. But no such proposition has ever been offered. No such proposition is now offered. The propositions made at all times result in unloading the entire burden upon the American taxpayer without any assurance and without any reason to assume that there will be an improvement of economic conditions throughout the world. The things which would make economic recovery are always omitted.

Before I discuss that question let me recall that the American taxpayer has been exceedingly generous in regard to these debts. He has not complained of the generosity upon the part of his Government but has in fact generously indorsed it. The settlements which were made years ago resulted in reductions or in cancellations to the extent to which I am now going to give the figures. These figures have been given to the world in different amounts, but I believe the figures which I am now offering to the Senate are correct. I have taken some trouble to have them checked and rechecked.

In the settlement which took place shortly after the World War we canceled the obligations of Belgium to the extent of 53.5 per cent, the obligations of Czechoslovakia 25.1 per cent, the obligations of France 52.8 per cent, the obligations of Great Britain 19.7 per cent, the obligations of Italy 75.4 per cent, the obligations of Poland 19.5 per cent, the obligations of Rumania 25.1 per cent, and the obligations of Yugoslavia 69.7 per cent. In other words, Mr. President, after the close of the World War, at the time the adjustments were undertaken, foreign governments were indebted to the United States, in round numbers, in the sum of $12,000,000,000; but when the adjustments had been completed the then present value of the debt was $5,800,000,000, being a cancellation of over $6,000,000,000. This cancellation was made in the interest of a better economic condition; it was made in the interest of financial recovery and of economic solidarity throughout Europe. Those things did not happen; and as I shall contend later, there was a reason for it. Let us not be led into further cancellation upon a one-sided, incomplete, and unfair program.

The most recent proposal, Mr. President, with reference to these debts was by a distinguished political leader, and is to the effect that we should forget the debts for 20 years. The first observation to be made in regard to that proposal is that if we forget them for 20 years they will be regarded and treated as canceled. If the debts are of such a nature and are so onerous and the conditions in the debtor countries are such at this time that they must be passed on for the period of 20 years, there will never again be an opportunity to consider the debts as factors in the budgets of the nations of Europe; they will be regarded as canceled. It will be impossible to restate them. When the 20 years are up, the arguments will be unanswerable to forget them forever. A leading economist has declared that a moratorium for five years would end the debts for all time.

However, Mr. President, there is another feature of this proposal which leaves no room for doubt that it is a program of cancellation poorly concealed. In addition to the fact that we are to forget the debts for 20 years, the proposal is made that for every $100,000,000 of goods purchased in this country by a nation owing us $25,000,000 shall be canceled upon the debt. That was put forward apparently with the idea that it would increase the demands of those countries for American commodities, that it would enlarge their purchases in this country and would therefore compensate us, to some extent, for the cancellation by the increased market for our products. An examination of this proposal discloses that if those nations purchased from us no more than they have been purchasing on an average for the last few years—indeed, if they continue the same purchases which they have been making—the result would be a cancellation of the debts.

For instance, the total sum which Great Britain would pay us in the next 20 years would be $3,645,605,000. If Great Britain should not increase her purchases in this country, but should make such purchases as on an average would be the same as those of the last several years, the amount which would be due her in the way of a credit upon her purchases would be $3,302,760,000.

The cancellation which would take place under the program proposed would be practically the same as the amount which she would owe us, although she had not increased her purchases in any respect whatever. If trade should continue upon the normal average basis now obtaining cancellation would be the result. There is nothing in that proposal to stimulate trade with us or to open new markets for our products.

Belgium would pay us in the next 20 years $183,883,000, but if she should receive cancellation according to her average purchases for the last seven years the amount of the cancellation would be $433,760,000.

Italy's debt would also be entirely wiped out. France would not earn complete cancellation by normal buying. The general effect of the program, however, would be the cancellation of those debts in the next 20 years although the purchases of the different nations had not augmented in any respect whatever during that time.

Mr. President, this proposition is a proposal of cancellation and cancellation without any benefit to the American taxpayer.

The question then is, Who would benefit by the proposal to forget the debts for 20 years? The American taxpayer could not benefit, because, as I have shown, there would be no increased purchases; there would be no augmentation of our market; there would be no enlargement of our sales abroad in order to bring about the cancellation. If it were true, as I presume it was supposed to be true, that $25,000,000 being offered by way of a cancellation would increase, to a very large extent, the purchases of foreign nations in this country, there could be a justification for the contention that the increase in our market would warrant the cancellation, but there is no necessity for any increase in order to secure cancellation.

In other words, a foreign nation trading with our country would have no occasion to cease buying in some other country and to buy more in this country in order to bring about cancellation. Cancellation would result if the purchases here were the same as they had been during the last several years.

There is, however, a class of people who would benefit by reason of the acceptance of the proposal. We have loaned abroad since 1915 some $17,000,000,000. The largest portion of that sum was loaned in Europe. Undoubtedly if the public debts were forgiven for 20 years or forgotten for 20 years the private creditors would be greatly advantaged by that situation. The American taxpayer would be subrogated, as it were, or subordinated to the interests of the private debtors. The American taxpayers would be asked to step aside in the interests of those who have private claims. These claimants could likewise clean up in 20 years.

Mr. President, I have no desire to see those holding private claims lose, but it is not fair or just to ask that all the taxpayers surrender their right to the collection of these debts in order that a very few of the taxpayers may have the advantage of such action. It does not seem to me that it is a desirable proposition. The only persons who could possibly benefit by reason of the proposal, it seems to me, would be those who hold private loans in Europe. It would be, in my judgment, infinitely better to propose an absolute cancellation than to propose an indirect cancellation in the manner in which it has been proposed.

Mr. President, I think we were all interested last Sunday in reading the statement of Sir Austen Chamberlain. It is relevant to the discussion here. It rather answers the contention made by the author of this proposal that these debts can not be collected. Sir Austen says:

> We have put our house in order; we have balanced our budget and ceased to borrow. * * *
> We have returned to the way by which British credit was built up, and, instead of suffering from loss of confidence and withdrawal of foreign balances, we have been embarrassed lately by the plethora of foreign money offered on the London market.
> The British financial year ended March 31, and the accounts show a surplus of revenue over expenditures of £365,000, instead of the deficit of £70,000,000 threatened last September.
> The result is really more favorable than this shows, for instead of taking £23,000,000 from the dollar exchange on account of the £33,000,000, as proposed by Lord Snowden, less than £13,000,000 have been so withdrawn; the American and French credits have been repaid, except the portion of the French credit which was in private hands and cannot be redeemed till they fall due in August, and £32,500,000 have been devoted to the redemption of debt.

It would seem from this statement that there is no occasion for assuming, as has been assumed of late, that these foreign countries can not meet their obligations. France is equally able to pay. There is no reason to assume that either Great Britain or France is unable to meet its obligations, and, that being true, there would be nothing gained upon the part of the American taxpayers by cancelling $25,000,000 of the debts due us for every $100,000,000 of purchases made in this country, when those foreign nations are under obligation to make no greater purchases in order to secure the cancellation than they have been making heretofore. Viewed from any standpoint, whether of ability to pay or the advisability of cancellation, the American taxpayer can not receive any benefits from a proposal of that kind.

Mr. President, how much of the budgets of European countries are made up of the debts due the United States? This is the percentage which we are seeking to relieve those nations from taking care of in order that they may develop their markets and extend their trade. In the budget of Belgium the percentage of our debt is 2.45; the percentage of our debt in the budget of Great Britain is 3.75; of the budget of Italy, it is 1.41 per cent; of the budget of France, it is 2.65 per cent. In other words, the budgets of those nations when considered as a whole show that debts are too slight to justify the claim that they are the source of the trouble in Europe. They are a small factor.

But, Mr. President, not one dollar of any of those percentages, even small as they are, comes out of the taxpayers of France, of England, and of Italy, or of the other nations of which we may speak, but which are of less consequence. The amounts have been collected from Germany, and I venture to say that the cancellation of the debt to the extent of $25,000,000 a year for every $100,000,000 worth of goods purchased in this country would not change the situation economically or financially of the taxpayers of those countries in the slightest degree. The effect would never be felt by the taxpayers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator the figures showing how the percentages given by him compare with the amounts spent by the several nations referred to by him for military purposes?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I have.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator state them?

Mr. BORAH. I am coming to that in a few moments.

It can not be assumed, Mr. President, in other words, that these debts due to the United States are oppressing the people of the respective countries which owe them. The amounts are entirely too small. In addition to that, small as they are, the people of those nations do not themselves raise the money for them.

Mr. President, what is the situation in Europe? What are the things which stand in the way of economic recovery?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the able Senator from Idaho permit a query?

Mr. BORAH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LEWIS. Upon the basis of the presentation by the Senator, in his concise treatment and representation, may I ask him what foundation or justification does he see for the moratorium, suspending payments on our foreign debts, being asked for at the time it was?

Mr. BORAH. The moratorium was proposed because of the conditions in Germany. The situation was such, or believed to be such, that Germany would be unable to meet her payments; and the moratorium was proposed in order that the nations which were collecting from Germany might relieve Germany of payment during that period of time.

Mr. LEWIS. Not related to the condition of America and our credit?

Mr. BORAH. I did not assume so; no.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. There were seven nations that were indebted to us from which payments were due that were receiving nothing from Germany, and an eighth nation that was receiving but $120,000 a year from Germany. Why should a moratorium have been provided for those nations?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I apprehend that if those nations alone had been concerned there would have been no thought of offering a moratorium. It was the condition superimposed by reason of the obligations running to the larger nations which seemed to make it necessary.

Mr. HOWELL. Does the Senator think it was really necessary in connection with the other nations? Does he recall that not a single nation asked for a moratorium—not one? The moratorium was granted without a request. In nearly every one of these debt settlements there was a provision for an extension of the time of payment if the nation could not pay; but no nation had made any such request.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me say that I do not know what formal request came forward; but anyone who was familiar with the conditions in Germany last June must have known conclusively that Germany could not pay.

If I may be permitted to make a personal reference, on the 6th of June, some nine days before the moratorium was proposed, in a public statement I stated that it was my judgment that Germany could not pay; that the conditions were such that she would be utterly unable to meet the obligations due, and, further, that it was my opinion that if a collapse occurred in Germany it would spread throughout Europe, and we ourselves would not wholly escape the effect of it. I did not get that information by reason of the fact that France or Great Britain or some other nation had indicated that they wanted time, or that they, if given time, would give Germany time; but I derived my information from conditions prevailing in Germany upon facts which I thought were reliable. I have no doubt but that they were reliable.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho further yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. But these debtors certainly ought to have requested, under their agreements, the leniency which they desired. In one case a nation had made a payment to the Treasury Department; the moratorium was granted, and the payment returned. So it indicates that it was not necessary in the case of that nation to have afforded a moratorium.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire at this time to discuss the question of the moratorium. That is a thing of the past. I am willing to agree with the Senator to the extent of admitting that the results of the moratorium were disappointing; but it was not by reason of the United States that they were disappointing. It was by reason of the course of other nations, and the conduct of those other nations clearly reveals to me why it was that they had no desire to see Germany relieved.

In dealing with this question the Senator ought not to overlook the fact that the question of reparations has two phases. One is financial, one is money; the other is political; and there are nations in Europe, in my opinion, which consider the political side of vastly more importance than the financial side.

Mr. President, there is no doubt about the serious economic conditions prevailing in Europe. I should be delighted to see a program proposed which would have for its purpose relieving the conditions in Europe. I would gladly, in so far as I could, cooperate for the success of such a program. Any proposal which might be made which would give reasonable assurance of relief of that condition should be met sympathetically by the United States and considered in a sympathetic way. It seems to me, however, that no proposal has ever been made that reaches down to the fundamental conditions which obtain in Europe. No proposal has been made which would remove the obstacles that now lie in the way of recovery.

It has been said that the war ended with the armistice on the 11th of November, 1918. The war, however, did not end on the 11th of November, 1918. The war has been carried on as remorselessly and to some extent more destructively since that time than it was prior to that time; it reaches more people, encompasses the misery of more human beings, and results in greater human suffering. The economic war, the financial war, has never ceased. It was a continuation of the war upon the battlefield. It has been said—I do not know whether the statement can be supported by history or not—that when the Versailles treaty was signed, Clemenceau declared, "This is a continuation of the war." So it has been, Mr. President; and until measures are taken which relieve and change that condition of affairs, it is but idle waste of the people's money to cancel the American debts, or to pour more money into Europe. It is one thing to be just, it is one thing to want to help Europe, but it is a shameless exploitation of the American people, and a sad commentary on American leadership to offer help under a program which in the end means universal bankruptcy.

We canceled over six billions. It had no effect whatever because of the policies which obtained; and even if we should cancel these debts in full, in the hope that it would build up markets and revive trade and enliven business, in my opinion, it would not have that effect at all unless these other fundamental changes should take place.

So long as the peace treaties remain unrevised and in their present form, there will be that continuation of intellectual, emotional, and spiritual war, and there will be, in my opinion, no disarmament in Europe of any moment, or of any worth.

The Senator asked a moment ago for the figures with reference to armaments; and they are pertinent at this particular juncture.

The naval expenditures of Great Britain for the last year were $256,867,096, not including naval aviation.

Naval aviation, $86,246,459.

Land armaments, $334,937,692.

Total, $678,051,247.

The naval expenditures of France were $146,212,852.

Land armaments, $371,697,964.

Total, $517,910,816.

Italy's naval expenditures, not including naval aviation, were $81,000,000.

Land armaments, $269,057,884.

Let us look at the armed forces in those countries.

According to the latest reports of the War Department, the total organized forces of France at the present time are 6,942,559; Italy, 5,985,597; Poland, 1,977,095; Rumania, 1,725,660; Czechoslovakia, 1,647,121; Yugoslavia, 1,341,568; Great Britain, 744,646. These constitute the burden which makes any proposal to bring relief by canceling debts almost absurd.

It will be observed, with reference to those countries in Europe, that they are armed at this time more completely and more heavily than they have ever been at any time except in the midst of the great World War. To cancel debts of a comparatively few million dollars upon the theory that it is going to help the business and economic conditions of Europe without a change in this situation is, in my judgment, a perfectly futile thing. It is simply impossible. These armament burdens mean economic distress, mean misery and poverty for countless millions, and there is not enough wealth in the United States to bring prosperity to them while this program continues.

Even more important to recovery than the question of armaments is that of reparations. How can there be recovery until reparations are canceled, removed as a destructive force in the economic life of Europe.

Doctor Salter has lately written a book upon the subject of reparations; and certainly Doctor Salter views the matter as sympathetically as anyone could well do. He has been the financial adviser of the League of Nations. He is in sympathy with the views generally entertained by the Allies. He says on reparations:

> To tell the tale of reparation, and the questions with which it is intertwined, would be to write the history of postwar Europe. With its weight, its uncertainty, the methods of its discussion and its enforcement, the passions which it has expressed and aroused, it has been like an old man of the sea on the back of a continent struggling to get on its feet, after four years of prostration and enfeeblement. It has been a principal obstacle to every attempt at recovery. It has disturbed the relations of old allies no less than of old enemies. It is one of the two facets of the French demand—payment and security—which has been at the heart of the relations between France and Germany, itself the central political problem of Europe. It has thus been a principal factor in the tendency of countries to realign themselves into opposing groups and alliances, the alternative to the "collective" system of the league and the Kellogg pact, on which the future peace of the world depends. The cash results have not been proportionate to these consequences.
> The first characteristic of a reparation obligation is that it is a dead-weight charge. It represents damage done in a past war. It has no counterpart in a productive capital plant, such as a factory or its machinery, yielding an annual return out of which payments to the creditors can be made. It is thus essentially different from the capital obligation of an industrial company financed by a foreign loan. It is therefore a burden on the debtor State, requiring to be met by taxation, which has its normal result of reducing the taxpayers' standard of living and purchasing power, and the savings out of which domestic capital is formed; but, unlike normal taxation, it gives no service in return, such as protection of life and property and the provision of education or social insurance.

The key to the European situation, for good or for bad, is the reparation problem. If Europe can not solve the reparation problem, if the countries interested are unable to adjust that problem, it is useless—yes; it is cruelly unjust—to ask the American taxpayer to aid Europe by canceling debts, and equally useless to talk to the American banker about aiding Europe by lending more money.

Unless the fundamental questions which inhere in the European situation can be adjusted, it is not within the power of the United States, however liberal and generous its policy may be, to reconstruct, reanimate, or rebuild Europe in the slightest degree. If these matters are adjusted, then a wholly different problem is presented.

I do not know whether the reparation question can be settled or not. I do not know whether armaments can be reduced or not. No man can look into the future and even speculate with any degree of certainty. But we do know that until those things are settled the United States will be powerless to aid in the readjustment of conditions in Europe. To talk of cancellation of debts with the hope of restoring better conditions is to wholly misunderstand the problem.

It seems to me, therefore, that when we are considering the question of aiding Europe, opening up the markets of Europe, of finding purchasers for American products, or rehabilitating the purchasing power of the countless millions in Europe, we should extend our consideration beyond the mere question of the debts owed to the United States by Europe. The United States is not standing in the way of recovery by refusing to cancel debts. No program is before the United States which would make cancellation even an intelligent act, much less an effective act for human betterment. Before the United States should receive condemnation, some program should be presented which deals with the real problem involved in world recovery. For myself, I anxiously await such a program.

It is not within the power of the United States to readjust the reparations, and neither is it within the power of the United States to do very much more with reference to disarmament; with reference to land forces, practically nothing. These are European questions, and we are not in a position to be of any great help to the European situation. They are problems which Europe must settle for herself.

So far as the debts are concerned, they are a very small item in this controversy. They might be important if we were considering the entire program, the entire readjustment of conditions; but considered alone, they are a mere bagatelle in the question of adjusting the economic conditions of Europe or of the world.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, a mere statement of the present worth of the European debts, such as has been made by the distinguished Senator from Idaho, does not give a notion of what these debts mean to the American people. I have no doubt as to the correctness of the present worth of these various debts as presented by the Senator. However, every dollar represented by these debts was borrowed by the American people and is now owed by the American people. All the payments Europe is to make to us reduced to equal annual installments amounts to but $317,000,000 a year for 62 years, but the interest charges we have been paying on the $12,000,000,000 we owe as a result of these debts have amounted to about $500,000,000 a year.

Moreover, we have not been receiving $317,000,000 each year. The payments which are to be made are small at the beginning. The larger payments are due in the distant future. The consequence is that since the date of settlement of each of the debts all the payments made by Europe to us added together and deducted from the interest we ourselves have paid since the settlements on the $12,000,000,000 that is outstanding will leave a deficit of $2,369,000,000 up to the end of this fiscal year.

This accounts for the Treasury deficit confronting us now. In other words, everything Europe has paid us deducted from the interest we have paid since the dates of settlement leaves us in the hole some $2,369,000,000, and every year this deficit will be increased.

Therefore, as I have said, whenever we consider what we have already canceled and what Europe has agreed to pay us, in justice to ourselves we should do so in juxtaposition with the principal and interest obligations which we have outstanding.

Mr. President, what does it all really mean? We will have to pay that twelve billions; that is settled. All that Europe has agreed to do is to help us pay our interest charges, but in so doing the debtor nations have fallen short in fully helping us out since the debt settlements to the amount of $2,369,000,000 down to July 1 next, and that deficit will constantly increase.

We have been the banker to Europe and have played our part well, so far as loaning and paying Europe money is concerned, but not otherwise. Can one imagine a banker granting a general moratorium to debtors without a request therefor? Not one of these debtor nations asked for a moratorium. Who, then, made the request? Who was it that urged the granting of a moratorium? It was our "invisible government," which includes our international bankers. That is where the request for a moratorium originated, if such a request were made—and certainly a moratorium should not have been granted without most urgent requests.

Mr. President, as the banker to Europe, we certainly ought to enjoy the prestige and respect which accrues to an American banker from his clients. However, we have conducted ourselves, not as a banker, but rather as a suppliant so far as Europe is concerned. Instead of enjoying the consideration to which we have been entitled because of the unmatched sacrifices we have made on behalf of Europe, we have been called "Shylocks."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am sensitive lest I impose myself on this generous body—generous particularly in its acceptance of me and forbearance from time to time of such observations as I have imposed upon it. But the presentation of the eminent Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, makes pertinent to-day an observation which, if justified, must be taken very seriously; if not justified, should be banished as an unfounded fear. I wish to speak of it.

I recall, Mr. President, that we have it from the great bard that when the king is brought forth upon renowned occasion the courier introduces him to the audience, saying:

> Pardon, gentles all, the flat unraised spirits that have dared on this unworthy scaffold to bring forth so great an object.

I hesitate for myself to bring forth that which in comparison to all around me could be so much more appropriately produced and sustained with so much greater strength than I can accord to this audience.

I charge, from the station from which my voice now takes its way, that this matter, which the eminent Senator from Idaho has discussed with such clearness, lucidity, and power, has in it the threat to find a method of canceling the debts due from these European nations to America. It is a new-founded propaganda. It is to demand anew the suspending of these obligations from collection without regard to the opposition to cancellation or of any future compliance with the contract of payment of the debt. It is a part of an insidious conspiracy, which I impeach by that accusation.

Eminent gentlemen of Europe, commingling with that set of gentlemen described by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], who has just spoken, as "international bankers," and who received the silhouette picture of themselves from the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], only lately, that should accompany these gentlemen as a hideous shadow throughout all their lives—it is these originals of the picture that hope to terrorize the United States to accept the situation as presented by them and surrender to the "hold-up" demand. This highwayman's international extortion is in words such as, "Gentlemen of the American Congress, you will either prepare now to cancel these debts by some declaration which achieves the purpose, or you shall prepare to enter into some arrangement with these European powers looking to complete suspension of any collection; or, gentlemen, prepare yourselves for the moratorium which has lately been uttered and issued, to be made permanent. You will take one or the other, Mr. America, from us." The powerful international finance, with its indescribable force, will at first assert and then impel and then by its methods extort America to yield to one of these exigencies. Either or all will be put on the ground of the necessity of America, we are told in bold assertion.

First, from America it will be proclaimed that the financiers of this country see no restoration in the business interests of America until these debts of Europe have met some form of an adjustment partaking of the character of cancellation or suspension. Gentlemen lately in the last three weeks representing different species of finance and commerce of the world have been uttering this threat to us, or against the United States. At the same time, Mr. President, I invite my honorable colleagues, with their indulgence to me, to note that on the same day and the day after there would then come forth the similar proclamation from Europe: "Premier Tardieu, from France, makes the public announcement that this is essential in order that there shall be any consideration of a revival of friendship of nations. Mr. Austin Chamberlain, of England, coincides. At the same time Mr. Tardieu demands that there shall be security to France tendered and supported by America with the nations of Europe affording army and navy in the behalf of France should the necessity from her point of view arise to demand it." In such resort the United States pays in one of two ways—to pay directly for the expense, or to cancel the debts France owes her to the extent of the necessary expense of the military protection and international police.

At the same time the bankers of our own country announce in the last four days that not until we have entered into some convention with Europe that shall reach an understanding looking to cancellation or suspension of these debts will there be any effort made to revive America to her own prosperity, give impetus to her home trade, or establish her home national credit.

Mr. President, I wish to impugn no nation beyond that where justification is apparent to all mankind. Yet I can not escape a sinister conclusion from what the eminent Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, has set forth in his declarations.

It is apparent, I charge, that the new demand for cancellation or suspension has been put forth lately and again daily issued from self-styled authority and sent to the United States for the purpose of educating the American mind to the fate, saying, sir: "Gentlemen of America, you will have no prosperity to your toiler, you will have no commerce to your manufacturer, you will have no finance to your money markets until you have settled the simple fact of acceding to the cancellation of the debts of Europe or suspension of them. Now, gentlemen, if it is your hope in America to revive the destinies of your country, this is the initial point upon which we advise you to start at once on the path to the destiny of ending these obligations by surrendering them."

Who are these "we"—these gentlemen called "international bankers," who constantly advise us? Mr. President, an investigation on the part of any gentleman around us as to these particular men who have brought to this Nation great dishonor, and to its people irreparable loss from these loans where there can never be a dollar collected, and from the debacle there shall follow the disaster and distress which the holders of the so-called securities must endure. Sirs, these men are not bankers. The honorable bankers of America, high-class financiers, gentlemen of honor, who occupy their places in the banks discharging that particular function along the lines and regulations of commerce—they are bankers. But these gentlemen who are designated among themselves as "international bankers" and committed the outrageous trespass on their own people are ordinary speculating brokers who have entered into the business of getting the bonds of these foreign countries by any form of contract, and under the representation that they can deliver them to America and with high-power salesmanship sell them and obtain American money. From this trickery consummated they earn commissions in the vast millions, as shown by the investigation under the guidance of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. These sums of profit are pay for the misrepresentation, first, that they make to the countries abroad that the United States is anxious to expend its money in their behalf in buying their securities; second, in the further misrepresentation they make to the United States purchaser as to the value of those securities.

Sir, I assert in my place that if the United States shall now proceed upon any one extreme duty, now due, it is to bring an action in such appropriate form against these gentlemen, called the international bankers, who have brought these losses upon the people of the United States, and to hold them responsible as a part of the conspiracy, themselves guilty as conspirators in the system that has robbed the public of the money and obtain a judgment against the authors of the system for the full amounts due, and bring all in court, and those who have projected the conspiracy. If the Government would but give a gesture in this direction, it would not only tend to console those who hope for something to offset their inconsolable loss but would serve as a salutary lesson against a repetition of these financial crimes upon the public confidence, and this betrayal of the credulity and trust of American citizens.

Now I come to but one other suggestion which I want to urge. This is the conspiracy that I am bold enough to charge, that is now afoot to invest the American people with the fear that "unless they do cancel these debts abroad, there will be no revival of prosperity at home. This is being pressed now to justify the citizen in the coming political campaign in surrendering his opposition." He is to be told in the election that he must adopt the suggestion of cancellation or, if not cancellation, then be prepared for an increased or extended moratorium. This new moratorium to be such a permanent one that it will operate as a suspension of these obligations from which during the lifetime of the present generation there will not be collected a dollar of payment due. In this connection the influential gentlemen have also inspired a thought in our land to oppose every form of national defense of the American Nation. To do this successfully they will educate the public mind that a proper and appropriate navy for the defense of America is itself an inroad upon the Treasury and therefore is unjustified. That to their point of view such proper preparation is one of "robbery of the tax payer." When this is successful then they take the next step. They cut the Navy to weakness. They reduce the defenses to impotence, and when such is done, conscious that we are unable to meet the affront of nations in Europe or to resent it, these marplot managers of internal finance will assert that we avoid the result of the assault that is threatened by conceding the demand of those nations for cancellation of the debt. When these opponents of America have reduced us where we have no proper power of defense to meet and resent the affront, they feel we have nothing else to do but to meet the situation by acceding to their demands.

Gentlemen, my colleagues of the Senate, hear me. I do not want war. I have seen enough of it. We are paying a dread penalty as the result of one war we entered into lately. We have seen the whole world suffer. We are confronted with the most remarkable spectacle that history has ever recorded in the annals of time. Here was a great conflict with 33 nations involved. Every citizen of the day is compelled now to certify that not one nation involved has profited as a result of the venture, not one that has not come out in bankruptcy to a great degree. Those in possession of the lands which they have taken as a prize have lost everything of profit and inherited only sadness and distress. Everywhere the picture which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has correctly limned blazes hideously on the eyes. Yet, despite all this multiplication of horrors and destruction, the nations, the victims, have not hesitated to prepare for something that is just beyond and in their contemplation.

Senators, my colleagues, some of you have served with me up and down through the years in one way or another; let me, as a brother lawyer speaking to his fellow lawyers, ask, by the basis of the law of circumstantial evidence, what reason will you submit to your fellow mankind for an enlightened people, such as we have around us, to increase their Army and Navy to an extent beyond that of 1914 when the World War broke out? Why do they maintain it to the awful extent that it exists if it is not necessary—if there be not an object that they have in their mind as a justification for imposition and trespass upon their own people and a direct violation of every ethical rule of humanity on earth; of Christianity in the heaven? Can it be a useless gesture? Is it for the mere purpose that they may build armies and display them? Is it to disport them on the parade ground in their gilded uniforms when their royal master shall come out with glittering spear to behold them? That can not be.

Then, in view of this fact—and fact it is before you—that there are some purposes, these United States can not now yield to the gathering that is at Geneva called a disarmament conference of other nations in the world who bide the time when they shall dictate to us the limitations of our power of defense against every assault they brood upon making against us.

If I had my way I would withdraw any American representative from this gathering at Geneva and say to the European nations, "If you are sincere, gentlemen, in your pretenses, which seven times you have made since the World War and seven times deceived a hopeful America, as well as a trusting world, then among yourselves sit you down, settle upon your plan of disarmament, and show that these accumulations of armies and navies are not for the object of another conflict contemplated by you, and then with this gesture hold out some good faith on your part. But to draw the United States in by which she is to be one of the people whom you asked to dictate to you as to the method of your disarmament which you never expect to obey, and which you have ever promised and always deceived; but by virtue of the license that the United States having dictated to you, you get the right in turn to dictate to her, and if she gets from you the promises which you never expect to fulfill, you in the meantime exact from her promises to reduce her defense which you know she will fulfill."

I would withdraw those American representatives and I would say, "For Europe we grant the presumption of the best of good faith." I would salute her with friendship. I would request her to carry out promises in such disarmament as discloses that she seeks friendship for her own neighbors, that she has no desire to carry out a conflict for which she is preparing and through which this vast array force is to fight something and assault somewhere—all is being prepared at the instance of some secret command and for the uses of these nations who are incurring the obligations of immeasurable money and presenting the picture of universal destruction in the display of this bristling array of death to the world.

Mr. President, what I wish to say, and which I repeat at the expense of probably burdening my colleagues, is this: I want to announce to my country and to the eminent State which I in part represent that the scheme is now afoot deliberately in a conspiracy well ordered by these master gentlemen who conceive themselves as having all the intellect and, after the order of the Scripture in the Book of Job, believing that intellect will die with them when they pass away—that they have put the plan afoot to educate the American public that in the threat saying "before you can hope to prosper at home and before any aid will be given you by the bankers of your community you will first agree to cancel the debts due these international bankers. Refuse to obey the demand, we will continue your condition as one hopeless and helpless." Sir, as to these, by whatever name they go, bankers, brokers, or conspirators with their cloudy shrouding by whatever character they live, in every one of their pretenses I trust my country will arouse itself and in the realization of the truth, cry out against them the malediction of Lady Macbeth, "Out, damned spot! out!"

STATE, JUSTICE, JUDICIARY, COMMERCE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9349) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent having been granted, the question is, Shall the rules be suspended for the purpose of permitting the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] to offer the amendment which has already been reported?

Mr. JONES. While I did not invoke the rule and was willing to waive the one day's notice, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I take the liberty again to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have done nothing constructive for the farmer during this session of Congress. The Bureau of Standards has been working on an experiment to provide a new crop for the farmers of the country, and is now getting near the point of fruition. Through the efforts of the bureau and information which it has obtained, the Iowa State University now has a levulose plant that is in operation and is producing 20 pounds of levulose a day, which is being sold by the college to pharmaceutical enterprises in this country.

I am merely calling the fact to the attention of the Senate so that it may be known that it is practicable to grow, and the prospect is hopeful that such an additional crop as artichokes may be grown in this country for the production of sugar, of which we purchase from abroad $250,000,000 worth a year.

All the Bureau of Standards wants to keep on with this work is $12,000 above the Budget estimate. I am not thinking about sugar; I am thinking about another crop for the American farmer; and I have asked for a vote on the question of allowing me to offer this amendment. I trust that such permission may be granted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska. A two-thirds vote will be necessary to suspend the rules to enable the amendment to be offered. [Putting the question.] In order that there may be no uncertainty, all those in favor will rise and stand and be counted.

On a division, the Senate refused to suspend the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I trust that the amendment recommended by the committee will not be adopted. It only makes a difference of $7,520, and if it shall not be adopted the Bureau of Standards will have $5,720 more than it otherwise will have. I trust that the bureau may be allowed the additional amount.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. JONES. The committee in recommending this amendment has merely followed out the directions of the Senate. The Bureau of Standards will have $75,000 for the next year out of which they can make the necessary investigations and experiments. It also has the current appropriation which will last until the 1st of July. The bureau can proceed with the $75,000, and can use all of it for the purpose mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska if it is deemed wise to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry, as to where the amendment is found in the bill, and what is its purpose?

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment is on page 80.

Mr. JONES. The amendment is on page 80, line 17.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is found in the bill on page 80, line 17.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the nature of the amendment?

Mr. JONES. It proposes to reduce the appropriation from $82,520 to $75,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Was any other consideration given to the amendment except to carry out the order of the Senate and make the reduction?

Mr. JONES. That is practically all that was done.

Mr. NORRIS. There is not any other argument in favor of the reduction, is there?

Mr. JONES. No; and there is no argument in favor of the general proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 81, line 2, to strike out "$46,700" and insert "$40,000," so as to read:

Gage standardization: To provide by cooperation of the Bureau of Standards, the War Department, and the Navy Department for the standardization and testing of the standard gages, screw threads, and standards required in manufacturing throughout the United States, and to calibrate and test such standard gages, screw threads, and standards, including necessary equipment and personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 17, after the word "field," to strike out "$58,060" and insert "$50,000," so as to read:

Testing railroad-track, mine, and other scales: For investigation and testing of railroad-track scales, elevator scales, and other scales used in weighing commodities for interstate shipments and to secure equipment and assistance for testing the scales used by the Government in its transactions with the public, such as post-office, navy-yard, and customhouse scales, and for the purpose of cooperating with the States in securing uniformity in the weights and measures laws and in the methods of inspection; for investigating the conditions and methods of use of scales and mine cars used for weighing and measuring coal dug by miners, for the purpose of determining wages due, and of conditions affecting the accuracy of the weighing or measuring of coal at the mines, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 24, to strike out "$10,080" and insert "$6,000," so as to read:

High-temperature investigations: For laboratory and field investigations of suitable methods of high-temperature measurements and control in various industrial processes and to assist in making available directly to the industries the results of the bureau's investigations in this field, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 12, after the word "field," to strike out "$56,640" and insert "$50,000," so as to read:

Metallurgical research: For metallurgical research, including alloy steels, foundry practice, and standards for metals and sands; casting, rolling, forging, and the properties of aluminum alloys; prevention of corrosion of metals and alloys; development of metal substitutes, as for platinum; behavior of bearing metals; preparation of metal specifications; investigation of new metallurgical processes and study of methods of conservation in metallurgical manufacture and products; investigation of materials used in the construction of rails, wheels, axles, and other railway equipment, and the cause of their failure, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 16, after the word "field," to strike out "$11,140" and insert "$8,000," so as to read:

Sound investigation: For the investigation of the principles of sound and their application to military and industrial purposes, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 22, after the word "elsewhere," to strike out "$232,860" and insert "$100,000," so as to read:

Industrial research: For technical investigations in cooperation with the industries upon fundamental problems involved in industrial development, with a view to assisting in the permanent establishment of new American industries, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 7, after the word "field," to strike out "$29,525" and insert "$150,000," so as to read:

Standardization of equipment: To enable the Bureau of Standards to cooperate with Government departments, engineers, and manufacturers in the establishment of standards, methods of testing, and inspection of instruments, equipment, tools, and electrical and mechanical devices used in the industries and by the Government, including the practical specifications for quality and performance of such devices, and the formulation of methods of inspection, laboratory, and service tests, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 12, after the word "field," to strike out "$10,540" and insert "$8,000," so as to read:

Standard materials: For purchase, preparation, analysis, and distribution of standard materials to be used in checking chemical analyses in the testing of physical measuring apparatus, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 25, to strike out "$29,320" and insert "$20,000," so as to read:

Investigation of radioactive substances and X rays: For an investigation of radioactive substances and the methods of their measurements and testing; for investigations relative to the development of standard specifications for X-ray equipment and operation; for the investigation of the hazards of X-ray practice; for the testing and standardization of X-ray protective materials; for the standardization and design of X-ray testing equipment; for the determination of fundamental physical constants essential to X-ray diagnosis and therapy to X-ray analysis of materials and to other technical and scientific applications, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 6, after the word "field," to strike out "$47,900" and insert "$40,000," so as to read:

Utilization of waste products from the land: For the survey of the possibilities of the industrial utilization of waste products from the land, including cooperation with colleges, other institutions, and manufacturers, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $40,000: Provided, That the Bureau of Standards cooperates with the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, Department of Agriculture, without duplication of work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 18, after the word "field," to strike out "$47,760" and insert "$40,000," so as to read:

Investigation of automotive engines: For the promotion of economy and efficiency in automotive transportation by land and by air through investigations of the basic principles underlying the design, performance, operation, and testing of automotive engines, their fuels, lubricants, accessories, and the power-transmitting system used in connection with them, also such elements as brakes and brake linings; to promote economy in the use of liquid fuels and safety in vehicular traffic, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 25, after the word "field," to strike out "$9,940" and insert "$5,000," so as to read:

Investigation of dental materials: To investigate the physical and chemical properties of dental materials, including the method of their application and the causes of deterioration of such materials in service, for the purpose of developing standards of quality and standard methods of test, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 8, after the word "field," to strike out "$51,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to read:

Hydraulic laboratory research: For the determination of fundamental data useful in hydraulic research and engineering, including laboratory research relating to the behavior and control of river and harbor waters, the study of hydraulic structures and water flow, and the development and testing of hydraulic instruments and accessories, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 9, before the word "of," to strike out "$2,630,255" and insert "$2,137,280"; and in line 10, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$2,196,664" and insert "$1,800,664," so as to read:

Total, Bureau of Standards, $2,137,280, of which amount not to exceed $1,800,664 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Lighthouses," on page 86, line 14, after the name "District of Columbia," to strike out "$121,790" and insert "$110,000," so as to read:

Salaries: For the commissioner and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $110,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 6, after the name "District of Columbia," to strike out "$4,550,000" and insert "$4,200,000," so as to read:

General expenses: For supplies, including replacement of and necessary additions to existing equipment, repairs, maintenance, and incidental expenses of lighthouses and other lights, beacons, buoyage, fog signals, lighting of rivers heretofore authorized to be lighted, light vessels, other aids to navigation, and lighthouse tenders, including the establishment, repair, and improvement of beacons and day marks, and purchase of land for same; establishment of post lights, buoys, submarine signals, and fog signals; establishment of oil or carbide houses, not to exceed $10,000: Provided, That any oil or carbide house erected hereunder shall not exceed $1,000 in cost; construction of necessary outbuildings at a cost not exceeding $1,000 at any one light station in any fiscal year; improvement of grounds and buildings connected with light stations and depots; restoring light stations and depots and buildings connected therewith: Provided further, That such restoration shall be limited to the original purpose of the structures; wages of persons attending post lights; temporary employees and field force while engaged on works of general repair and maintenance, and laborers and mechanics at lighthouse depots; rations and provisions or commutation thereof for working parties in the field, officers and crews of light vessels and tenders, and officials and other authorized persons of the Lighthouse Service on duty on board of such tenders or vessels, and money accruing from commutation for rations and provisions for the above-named persons on board of tenders and light vessels or in working parties in the field may be paid on proper vouchers to the person having charge of the mess of such vessel or party; not exceeding $2,000 for packing, crating, and transporting personal household effects of employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty; purchase of rubber boots, oilskins, rubber gloves, and coats, caps, and aprons for stewards' department on vessels; reimbursement under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce of keepers of light stations and masters of light vessels and of lighthouse tenders for rations and provisions and clothing furnished shipwrecked persons who may be temporarily provided for by them, not exceeding in all $5,000 in any fiscal year; fuel, light, and rent of quarters where necessary for keepers of lighthouses; purchase of land sites for fog signals; rent of necessary ground for all such lights and beacons as are for temporary use or to mark changeable channels and which in consequence can not be made permanent; rent of offices, depots, and wharves; traveling expenses, including travel for the examinations authorized by the act entitled "An act to provide for retirement for disability in the Lighthouse Service," approved March 4, 1925 (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 765); mileage; library books for light stations and vessels, and technical books and periodicals not exceeding $1,000; traveling and subsistence expenses of teachers while actually employed by States or private persons to instruct the children of keepers of lighthouses; all other contingent expenses of district offices and depots, including the purchase of provisions for sale to lighthouse keepers at isolated stations, and the appropriation reimbursed, purchase not to exceed $3,600, exchange, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in field work; payment of rewards for the apprehension and conviction, or for information helpful to the apprehension and conviction of persons found interfering with aids to navigation maintained by the Lighthouse Service, in violation of section 6 of the act of May 14, 1908 (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 761), and not exceeding $8,500 for contingent expenses of the office of the Bureau of Lighthouses in the District of Columbia, $4,200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, at the end of line 13, to strike out "$2,490,000 and insert "$2,370,000," so as to read:

Lighthouse vessels: For salaries and wages of officers and crews of light vessels and lighthouse tenders, including temporary employment when necessary, $2,370,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 21, after the name "District of Columbia," to strike out "$653,080" and insert "$600,000," so as to read:

Superintendents, clerks, etc.: For salaries of 18 superintendents of lighthouses, and of assistant superintendents, clerks, draftsmen, and other authorized permanent employees in the district offices and depots of the Lighthouse Service, exclusive of those regularly employed in the office of the Bureau of Lighthouses, District of Columbia, $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 90, to strike out:

Public works: For establishing and improving aids to navigation and other works as may be specifically approved by the Secretary of Commerce, $449,708, to be immediately available.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Washington please explain why that entire item was stricken out?

Mr. JONES. Because officials of the Lighthouse Service advised us they did not propose to put in any public works during the next year.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. JONES. Those in charge of the Lighthouse Bureau propose to suspend the putting in of new public works in connection with lighthouses during the next year.

Mr. JOHNSON. Quite the contrary to that has been stated to me, though I do not question the correctness of the Senator's statement. This item of $499,708 provides for work that was contemplated and that was estimated for by the Budget Bureau. Is not that correct?

Mr. JONES. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is one little item in connection with the paragraph which I think ought to be adopted, and I will submit it and see whether or not it can not be agreed to.

The port of Stockton, in the State of California, is engaged, in conjunction with the United States Government, in the work of making a port there which will be completed within the next few months. In that port the Lighthouse Bureau has prepared for the construction within the next few months of a lighthouse and fog signal, so as to make safe the ships that may enter the port. The full amount which was asked for and which was approved by the Budget Bureau—and I quote from the Budget estimates, page 236—the full amount for the particular item was $32,444. The amount required for the immediate prosecution of the work is only $16,000.

That $16,000 ought to be accorded, in order that the work may be commenced and completed at the earliest possible date. Unless that shall be done, the peril that may come to ships entering the port may involve sums infinitely greater, of course, than this very small appropriation. So I am going to offer a very slight amendment, a $16,000 item, in the hope that it will be accorded by the Senate. In lieu of the four lines proposed to be stricken out on page 90, I ask that there may be inserted the following:

For establishing and improving aids to navigation, establishing lights and for signals to mark the deep-water channel to Stockton, Calif., $16,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, instead of striking out the entire appropriation of $449,708, I wonder if it would not be possible somewhat to reduce it so as to take care of other situations?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, of course that ought to be done.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so, because the work of providing aids to navigation, and the work of the Lighthouse Service is very important, not only in California, but to all other sections of the country. The Gulf and the South Atlantic sections I know need a good many of these aids to navigation, and if we strike out the entire item the work can not proceed. I think we ought not to strike out the entire amount, but reduce it to, say, $200,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Senator will yield—if Senators will look at the Budget estimates, at page 235, they will see, for instance, under the heading "Aids to Navigation, Lighthouse Service"—

Cape Hinchinbrook Light Station, Alaska: Rebuilding light and for signal station.

I am advised that by the erosion of the water the steps to that lighthouse station have been worn away and the money that was recommended by the Budget Bureau for their reconstruction is denied by this bill. It is a dreadful situation.

Mr. FLETCHER. I hope the committee will agree to let the item remain in the bill, with the appropriation reduced to $200,000. That will leave the bureau something to go on in order to take care of the necessary things.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senator to pages 86, 87, 88, and 89, where provision is made for—

General expenses: For supplies, including replacement of and necessary additions to existing equipment, repairs, maintenance, and incidental expenses of lighthouses and other lights, beacons, buoyage, fog signals, lighting of rivers heretofore authorized to be lighted, light vessels, other aids to navigation, and lighthouse tenders, including the establishment, repair, and improvement of beacons and daymarks, and purchase of land for same; establishment of post lights, buoys, submarine signals, and fog signals—

And so forth.

These and many other aids to navigation are provided with an appropriation of $4,200,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Those items, if the Senator will permit me, relate, according to the Budget Bureau and according to information from Mr. Putnam, who, as I understand it, is in charge of the service, to other things than those that are set forth by the Budget Bureau and embraced in the item which has been stricken out.

Now let me call to the attention of the Senate the projects which the appropriation in this item covers. I have referred to one in Alaska.

Then come the following: Chelsea Lighthouse depot, Massachusetts; Woods Hole Lighthouse depot, Massachusetts; Charleston, S. C.; Tampa Bay, Fla.; Miami Harbor and approaches, Florida; Mobile Lighthouse depot, Alabama; Buffalo Lighthouse depot, New York; St. Marys River, Mich.; Whitehead Light station, Maine; Hudson River, N. Y.; James River, Va.; Portsmouth depot, Virginia; Corpus Christi Channel, Tex.; Oswego, N. Y.; Los Angeles Harbor Lighthouse depot, California; San Joaquin River, Calif.; Nawiliwili Harbor, Hawaii. All of those were provided in the Budget and the estimates made and taken care of by the House bill; and the item taking care of them was in the first four lines of page 90.

May I ask the Senator from Washington whether it is not possible to fix some amount—it is immaterial to me what it is—that will leave some leeway for doing what is absolutely essential in that regard?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the cuts in the lighthouse matter have been far less than in any other part of the bill; and here is what the Secretary says:

When we were instructed by the Senate to cut these items the Secretary was called upon by the committee to indicate where those cuts could be made with the least harm.

And this is what he said about this item:

Public works, Lighthouse Service: The ill effect of further curtailment of this appropriation has been set forth above, but its elimination would account for $449,708 out of a total of $1,078,386 required to be saved as a result of a 10 per cent cut. This cut would be illogical from an economic standpoint, but it would probably have the least damaging effect to the service as a whole.

That accounts for the cut.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that taken by the Senator as a justification for the cut?

Mr. JONES. It is not taken as a justification of the cut.

Mr. JOHNSON. Hardly.

Mr. JONES. It is taken as the method by which we could best meet the instructions given to us by the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. Inasmuch as the cut is asserted to be illogical, inasmuch as it is asserted that it ought not to be made, is there not some sum total that we may agree may be put in the bill? Do not take the full amount that is given by the House if you do not wish to; but some leeway ought to be accorded for the necessary work.

This is not like the ordinary work. This is not like destroying the Bureau of Standards, or taking 130 men and putting them on the street, so that they join the ranks of the unemployed, as you are doing by this bill. This is something that relates to the safety of human beings, and the possible destruction of ships of infinitely greater value than the entire appropriation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Secretary of Commerce went over the whole matter. He went over the whole proposed cut in the Department of Commerce; and he made other cuts, too. This is the recommendation he made with reference to this matter. Of course it is up to the Senate now. I have said before that I do not approve of a whole lot of these cuts, but I am trying to obey the orders of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I recognize that. I will withdraw for a moment the amendment I presented. Let me suggest that instead of $449,708 we put $250,000 there as leeway for the construction of lights, fog signals, and the like.

Mr. JONES. We are doing away with the previous orders of the Senate if we do that.

Mr. JOHNSON. This is not a cut of 10 per cent. This is a cut of 100 per cent.

Mr. JONES. That is true; but the Senate directed us, in the aggregate, to make a 10 per cent cut, and this is a part of the aggregate. However, I want to suggest to the Senator that upon a proper showing made to the committee having charge of the deficiency bill the money can be used. It is up to the Senate to determine whether or not it is going to follow its previous order.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is correct.

Mr. JONES. If it does, all right. If it wants to violate those orders, well and good.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. JONES. The Senate committee has done the best it could in the reduction of 10 per cent. After the Secretary of Commerce was called upon he suggested that that could be eliminated with less detriment than anything else; and the committee now submits the matter to the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am in full sympathy, of course, with the effort of the committee to reduce the appropriations, and was one of those who voted to send the bill back with instructions to do that. Of course, that carried with it the implication that there would be an aggregate cut of 10 per cent.

I notice in one item here that the committee has reduced the appropriation for expenses of operating the district and cooperative offices of the Commerce Department from $664,000 to $462,000, taking off more than $200,000 from an item of $664,000, which represents a cut of something over 30 per cent. Will the Senator explain just why in that particular item, covering the expenses of district and cooperative offices scattered over the country, whose purpose is to aid in the facilitation of commerce, which is so necessary at this time for the restoration of any prosperity that may be in sight, it was necessary to take so large a cut, and a very much smaller one on other items, in order to make up the average of 10 per cent under the instructions of the Senate? I should also like to know whether that means that some of these offices must be abolished, or whether it means that there shall be a scaling down in all of them without the abolition of any of them.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that is a matter that will be left to the department. I will say frankly that I think it will mean the discontinuance of the service of several of these offices. Where they will be, I do not know. That was a part of the scaling down of the appropriations to meet the 10 per cent cut that the Senate ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand; but when the committee cut 30 per cent in one item like that, it seems to me it must have left some items almost uncut, because the average of 10 per cent is not a large average on the whole.

Mr. JONES. I will suggest to the Senator that on page 89 there is an item of $2,105,280 for keepers of lighthouses from which we did not cut a cent? Why? Because we considered the Lighthouse Service one of the special services. We had to make up for the failure to cut off 10 per cent there in the case of some of these other items. In the case of some of the other large items we did not cut off 10 per cent, so that cut had to be made up somewhere else.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me ask the Senator how many of these district and cooperative offices of the Department of Commerce are scattered over the country under this appropriation to which I referred a moment ago?

Mr. JONES. I do not know how many there are. There are quite a good many.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator know whether it will be the policy of the department to go as far as possible in meeting this program of retrenchment by reducing the expenses in offices that are maintained, in order not to have to abolish any more of them than is necessary? In other words, if an office is being operated at an expense of $50,000 a year, will it be the policy of the department, say, to reduce that to forty or forty-five thousand dollars rather than to leave some offices with all the expenses now involved and abolish others altogether?

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I should like to suggest that I have had this matter up with the department, and I know that this cut will mean the abolishment of some of the offices in their entirety. I happen to know that one of them is going to be in Des Moines, Iowa, yet under the instructions of the Senate this cut had to be made, and our committee was more favorable to cutting this foreign service and these foreign service offices than it was to cutting some other items in the bill. The committee was divided on the matter, and I am sorry to say I was in the minority.

Mr. BARKLEY. What I had in mind was this: It may be entirely possible for the Department of Commerce on a reduced appropriation to continue many of these offices, probably not on the same scale that they have been operated in the past but with a reduced personnel and reduced expense, so as to spread this reduction out over all of them and keep as many as possible of them operating, instead of allowing some of them to be operated on the same scale heretofore existing, and at the same time abolishing a number of them that probably ought to be retained.

Mr. JONES. May I say that that is a matter that was left entirely to the department, and I am satisfied that they will do the very best they possibly can in the interest of the public service.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, may I renew my amendment, Mr. President? My amendment is that the sum of $449,708 in the House text be made $250,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will be agreed to.

The first reduction under this head, "Bureau of Lighthouses," is a 10 per cent reduction, from $121,000 to $110,000.

The next reduction appears on page 89, from $4,550,000 to $4,200,000. That is $350,000 off that appropriation.

The next reduction is from $2,490,000 to $2,370,000.

The next reduction is from $653,000 to $600,000.

There is more than 10 per cent off the items in this bill already, before we get to this one, and here the committee strikes it all out.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Florida has skipped two or three great, big items in which no cut at all was made.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that is true. There are not many cuts made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California to the House text. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes appear to have it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call for a division.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Connally	Johnson	Reed
Bailey	Copeland	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Bankhead	Couzens	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Barbour	Cutting	Kendrick	Sheppard
Blaine	Dickinson	McGill	Shipstead
Bratton	Fess	McKellar	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Fletcher	McNary	Wheeler
Capper	Hale	Moses
Carey	Howell	Oddie

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is not a quorum present.

Mr. McNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to ask unanimous consent to have a newspaper editorial printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair regrets that he can not entertain the request, there being no quorum present. No business can be done without a quorum, except that the Senate may adjourn.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. JONES. Could we vacate the call for a quorum by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the call may be vacated.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, after it has been determined that there is no quorum present, how can the call be vacated?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has shown that by unanimous consent it can do practically anything.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think that is good practice. I raise the point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The Senator from Oregon continues to hold the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think that would be a dangerous practice. If that could be done, less than a quorum could do business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it is not good practice, but the uniform precedent of the Senate is that it can do anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I agree with that myself, but I was going to say what I wanted to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No business whatever can be transacted until a quorum is developed.

Mr. JONES. I can remark, can I not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There can be no discussion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, can we not have a second call and get a quorum? I hope that can be done, and that we may finish the consideration of the bill to-day if possible.

Mr. McNARY. Only 34 Senators have responded to the call, and it is not likely that a second call would produce a quorum.

Mr. JONES. I merely wanted to state what I would like to do. If we can vacate this order at this time——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks this is out of order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the order of the Senate previously made be carried out.

The motion was agreed to; and, in accordance with the order previously entered, the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 20, 1932, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 19, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Come Thou, the One whose power is in love, in long suffering, and in the gentleness and reign in us. Restrain us from intemperate words and give us the disclosures of Thy wisdom; hold them as a torch to guide us in all our ways. O God, lift us above any lower forms of motive and appeal and inspire us with a conception of duty that shall grow larger and wiser and more beautiful. O may it not be a vain thing that we are here. Bestow upon us such an understanding of our country's call and need that disquietude shall be arrested, all our fellow countrymen shall be encouraged, and the epic of the human heart heard again in all our land. In the adorable name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 201

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and deep regret the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of 15 Senators be appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 882. An act for the relief of G. W. Wall;

H. R. 1202. An act for the relief of Lehde Schoenhut;

H. R. 2086. An act for the relief of Francis Engler;

S. J. Res. 135. Joint resolution creating a joint commission concerning the coordination and economical administration of the executive departments and independent establishments of the Government.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the Philippine question.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, independence for the people of the Philippine Islands, in my judgment, is assured. The National House of Representatives has already so voted. The bill is now in the Senate. The vote in the House was overwhelming—306 to 47. That is a reflex of American public sentiment upon this question. The Filipinos are practically unanimous in their demand for national freedom.

The notable exceptions are American-controlled newspapers in the islands. The owners of these papers probably have valuable concessions over there which they want to protect and preserve, a purely unselfish ambition, of course. If the Senate concurs in the passage of the bill by a relatively strong vote Congress, in my opinion, will override President Hoover's veto, which is certain.

Opposition to Philippine independence in this country is limited to a subsidized press, American investors in the Philippines, imperialists, and those who sincerely believe that the Filipinos have not yet reached that stage of proficiency in the science of government where they are capable of self-government.

What are the facts? There are 22,000 people under civil service in the Philippine Islands. There are but 500 Americans among them. The Filipinos are a self-governing people even now. They administer public affairs in all of the eight hundred and more municipalities. They are rapidly increasing also their participation in the central government. The chief justice of the supreme court is a Filipino. Four of the nine members of that court are Filipinos. They occupy almost all minor judicial positions and have liberal representation in all other courts. The Philippine Legislature is composed of Filipinos, so that they have an important part in governing the islands and various municipalities at this time.

They have made wonderful progress as a people along educational lines. There are now in excess of 9,000 schools in the Philippines, several colleges and universities, with an enrollment of approximately 1,400,000 pupils and students. There are 19,000 in the universities. The English language is taught in the schools and has been during the 30 years the United States has been in control of that government. Thousands now speak the English language fluently and understandingly. As a matter of fact, it is the common language there. More than 31,000 teachers are employed in these schools. All but 300 are Filipinos. That should have a significant bearing upon their capabilities as a people. One-third of the annual budget is devoted to educational purposes.

Hon. CAMILO OSIAS, Resident Commissioner from the Philippines, recently made the statement in the House of Representatives that the "present record of literacy in the Philippines to-day is higher and better than that of 37 of the independent countries of the world." In the same speech he said: "We are from all standpoints ready for independence." And so they are. They possess another requisite qualification to good citizenship, and that is that more than 90 per cent of the people of the Philippines are classed as Christians.

There are many reasons why these people should be granted their independence. I will enumerate a few. They are:

First. That we have promised them their independence.

Second. That failure in this respect would involve our national integrity.

Third. That they have a balanced budget, which shows capacity.

Fourth. That their economic situation is better than our own.

Fifth. That the country's natural resources are unlimited, the exploitation of which by American parasites should be ended.

Sixth. That they are a law-abiding, peace-loving people, with a natural pride for national freedom.

Seventh. That they have reached that state of proficiency in the affairs of government where they are capable of self-government. All of which entitles them to their independence. The reasons just cited influenced my action in voting for their independence as a people.

Most Americans, I think, are imbued with the "Spirit of '76," which should ever abide in the hearts and souls of men. It is brought to our attention every now and then in connection with the George Washington bicentennial celebration commemorating his two hundredth birthday anniversary. To mention Washington is to revive memories of Jefferson and that immortal document penned by him, known as the Declaration of Independence, the most human document ever written.

Our mission in the Philippines was one of humanity. They were rescued from Spanish tyranny, and a government formed, the purpose of which was to prepare them for control of their own affairs. Our mission there has been performed, and it is our duty now to withdraw in orderly fashion, with all American concessionaires leading the procession. There is no valid reason for further delay in granting them independence. It is up to the American Government to make its word good. The Filipinos had faith in us. We should show faith in them. "Justice delayed is justice denied," some one has said.

The time for action has come. Government in the islands has been regularly and thoroughly organized. Peace and order prevail. With conditions thus propitious we should surrender our sovereignty, glorify our work, and gracefully retire.

In connection with my study of the Philippine question I have noticed that a sort of a bureaucracy is in the sprouting in Government over there. Fortunately, Filipino directors are at their head. Their presence in Government is enough to arouse the sympathy of anyone. When the Philippines finally come into their own under this grant of national freedom and national independence eight years hence, they should see to it that these bureaus and commissions, or by whatsoever name known, are cut out root and branch. This precaution is necessary if they would preserve their equilibrium as a nation and maintain a balanced budget. To those who still insist that the Filipinos are not capable of self-government, I would remind them that under this grant of independence, already passed by the House and now pending in the Senate, they will have eight more years to go. They can learn a great deal in eight years. The United States has learned a whole lot in the last four years. At the end of that 8-year period they will know much more than they do now, which will the better qualify them for self-government. Meanwhile they can be studying recent American history and largely benefit by our sad experiences and intolerable sufferings.

MRS. CORRA HARRIS

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute for the purpose of making an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, there is seated in the gallery a distinguished citizen of my district. Her name is a household word throughout the United States. She is one of the leading American writers of to-day. She first achieved literary fame when she became the author of the Circuit Rider's Wife and has subsequently added many valuable contributions to American literature. She is now engaged in writing her impressions of the Congress of the United States. [Laughter.] I am sure the House will be glad to know it and to know her, and I take a great deal of pride in introducing as my constituent, in the east gallery, Mrs. Corra Harris. [Applause.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations I submit a privileged report on the bill (H. R. 11452, Rept. No. 1081) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

THE LATE SENATOR WILLIAM J. HARRIS

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, thrice since last July the Grim Reaper has visited the Georgia delegation in Congress. On yesterday the able, beloved, and distinguished senior Senator from Georgia, the Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS, fell asleep, a sleep that knows no earthly awakening.

Never has there been a man in public life who more sincerely and earnestly strived to serve his country and his State, and he succeeded most admirably. He was untiring. He was faithful to every trust. He loved his fellow man, and he loved all Georgia, and all Georgians loved him. In his passing away the Nation has sustained a great loss, and Georgia's loss is irreparable. He was the best-beloved man in our State.

The Senate will ask a state funeral for him to-morrow, and shortly this House will receive an invitation to attend those services. Therefore I will not ask that the House adjourn to-day, for I am sure my beloved friend would prefer that the House transact public business, for he was himself a slave to duty and literally killed himself in the public service. I shall ask that, when the House reassembles to-morrow after the state funeral, as a further mark of respect to the memory of this distinguished Senator, my warm, personal, beloved friend, the House immediately adjourn.

I offer a resolution which I have sent to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 196

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS, a Senator of the United States from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That a committee of 15 Members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following Members of the House to attend the funeral of the late Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS, a Senator from the State of Georgia:

Mr. JOSEPH W. BYRNS of Tennessee, Mr. CHARLES R. CRISP, Mr. CARL VINSON of Georgia, Mr. BERTRAND H. SNELL, Mr. WILLIAM R. WOOD of Indiana, Mr. WILLIAM W. LARSEN, Mr. CHARLES H. BRAND of Georgia, Mr. WILLIAM C. WRIGHT, Mr. WILLIAM C. LANKFORD of Georgia, Mr. EDWARD E. COX, Mr. MALCOLM C. TARVER, Mr. ROBERT RAMSPECK, Mr. HOMER C. PARKER of Georgia, Mr. JOHN S. WOOD of Georgia, and Mr. W. CARLTON MOBLEY.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately upon the House reassembling to-morrow after attending the funeral of the late Senator HARRIS in the Senate, as a further mark of respect to him the House immediately adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF GRADUATES FROM NAVAL ACADEMY, 1932, AS ENSIGNS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 8083) providing for the appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy of all midshipmen who graduate from the Naval Academy in 1932, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, the gentleman is asking to send this bill to conference?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am asking unanimous consent to permit it to go to conference, and asking for a conference with the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. Is it agreeable to the ranking minority member of the Naval Affairs Committee?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am satisfied it is, because it contains provisions that are different from what the House passed.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me the gentleman ought to have the consent of the ranking minority member, and until that is secured I will have to object. I object, Mr. Speaker.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS BILL

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11452) making appropriations for the Navy Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes. Pending that motion, if agreeable to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], I would suggest that general debate continue for the remainder of the day, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Idaho and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. Pending that motion, he asks unanimous consent that general debate continue for the balance of the day and that the time be equally divided between the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] and himself. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Kansas expect to proceed to the consideration of the bill under the 5-minute rule to-day?

Mr. AYRES. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11452, the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. FULLER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I wish to preface my statement by a public expression of my appreciation of the assistance rendered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] in preparing this bill. I am deeply indebted to them.

The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS] did not participate in framing the bill because he has been continuously engaged with the Economy Committee.

Mr. Chairman, national defense exacts a heavy toll of Federal revenues. Of the total sum payable from the Treasury under the original Budget for 1933, excluding public-debt items, approximately 22 per cent is on account of the Military and Naval Establishments. Twelve per cent represents the Navy's portion.

The total bulks large, more so at this particular time perhaps, because of our financial plight, and if it appears large to us, it is not amazing that we are met with a widespread urge to effect substantial reductions in outlays proposed for the support of our defense departments.

I have always been an advocate of adequate national defense. What the least amount is that is necessary to maintain establishments sufficient to uphold and support our national policies I am not prepared to express an opinion. The question has many ramifications. The judgments of the men we have educated and trained in the military and naval professions differ. Basically, it is a question of what physical forces we need to provide ourselves with and what number of personnel is necessary as a nucleus for expansion in emergency.

The Navy is the fleet and vice versa. The combatant physical forces of the Navy have been quite definitely limited by treaty. The employment of such forces as we have already built and are now building very largely must determine the size of the naval budget. Vessels may be employed actively; they may be placed in reserve commission, with reduced complements aboard; or they may be maintained in a decommissioned status with just ship keepers aboard. Such dispositions determine the need for personnel, expenses of operation, and the amounts necessary for the supporting establishments ashore. I should like right here to read to you from Admiral Pratt's testimony touching the employment of ships. On page 56 of the hearings you will find this statement:

The Navy Department is constantly seeking means to reduce expenditures. One of the most obvious methods is to decommission ships. A careful survey is made annually, and only such ships are kept in commission as are considered to be absolutely essential to provide security for the Nation and to perform the functions assigned to the naval service. In determining the number of ships to be maintained in commission, the following are some of the factors which must be considered:

(a) A sufficient force ready for immediate action must be maintained in order to handle minor peace-time situations of an emergency nature.

(b) A sufficient force must be maintained to provide for adequate training of types such as battleships, cruisers, destroyers, air craft, and submarines and for the further development of the capabilities and tactics of each type and the coordinated action of all types. There must be a sufficient number of each type to permit the development of tactics and to work out advanced naval problems.

(c) A sufficient force in addition to the fleet to protect our interests in disturbed areas must be maintained. Fleet units are available to reinforce these ships engaged on this duty when necessary. This availability makes possible a detail of only a very small force for this object.

(d) We must maintain sufficient personnel in training on combatant ships in active commission to provide nucleus crews for vessels of combatant and auxiliary types out of commission. There must be sufficient personnel to accomplish this without unduly affecting the efficiency of the units from which these crews are taken.

(e) In line with the previously stated factors, we must maintain sufficient personnel in combatant ships in reserve commission to keep the material in such condition that they will be able to go into full commission on short notice and ready to take part in active operation when the necessary additional personnel have been supplied and trained.

Then the admiral adds:

Under the stress of existing conditions we have cut our operating forces to the danger zone. We can not go any further without jeopardizing our national security. International conditions are such to-day as to render it unwise, in my opinion, to make any further cuts in the operating forces of the Navy.

Admiral Pratt is Chief of Naval Operations. The incumbent of that office, the highest in the American Navy, is charged by law, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, with the operations of the fleet and with the preparation and readiness of plans for its use in war. Speaking for myself, but I am confident I voice the sentiment of every member of the subcommittee, I think it is exceedingly fortunate for the Nation that we have a man of Admiral Pratt's breadth of vision and sound judgment in that key position at this particular time. His statesmanlike qualities admirably suit him for the office. The naval subcommittee leans heavily upon his judgment.

World conditions to-day unhappily are not as inspiring as we might wish. The world-wide economic depression has disturbed domestic tranquility in every quarter of the globe. In his annual message to the Congress on December 8 last the President stated that—

In many countries political instability, excessive armaments, debts, governmental expenditures, and taxes have resulted in revolutions, in unbalanced budgets, and monetary collapse and financial panics, in dumping of goods upon world markets, and in diminished consumption of commodities.

And that—

Within two years there have been revolutions or acute social disorders in 19 countries, embracing more than half of the population of the world.

Since that message was presented we have witnessed a conflict in the Orient, which was a direct challenge to the efficacy of the treaty for the settlement of international issues by peaceful methods.

Mr. Chairman, whatever our individual convictions may be as to the institution of war and the further need for armed conflicts, the very fact that we maintain Military and Naval Establishments is an admission of its potential recurrence. Unhappily, the predominant sentiment of America, which I am sure is for everlasting peace, can not be implanted in the hearts and minds of all mankind of other lands.

And so, my colleagues, our task in shaping this bill for your consideration has not been an easy one. On the one hand was the insistent urge to cut, and then cut some more, and on the other was the consciousness of our duty to provide for an establishment that world conditions prescribed as a minimum, but at the lowest possible cost consistent with a measurable degree of efficiency.

Admiral Pratt is authority for the statement that our operating forces have been reduced to the "danger zone." The committee is unwilling at this time to require them to be further reduced. It may be that as the calendar year advances, or before the ensuing fiscal year approaches its close, the general complexion of world affairs may so change as to justify decommissioning more vessels than the Budget contemplates shall be in that status. We naturally would expect that course to be pursued as a measure of economy if warranted by altered circumstances, the consequent personnel reduction, however, to be contingent upon a determination of minimum requirements of combatant ships in active commission and of nucleus crews for combatant auxiliary types out of commission.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the committee has turned from the active fleet in its search for ways in which to curtail expenditures and these I shall refer to presently in more or less detail.

The appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the present fiscal year amount to $358,262,123. For the fiscal year commencing next July the Budget carries a total of $341,677,450. The bill under consideration carries $326,340,466, or $31,921,657 less than the sum of the current appropriations and $15,336,984 less than the Budget estimates. These figures all apply to the appropriation of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

However, in drawing a comparison with the present year from a potential-expenditure standpoint we should take into account the proposed diversion and utilization of a portion of the capital of certain naval funds now permanently appropriated to specific purposes. In addition to the direct appropriation of $341,677,450 included in the Budget for 1933 on account of the Navy, we are asked to make available $8,750,000 of such special naval funds. The committee, as far as the total amount goes, proposes concurrence in that recommendation and, in addition, is advocating a reappropriation of $1,000,000 in augmentation of the direct appropriation it is recommending for naval public works. Considering these special funds and the reappropriation—and this should be done in order to get the correct possible-expenditure picture—and excluding, of course, balances carried forward from one fiscal year into another, you will find that the bill makes available $336,090,466, or $22,171,657 less than the sum of the current appropriations and $14,336,984 below the Budget recommendations; and actually it is by this latter figure, namely, $14,336,984, that the committee is proposing to lessen Treasury demands during the ensuing fiscal year. Some of it is a deferment, it is true, but by far the larger part of it represents a permanent, clear saving, and none of it anticipates a deficiency appropriation later in the year.

To effect a further reduction would occasion resort to measures such as reducing personnel, withdrawing vessels from active commission, providing lesser sums for the repair and upkeep of vessels, reducing employees in the various shore establishments, and reducing the pay of personnel, civil and naval, all more or less interrelated and influenced by the operating-force plan, which is the program respecting the disposition and employment of vessels. As a measure of economy, the department has introduced into the operating-force plan what it terms a "rotating plan," which contemplates the periodic rotation between active and reserve commission of combatant ships. I should like again to read from Admiral Pratt's testimony regarding this rotating plan.

This rotating plan between vessels in full and reserve commission is designed to maintain the combatant ships in reserve commission in a satisfactory state of material readiness capable of being fully commissioned when the necessary additional personnel have been supplied and trained. The vessels in full commission are the active units with the operating forces. Those in reserve commission—with from 25 to 40 per cent complement on board—are maintained at navy yards.

During the period vessels are in reserve status they are given their necessary routine navy-yard overhaul. Vessels of the operating forces are relieved regularly in this plan by vessels which have been in a reserve status, so that all vessels of a category have the same number of months in full commission and those in reserve have the same number of months in that status.

The operating force is always maintained at full operating strength, as it is not reduced by vessels being withdrawn for navy-yard overhaul.

In an emergency vessels in reserve should be materially ready in from one to three months—depending upon the degree of completion of overhaul—but these vessels will require additional personnel to bring them up to complement when placed in full commission. This additional personnel must be trained and incorporated in a vessel's organization before it can be considered as ready for an emergency as a vessel in full commission.

This rotation scheme, which has been included in the 1933 operating force plan, is designed primarily to reduce the maintenance and operation cost of the fleet, and, secondarily, to prolong the life of our ships. The resultant reduction in the number of active units makes it mandatory that the full cycle of training in gunnery, engineering, tactics, etc., be undertaken during the year to the end that the progressive training of the fleet be not interrupted. An interruption in the cycle of training would mean that we would not only lose the benefit of the lessons learned during the current year, but that the personnel would end the year far below the standard which they had attained at the beginning. Such an interruption would have disastrous effects which would take several years to overcome.

Looking to future years and the advent of new ships countenanced by the London treaty, we must look to an extension of the rotating plan and possibly the actual decommissioning of some units in order to stabilize at or lower the present annual naval cost apart from new ship construction. A very interesting study has been completed by the department of what it would cost upon different premises annually to maintain the entire Navy if and when of full treaty proportions. The result is set out in the form of a table, printed on pages 46 and 47 of the hearings.

The surest way to future smaller expenditures would be a further reduction compact between the five principal naval powers. Having established relative strength it is reasonable to expect that further accord might be reached in the same ratios within the bounds that now control.

Pay constitutes a very sizable portion of the naval budget. Approximately $82,800,000 goes to pay of approximately 47,300 civilians and about $148,000,000 to pay of naval and Marine Corps personnel, including retired and reserve forces, or, all told, approximately 67 per cent of the Budget estimate; and, of course, these figures exclude expenses directly incident to personnel, such as subsistence and clothing of enlisted men, recruiting, education and training, medical care and hospitalization, and transportation. If you will turn to page 6 of the report on the bill, you will find an itemization of the active personnel for which the bill makes provision. The bill contemplates no expansion in any of the commissioned forces. The line of the Navy, exclusive of officers classed as extra numbers, is limited by law to 5,499 officers. That number, under the terms of the bill, may not be exceeded.

No increase is provided in any of the Staff Corps over the number appropriated for 1932 save the Medical Corps, where provision is made for the number holding commissions on March 31, 1932. The enlisted strength of the Navy is continued at the present year total of 79,700. We prohibit further commissions in the Marine Corps until June, 1933, and provide for the reduced number of enlisted men recommended in the Budget; that is, 15,343. The restrictions the committee is advocating on numbers of commissioned personnel permit a reduction of $491,677.

Pay of personnel always offers an immediately productive way of effectuating economies. The question has been much discussed during the present session, and many proposals have been brought forward. The subject is one for separate determination, and the committee has not disturbed the present pay rates of civilian personnel or the base pay and allowances of naval and Marine Corps personnel, active or retired. It has included a provision, which appears as section 2 of the bill, intended to prevent any increase in the compensation of civilian officers and employees, and it is advocating, it is hoped with the approval of the House, an entirely different policy respecting the increase of pay of persons under flying orders and on submarine duty.

Under the law officers and enlisted men are entitled to receive—

An increase of 50 per cent of their pay when by orders of competent authority they are required to participate regularly and frequently in aerial flights, and when in consequence of such orders they do participate in regular and frequent aerial flights as defined by such Executive orders as have heretofore been, or hereafter may be, promulgated by the President.

The committee is recommending that flying pay—that is an increase of pay over and above regular pay and allowances—shall not be at a rate in excess of $1,100 per annum. Our real airplane pilots to-day—and it must be so by reason of age in time of war—are in grades below lieutenant commander in the Navy and in grades below the relative rank of major in the Marine Corps. As to the present, this is evidenced by the statements on pages 302–304 and 708 of the hearings, showing the assignments of officers drawing flying pay in grades above lieutenant in the Navy and captain in the Marine Corps. Why should officers in the higher grades receive a greater increase of pay for flying than the junior officers, who daily are assuming all the risks attendant upon practice in drilling and training in the art of war-time maneuvers and tactics? It is among such junior officers and student flyers that the principal hazards lie and not in the group which does straightaway flying or, as to another group, to use the language of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation in the hearings of a year ago, who draw flying pay "for being carried around in a plane under ideal conditions, with selected pilots, selected weather, and selected planes." The records show that for the 5-year period ended December 31, 1931, out of a total of 46 deaths among naval aviation officers owing to flying duty but 7 occurred in grades above lieutenant. The reason for selecting $1,100 as the maximum amount for flying pay is because that is the maximum rate now being received by the larger portion of the junior officer aviators.

The action proposed with respect to flying pay, if enacted into law, would result in a number of officers on submarine duty receiving a greater increase by reason of such service than officers on aviation duty. The law provides that officers and enlisted men attached to submarines shall receive an increase of 25 per cent of their pay. The committee therefore has fixed the maximum increase of pay for submarine duty at 25 per cent of the average pay, including longevity, of a senior lieutenant, or $720. The estimates contemplate 280 officers on such duty, 27 of whom will be affected by the proposed change.

The money saving from these two sources during 1933 would be $302,073.

This is the most far-reaching change the committee has proposed touching active personnel. All changes are brought to your notice in the report, but I wish to draw some of them to your especial attention.

RETIRED OFFICERS

Convinced as it is that the Navy and Marine Corps are amply supplied with officers, the committee is proposing that no funds shall be used for employing retired officers on active duty, and in connection with retired officers, a provision has been inserted on pages 29 and 30 of the bill denying both retired pay and civil pay to any retired officer, including former temporary and reserve officers, holding civil positions under the Federal Government or the municipal government of the District of Columbia or under any corporation a majority of the capital stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States, unless retired pay and civil pay combined amount to $3,000 per annum or less.

There are six retired officers of the Navy and Marine Corps employed on active duty under the Navy Department drawing active duty pay. Retired Navy and Marine Corps emergency officers number around 375. The committee is not advised as to the total number of either group filling civil positions under the Federal Government. The department is without complete information on the subject.

As another measure of economy, the committee has included a provision directed at the assignment of officers of the naval reserve to permanent active duty. On September 30, last, there were 37 reserve officers employed on permanent active duty, drawing a total in pay and allowances of $206,169. Sixteen of these officers were in grades above lieutenant. Seven of them were captains, some of whom were doing the same work as lieutenants. But one officer of the Marine Corps Reserve is employed on continuous active duty. The committee has inserted a provision on pages 12 and 13 of the bill intended to prevent the continuance of more than one officer in each service above the grade of lieutenant in the Navy and captain the Marine Corps. This action permits of a reduction of $30,108.

ENLISTED PERSONNEL

The bill provides, in agreement with the Budget, for 79,700 enlisted men of the Navy and 15,343 enlisted men of the Marine Corps. With respect to the former, the committee is proposing to limit the number of chief petty officers and chief petty officers under acting appointment to the number appropriated for for the present fiscal year—5,910 and 850, respectively. This admits of a saving of $91,275.

In a letter dated March 19, 1932, addressed to the then chairman of the Committee on Economy, Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, the Secretary of the Navy indicated that the Marine Band would serve all needs of the Navy in Washington and that "military features" would not be affected if all bands at navy yards except Cavite, P. I., were discontinued. The Secretary specifically excepted the bands at training stations and at the Naval Academy. The adoption of this course would ultimately dispense with the need for 355 bandsmen and the committee has included on page 25 of the bill a provision looking to that end.

Turning to personnel in the civil components, the Navy also has a Reserve Officers' Training Corps. Units are maintained at Yale, Harvard, Georgia School of Technology, University of Washington, University of California, and Northwestern University. There is a statement on page 25 of the hearing showing the enrollment since the beginning of this activity in 1927 and the number and disposition of the graduates. The total enrollment is limited by law to 1,200.

By suspending training cruises during 1933 it will be possible to save in travel, pay, and rations in kind $29,915, and the committee has deducted this amount from the estimate and is including on page 15 of the bill a provision denying the use of the appropriation for training or practice cruises, stipulating, however, that such denial shall not interfere with the issuance of appointments to graduates as ensigns in the Naval Reserve. Under the basic law training or practice cruises are a prerequisite to a commission.

NAVAL RESERVE

For the Naval Reserve, apart from the so-called assigned men and transferred men, the estimate calls for a total of $3,840,000. For the seagoing branch the estimate figure is $2,581,617. The balance, or $1,258,383, is for reserve aviation activities. The estimate is $780,835 less than the current appropriation, most of which applies to the aviation branch because of the planned curtailment in basic and advanced aviation training.

Following the conclusion of the hearings the Navy Department, as a measure of economy, decided to suspend active-duty training for the seagoing branch during the summer of 1932 and throughout the fiscal year 1933. This change of plans will admit of a reduction of $682,812 in the Budget estimates for the seagoing branch. In addition to such sum, the committee has made the following reductions:

For rental and administration of armories	$10,000
For drills, by limiting number with pay to 48 and assuming 85 per cent attendance on the part of officers	20,508
By limiting the rank of officers on permanent active duty to lieutenants, except one captain for detail as general administrative officer of the reserve	30,108
By allowing for subsistence for week-end cruises the amount of the original estimate	25,073
Or a total additional reduction of	85,689

As presented, the bill provides for 48 drills for officers and 42 drills for men of the Fleet Naval Reserve, 45 hours of flying time for officers in the aviation branch, for 18 hours' flying time for primary student pilots, and 200 hours of flying time for advanced student pilots. No reduction is made in the aviation branch except $6,187 for flying pay for reserve officers at a rate in excess of $1,100 per annum.

We have a class of reservists composed of what are termed "assigned men." Assigned men are former enlisted men who, for a consideration of $25 per annum, obligate themselves to serve in the Navy or Marine Corps in the event of war occurring within four years from the date of expiration of their enlistments. You will find the law on the subject in full on pages 31 and 32 of the report. The estimates provide for 6,100 assigned men in the Navy and 2,960 in the Marine Corps. This assigned force always has impressed the committee as a needless item of expense, and we have inserted on pages 25 and 45 of the bill provisions prohibiting the assignment of additional men to the reserve forces. It will mean a saving next year of several thousand dollars and ultimately of about $225,000 per annum.

That concludes, I believe, Mr. Chairman, the most important personnel matters that entered into the formulation of this bill.

Now it is my purpose to recount here in detail all of the changes effected by the committee in the way of reductions in the Budget estimates. The report is very full and all will have consideration under the 5-minute rule. A number of the more important changes, however, I do feel I should bring to your attention at this time. In the first place, let me say that the Budget was not unsparing in passing upon the naval estimates. There is a new item in relation to the 1932 appropriations of $15,000,000 for the modernization of battleships, which the Budget includes and still shows a reduction, excluding special funds of $7,834,673. The principal Budget reduction is in the item of public works. Another substantial cut is on account of aviation, owing to the completion of the 5-year airplane program. A reduction in the enlisted strength of the Marine Corps from 17,500 to 15,343 yielded a further sizable sum, and there are others of varying proportions, some because of nonrecurring expenses, some owing to deferments, and others because of reduced commodity costs.

Under the Bureau of Construction and Repair we have made reductions totaling $599,000. Of this amount $159,000 was suggested by the Chief Constructor, Admiral Rock, owing to the planned accomplishment during the present fiscal year of work contemplated by the estimates to be done in 1933, and the deferment until 1934 of the equipment of vessels with new code-signal flags. The committee has subtracted this amount and has taken off $190,000 estimated for 3 new ammunition lighters, and a further sum of $250,000 from the $550,000 intended to be applied to the building of small boats as replacements of types such as enumerated on page 445 of the hearings.

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE

For naval-ordnance activities, other than new construction work at ordnance stations and ordnance on account of ships building, the Budget proposes $11,810,000, or $1,120,585 less than the current appropriation. The reduction is generally applied, extending practically to all phases of ordnance activities. In view of the sizable Budget reduction, the committee was hesitant to trust its own judgment in determining if and where additional savings might be effected, and consequently had the chief of the bureau furnish a list of items totaling $810,000 which might be dispensed with or deferred with least injury to the service. The list is in the possession of the committee. For some of the items the committee is unwilling to deny funds. Its solution has been to make a further reduction of $500,000, leaving its application to the judgment of the bureau. In addition, it has subtracted $39,000 included in the estimate for the purchase of small arms and rifle-team equipment. The expenditure of this amount is not intended to be discretionary.

PAY OF THE NAVY

The committee has made reductions under the Budget for pay and allowances of naval personnel aggregating $638,585. The contributing factors I have already discussed; the major ones at least. I shall merely recapitulate:

Pay and allowances of 47 fewer officers (11 line, 24 medical, and 14 dental)	$232,872
Flying pay	271,690
Submarine pay	6,806
Limit number of enlisted men in pay grades 1 and 1a	91,275
Change in original plan respecting reserve vessels	11,742
Outfits on first enlistment, owing to decline in value of clothing allowance	24,000
Total	638,585

SUBSISTENCE OF NAVAL PERSONNEL

For subsisting enlisted men of the Navy, midshipmen, and nurses, the Budget proposes $15,780,000, compared with $16,502,216 for the present year, the reduction being due to a 46-cent instead of a 48-cent ration and various personnel adjustments affecting subsistence status. The cost of the ration continued to decline following the submission of the Budget and for the quarter ended December 31, 1931, had dropped to $0.43832. The committee understands that there has been a further falling off and has written the bill on the basis of a 42-cent ration. Unless there should be an appreciable upward trend in food prices, it is the thought of the committee that the department should so administer the appropriation as to avoid a deficiency. A reduction has been applied to all per diem allowances at present prevailing, including midshipmen, with the result that it has been practicable to subtract a total of $1,496,183 from the Budget estimate.

TRANSPORTATION OF NAVAL PERSONNEL

The estimate includes $4,562,000 for the transportation of officers and enlisted men and their dependents. Probably I should say that this figure includes about $125,000 for expenses on account of recruiting. An overestimate of $128,000 was developed on account of travel allowance by enlisted men upon discharge. In addition to the subtraction of this amount, as a measure of economy, the committee has allowed for the travel of officers one-third of the amount expended on that account in 1931, permitting a reduction of $266,327, and, in consequence thereof, has reduced the estimate for travel of dependents by 25 per cent, or $150,000, making a total reduction below the estimate of $544,827. The appropriation has been so phrased as to limit the cost of travel to the reduced allowances.

In this connection officers upon permanent change of station are entitled to have transported at public expense household effects within certain weight allowances, graduated according to rank. Automobiles come within the classification of household effects. The cost in connection with the preparation for shipment and shipment of privately owned automobiles is estimated at $327,500. The committee has reduced the appropriation by $307,500, and has included a provision denying the use of any appropriation contained in the bill for any expense incident to the transportation of privately owned automobiles except on account of the return to the United States of such cars as may be in transit, or already have been transported, to points outside of the continental limits of the United States at public expense on the date the bill shall become law. For the return of cars embraced by the exception, $20,000 is allowed to remain.

FUEL AND TRANSPORTATION

Owing to the prevailing low prices of fuel oil, the Budget estimate of $7,000,000 is $1,513,171 below the current appropriation. A modified steaming program, prepared by the Chief of Naval Operations at the instance of the committee, will permit a further reduction of $215,000; and a restudy of the estimated charges for electric current, compressed air, and steam required for the use of personnel of the vessels undergoing modernization admits of a further reduction of $50,000.

The Budget recommended that authority be given, in the event of a rise in the cost of fuel oil, to use without charge a limited quantity of fuel oil at the expense of the naval supply account fund. In our present stringent financial state, if fuel costs go up the committee would expect less steaming, unless an emergency situation should arise.

MAINTENANCE, BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS

This appropriation is charged with the repair and maintenance of $400,000,000 worth of public works; also with certain operating and administrative expenses at industrial yards chiefly. For the present year $9,014,816 was provided. The Budget proposes $8,600,000 for 1933. The objects of expenditure are enumerated on page 667 of the hearings. Within the reduced amount additional maintenance dredging, estimated to cost $150,000, will need to be taken care of, and there will be no funds available for other than normal maintenance. The committee, however, arbitrarily has subtracted $200,000, which does include, though, $12,700 intended for the purchase of 11 passenger-carrying automobiles.

The bill makes provision for the purchase of no passenger-carrying automobiles, and section 3 of the bill precludes the use of cars on hand, except by the Secretary of the Navy, for other than official purposes, and the exclusive assignment of any except to the Secretary of the Navy, the Commander in Chief of the United States Asiatic Fleet, Marine Corps officers serving with expeditionary forces in foreign countries, and medical officers on out-patient medical service.

Heretofore the bill has carried a limitation on expenditures for the maintenance, operation, and repair of passenger-carrying automobiles, including the compensation of civilian operators, except Marine Corps cars with expeditionary forces abroad. The limitation at present is $110,000. The committee has reduced the limitation to $70,000 and has provided that such sum shall include the pay of enlisted men employed as chauffeurs. These measures obviously will compel a reduction in the number of cars operating and will tend to bring about an adjustment upon the basis of actual official requirements.

A statement with respect to Navy cars on hand commences on page 672 of the hearings.

PUBLIC WORKS, BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS

For new public-works projects, including those under way, the Budget recommends a direct appropriation of $4,122,000 and an indirect appropriation, which contemplates a draft upon the naval hospital fund, of $1,000,000. For the present fiscal year $12,164,000 has been appropriated. Of this amount it is estimated that $3,785,000 will remain unexpended on July 1, 1932, and that in addition there will be available on such date $800,000 of the appropriation heretofore provided for the Sunnyvale lighter-than-air base. These two balances, plus the amounts estimated for 1933 totaling $5,122,000, it is planned to apply approximately as follows:

Continue ammunition-storage program	$2,000,000
Continue development of Sunnyvale lighter-than-air base	3,000,000
Continue work on projects commenced under appropriations carried in 1932 naval appropriation act (enumerated on p. 681 of the hearings)	1,400,000
Continue work on projects authorized in the public works authorization act approved May 14, 1930, and which were initiated in the fiscal year 1931 (enumerated on p. 681 of the hearings)	1,750,000
Undertake new projects	422,000
Begin construction of naval hospital at Philadelphia	1,000,000
Total ($15,000 in excess of estimate)	9,572,000

In lieu of the Budget estimate of $5,122,000, including $1,000,000 of naval hospital fund money, the committee proposes a direct appropriation only of $2,790,000, or a reduction of $2,332,000, arrived at as follows:

By omitting the Philadelphia naval hospital project (does not affect total of bill)	$1,000,000
By reappropriating unexpended balances of all public-works appropriations	1,000,000
By eliminating the magazine-replacement project, naval-ammunition depot, Lake Denmark, N. J. ($120,000), and a reduction suggested by the Bureau of Yards and Docks because of possible savings and some work not progressing as rapidly as first anticipated	332,000
Total	2,332,000

As to the first item of omission, a new naval hospital was authorized to be erected in Philadelphia by the act approved February 12, 1931, at a cost, including equipment, accessories, utilities, and appurtenances, of not to exceed $3,000,000. A supplemental estimate has been presented proposing an expenditure of $1,000,000 out of the naval hospital fund to begin this project. Following the principle it is understood was applied in the preparation of the original Budget that no funds would be recommended for undertaking new work, the committee has made no provision for initiating this project. From a purely naval standpoint the hospital is not required nor is its erection advocated by the ranking administrative officials of the Navy Department.

The Navy has 5,071 beds in fire-resisting buildings. On November 11 last naval patients numbered 2,514.

It is true the present hospital layout at Philadelphia is entirely of temporary construction, but this is true as to Charleston, S. C., Parris Island, S. C., and Pensacola, Fla., while at many other places, as will be seen from the table on page 746 of the hearings, both permanent and temporary facilities exist, the latter being the more commodious in two or three instances, particularly at Great Lakes. The new establishment planned for Philadelphia is described on page 686 of the hearings. It would be approximately of 650-bed capacity.

With respect to the proposal to reappropriate unexpended balances, there is but one justification for the course—that is, public-works appropriations are continuing and remain available for obligation until expended. There are many balances of long standing which should have been covered into the general fund of the Treasury, but instead have been continued alive available for further obligation. It would seem desirable to cancel their availability in this manner and in the future have but one public-works fund, applicable to objects specifically authorized and appropriated for, and not continue to have a number of unused balances the further obligation of which the Congress, if consulted, might or might not approve.

The project of replacing magazines at Lake Denmark has been omitted not only because it lacks authorization but because $927,000 was appropriated in the first deficiency act, fiscal year 1927, for the rehabilitation of this station, following which a general program was adopted by Congress to provide appropriate and adequate ammunition storage facilities for both the Army and Navy in consequence of the recommendations of the Joint Army and Navy Board, printed in House Document No. 199, Seventieth Congress, first session. The joint board stated that nothing was necessary to be done at Lake Denmark beyond the rehabilitation work then in progress.

The new projects for which the bill makes provision appear on pages 38 and 39 of the bill. The places and amounts follow:

Navy yard, Norfolk, Va	$110,000
Naval ammunition depot, Hingham, Mass	17,000
Naval ammunition depot, Mare Island, Calif	75,000
Lightning protection at ordnance stations	60,000
Naval radio and compass stations	40,000

While on the subject of shore establishments, you have heard it frequently expressed that we maintain too many navy yards; that we have too much navy on shore. I concur in that view. At the instance of the committee the Secretary of the Navy caused a study to be made of the question, and after the hearings on the items in the bill had been concluded the Secretary of the Navy, the Chief of Naval Operations, and other officers of the department appeared before the subcommittee and indicated that there was no justification for continuing in possession of certain establishments and property or for continuing to operate others. Some, it was suggested, might be sold or leased and others closed down. Some propositions were contingent upon others, and some looked to future rather than immediate accomplishment.

If none of the "ifs"—and there were many of them, as I recall—prove to be obstacles, we are told that ultimately we might expect annually to save around $2,500,000. The plan as a whole lacks sufficient definiteness for legislative action. However, as it looks to the saving some time of some amount, the committee has inserted on page 39 of the bill a provision clothing the President with authority to effect such dispositions of shore establishments as the department may recommend.

AVIATION

We propose reductions totaling $1,271,295 in the estimates on account of naval aviation. I shall only refer to the three major items contributing to that sum.

The estimate includes $245,800 for special improvements at air stations, of which $90,000 is for fire protection, improvements, and additions to night-flying lighting systems, lighting of obstructions, air marking, and so forth. The committee has allowed this latter amount. Other projects—and there has not been any specific indication of their nature—if undertaken at all, under the terms of the bill, will need to be financed out of any savings it may be possible to effect under the appropriation as a whole.

The new rigid airship Akron is now in commission. Its sister ship, the Macon, will be completed about January 1, 1933. The bill carries the final appropriation—$1,450,000—to complete this ship. As a measure of economy, if for no other reason, it is believed the Los Angeles should be permanently placed out of commission. In the committee's judgment, this might be done immediately. The Budget includes $270,000 on account of the Los Angeles.

The Navy's 5-year airplane program was brought to a close in June, 1931, when it came into possession of 1,000 "useful airplanes." Including 166 planes assigned to Navy and Marine Corps Reserve aviation, on November 1, 1931, the Navy was in possession of 1,092 useful airplanes. The authorized program calls for 965 planes for regular Navy and Marine Corps aviation, and on November 1, 1931, exclusive of obsolescent and obsolete types, there were 926 modern planes on hand and 530 on order or to be ordered under appropriations and contract authorizations heretofore granted for regular Navy and Marine Corps aviation, or a total of 1,456. Of these 1,456 planes, it is estimated that by July 1, 1933, in other words, the beginning of the fiscal year 1934, attrition will have removed 420, in which case there will be a surplus of from 2 to 25 planes over the authorized number of every type of which it is proposed to order new planes during 1933, save the transport type, of which it is estimated there will be a shortage of 2.

The Budget includes $7,200,000 to pay for airplanes ordered and to be ordered under the contract authorization contained in the 1932 naval appropriation act, and $800,000 of appropriation and $5,000,000 additional contract authorization for purchasing or ordering 150 new airplanes and 1 nonrigid airship during the fiscal year 1933.

In view of the fact, using the estimated wastage figure of 420 planes to the end of the fiscal year 1933, that we will begin the fiscal year 1934 with an actual surplus of modern, useful planes, the committee has deducted the $800,000 of cash but is allowing the contract authorization of $5,000,000 to remain, applicable only to new airplanes, their equipment, spare parts, and accessories. It has left to the department the determination of the types of planes to be ordered under this authorization.

The bill carries $2,210,000 for experimental and development work, of which $220,000 is for continuing high-speed development, for which a like sum was made available for the present fiscal year. The use of the money, actual and proposed, is recounted on page 597 of the hearings.

MARINE CORPS

For pay of the Marine Corps the committee has subtracted $383,911 from the Budget estimate. Of this amount $243,245 is attributable to measures and policies I have already discussed. The committee arbitrarily has reduced by $100,000 the amount estimated for pay of enlisted men and has made a further reduction of $40,666 as a result of the application to the marines of the same policy advocated with respect to the Navy relative to less travel.

For recruiting, transporting, subsisting, clothing, housing, and equipping the Marine Corps and the Marine Corps Reserve the Budget proposes $6,855,000. The current appropriation is $8,598,435. In addition to the Budget reduction of $1,743,435, due very largely to the proposed smaller enlisted force, the committee recommends the subtraction of $396,280. A lower ration cost accounts for $241,402 of this reduction. The remaining major component extends to the elimination of $101,328 for the purchase of material and the manufacture of blue uniforms. We have refused to provide the Army with a blue uniform on account of the expense since before the war. As a measure of economy the committee is unwilling to recommend at this time further expenditures for continuing so to equip the marines.

MODERNIZATION OF BATTLESHIPS

Under the authority contained in the act approved February 28, 1931, and in consequence of an initial appropriation of $10,000,000 carried in the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1931, the battleships New Mexico, Mississippi, and Idaho are undergoing modernization, the New Mexico at the Philadelphia Navy Yard and the other two at the Norfolk Navy Yard. The total authorized cost of the work is $30,000,000, and the Budget includes $15,000,000 for carrying the work forward during 1933.

The modernization of these three vessels was first projected about three years ago, at which time the cost, as authorized, was determined or estimated. It is contended that any saving by reason of the decline of commodity costs in the interim will be more than absorbed by an increase occasioned by the work not progressing as rapidly as planned owing to the inadequacy of the initial appropriation. That is an administrative fault. Either the work should not have been permitted to be undertaken until adequate funds were available for its prosecution in an economical way, or, having been started, a request for additional funds should have been presented in the usual course. In any event, the committee believes that all essential features of modernization may be accomplished for 10 per cent less than originally estimated and is proposing that the limit of cost be reduced to $27,000,000, deducting one-third of the amount that thus would be saved ($1,000,000) from the appropriation requested for 1933. Such action would result in a clear saving of $2,000,000 in the following fiscal year.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY

For new ship construction the Budget provides a direct appropriation of $31,400,000, and contemplates the augmentation of such sum by a draft of $6,000,000 upon the naval supply account fund. There will be available, in addition, an estimated unexpended balance at the end of the present fiscal year, of $27,000,260, making a total available for expenditure during 1933 of $64,400,260. The committee is advised that probably all of that sum actually will be expended except $4,169,667, and it has subtracted such sum from the estimate, admittedly a deferment.

Every vessel for which authority exists to build or commence the construction of during the fiscal year 1933 is provided for in varying degrees in the Budget and bill, save seven destroyers, one transport, and an experimental submarine, all authorized in 1916.

Under the terms of the London treaty the United States is entitled to 180,000 tons of 8-inch-gun cruisers. Eight have been built and seven are building, and, according to the treaty, three more may be built, undertaking the construction of one at the beginning of each of the calendar years 1933, 1934, and 1935. The Budget and bill include $800,000 for commencing the one which may be begun after December 31, 1932.

The seven building and the three yet to be begun were authorized along with five others in the act of February 13, 1929. As to these five, the treaty nullifies their authorization unless the authorization be construed to cover cruisers of either the 8-inch or 6-inch gun category. The Judge Advocate General of the Navy has held that these five vessels may be built, subject to an appropriation therefor, as 6-inch-gun cruisers. That may be the correct construction. The authorization act fixed the cost of such vessels at $17,000,000 each, and that figure contemplated 8-inch-gun cruisers.

In consequence of a supplemental estimate presented at the last session, $10,000,000 was appropriated to commence the construction of 11 of the 12 remaining destroyers of the 1916 program. Construction of but 5 of the 11 has been undertaken for reasons of economy, the committee is advised.

Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to lay before the committee all of the essential features of this bill, and I appreciate the patience of my listeners. I will not say that this bill can not be further reduced. I question though whether appreciably more might be taken off without doing harm.

There is no man in or out of public life who is willing to go any further than I in reducing Federal expenditures in every direction where it may be established that waste or extravagance prevails, or where it is manifest that immediate necessity does not exist for going ahead with undertakings under way or projected, or in any other well-considered and justifiable manner. I am not in sympathy with the idea that the only way to cut is to cut. I view with alarm the growing tendency to reduce appropriations without full knowledge of what the effect of such action might be. We do not always promote economy when we reduce this, that, or the other item in an appropriation bill, and I deprecate moves in that direction made without study or full knowledge of what the effect might be. To illustrate: Take a work in progress. It might appear, without knowledge of all that may be involved, that the amount recommended is excessive, and yet the figure may be based upon a well-planned, well-ordered progress schedule, interference with which would result in an increase of cost. I have called your attention to just such a case, brought to the notice of the naval subcommittee, where slowing down work actually occasioned an additional expense of three-quarters of a million dollars.

My colleagues, economize we must, but let us go about it in a considerate way. The entire economic structure of our country is in jeopardy; and the way in which we proceed, and not alone what we do to promote its stability, will have a considerable bearing, certainly psychologically, upon the early attainment of the goal which we all seek. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, there has been very much misinformation regarding Government salaries. There seems to be a common impression that many employees are paid from $5,000 to $10,000 annually and that $3,000 a year is common. The Bureau of the Budget, which furnishes Congress with detailed data on which appropriations are based, has furnished a tabulation for all salaries except for judicial and legislative employees, from which you will find that 17 per cent of the employees receive less than $1,000 per year. Just imagine that, gentlemen. Seventeen per cent of all Federal employees receive less than $1,000 a year; 37.7 per cent receive less than $1,500 a year; 57 per cent receive less than $2,000 a year; 84 per cent receive less than $2,500 a year; and 95 per cent receive less than $3,000 a year. The average salary of all Federal employees is $1,441 a year. These figures also show that a straight 10 per cent cut, as has been suggested by the Economy Committee, or an 11 per cent cut, on all employees would save only about 5½ per cent of the national deficit. It is evident, therefore, that salary cuts would not balance the Budget.

No reasonable person will willingly cause distress to the loyal, industrious, and poorly paid employees of the Government when there is so little to be gained.

To-day we have had another proposition presented to us by the President. It has been said that "an apple a day keeps the doctor away." Maybe by getting a new bill every day we might keep the wolf away from the door of the Federal employee. The President evidently considered the criticism we made last week about taxing charwomen getting $50 a month and mulcting them to the extent of $4.17 a month out of their little salaries. The President has offered a new proposition. He said, "We will let the little charwomen alone this time, and we will make a minimum of $1,200, and below that amount we will not tax them." So I will take $1,300 as the minimum taxable salary. Assuming an employee receives $1,300 a year, under the President's plan he would have to give up in time the equivalent of one month's salary, which amounts to $108.33. Each year he would be mulcted, under the President's plan, of the sum of $108.33, or $9.09 a month. In other words, his net salary would be about $1,191 a year.

It does not seem fair or reasonable or just that we should mulct the salary of an employee receiving only $1,300 a year to the extent of $108.33. In other words, this employee would have to work for $1,191 a year.

As I have stated to you in reading this table, the average salary paid to Federal employees is $1,440. Under the President's plan this employee would have to give up one month's salary in time, which would be the equivalent of $120 that the employee would have to sacrifice in a year, or $10 a month. Just imagine an employee getting $1,440, the average salary, through this deduction of $120 having his salary reduced to $1,320 a year.

Other provisions of the President's proposal include a provision that all promotions must be suspended for the ensuing year, that all filling of vacancies must be suspended, that no extra pay shall be allowed for overtime or for night work, and in addition to this, there must be consolidation of different Federal activities.

It has occurred to me, where is the Federal employee going to get off. What is going to be the last analysis? The President proposes this plan. Perhaps, the Committee on Economy will present another plan to-morrow. The Lord knows what that plan will embrace. Then, perhaps, the day after the President will present another plan, and then after we go over that, perhaps the following day, the Committee on Economy may present another plan, and so on ad infinitum. We do not know where it is going to end, and, in the last analysis, I fear that the poor Federal employee will get no salary at all; in fact, perhaps, they may be called upon by the Government to donate their services to these rich United States; not only to be on the pay roll without pay, but to offer their services as patriotic men and women to this great, rich Government of the United States in order that we may carry on and balance the Budget.

Now that we have eliminated the charwomen getting $50 a month, and we are generous enough to get to the plan of only eliminating those that get $1,200 a year, perhaps, the next bill might be a little better. Perhaps, they may have largeness of heart enough to go up to $1,500, and the next bill may be $1,800, and so on. Eventually, we may be able to get them up to a living basis of wages. Let us hope that we may.

Now, what is the plight of the Federal employees? As has been stated here many times, men and women give up their lives to a public career as a Federal official, and it is a position of dignity and honor and respect. In many of the foreign countries where the Federal employee is on a more permanent and better status, it is a life work, as it should be with our faithful employees here, who have taken competitive examinations and have entered the service of the United States.

Should they not be able to look forward with a reasonable degree of certainty to a fixed wage, to certain yearly absences for vacation and sickness? Should they not be able to look forward to a fair increase in salary after serving many years?

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. BOYLAN. I think you will agree with me in saying that they should, because the morale of the Government workers will be seriously interfered with if they have no reasonable certainty of a decent living wage, together with a proper hope for promotion.

Now, what is going to happen to the Federal employee? First we have the Budget cuts. Then we have the cuts by the Committee on Appropriations. Then the legislative body at the other end of this Capitol that has heretofore been in the habit of increasing appropriations suddenly turns around and decreases them to the extent of 10 per cent as they did in the Interior Department appropriation bill yesterday. If they give the bill another 10 per cent cut, and then the President comes in and gives his little cut, and then the Committee on Economy is going to give a cut, what part of the salary will be left?

Gentlemen, it is ridiculous to have this state of affairs existing in this country—to try to balance the Budget through cutting the salaries of faithful employees of the Government, men and women who are not paid proportionately, and the Bureau of Efficiency has brought figures here to show this, in comparison with those who are in commercial life. Surely, the Government should be a model, should hold itself up to the business industries of our country as a model employer; and let me say to you, gentlemen, let us be on guard and do our part to prevent the cutting of the salaries of the miserably underpaid employees of our Government. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I am going to advocate a double heresy—the Democrats should forget Thomas Jefferson and the Republicans should pass up Hoover. Neither the dead nor the living dead are going to solve our problems. Let both parties stop tombstone gazing and look ahead. An economic revolution has come upon us—and the solution does not lie in the stony faces of the dead leaders nor the hopeless faces of the living. Traditionalism must give way to realism.

Our immediate problem is to master the machine. There is little economic gain in attacks on markets, as in stock-exchange investigations—in fact, there is a distinct loss. There is little gain in attacking consumers by pay cuts—in fact, there is an economic loss. We have largely lost our foreign markets—we must exist largely on our home markets. Breaking down our consumers by pay cuts is ruinous to business. Why not help business by a great public-works program? There is something sinister about pay-cut programs—indicating a desire on the part of some leaders to reduce our standard of living to oriental and African labor, so that the owners of machinery here can get the necessary human help cheaply enough to compete in foreign markets.

Here we are in a time of diminishing consumption and a per capita debt 50 per cent below 1919, and we insist on cutting down American standards.

There are three major causes for the depression: (a) Anxiety of a banker-controlled administration to help Europe at the expense of America; (b) unlawful mergers, cutting out the small business man and cutting down the human element of the plants; (c) machinery which has taken the place of human beings without compensation to the human beings.

An American foreign policy that does not mean a mere protest about foreign aggression, a foreign policy that would have stopped Japan at the gates of Manchuria—not a foreign policy that merely said to Japan, "Do not enrich yourselves at the expense of us and other countries. Please do not do it; we do not like it."

That is not a foreign policy; that is keeping the record straight. A strong foreign policy would have insisted that all countries involved in the 9-power treaty should have acted to stop Japan.

What has happened? Japan owes us money. Our country said, "You do not have to pay your debts for a while." What have they done? They have used our money to take over a vast region, which has enriched Japan, and because of their strong foreign policy they were able to go on and acquire great riches, upon which Japan will subsist for all time.

Had we a strong foreign policy, had we been able, because of real leadership, had we been able to unite the powers we might have been able to stop Japan and helped ourselves by so doing. By recognizing the national aspirations of China we would have been able to build up in China a great consuming market, a friendly consuming market, for American products. But we did not have that foreign policy.

B, as to mergers: There has never been an attempt—a really serious attempt—made, either under the Coolidge administration or under the Hoover administration, and on the floor of this House the attitude of the administration was also carried out, to enforce any antitrust law. There have been unrelenting mergers, one after another, with the approbation of the administration, almost with the approbation of the Congress, which threw men out of work, which deprived the small business man of his business, which was absolutely ruinous to general competitive business, and there was not a hand raised by the Government.

I recall that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] offered an amendment to the Justice Department appropriation bill to give the Department of Justice a sufficient force of men to see to it that the antitrust laws were enforced. That would have helped the situation. If the administration does not care to enforce the antitrust laws, if the Congress does not want them enforced, then let us all have the courage to change them, but if we do change them, let their revision bear in mind that the white-collar man, that the small business man, must be protected.

Of course, there is a new system of distribution. There is a new system of production. But if we are going to allow a new system of production, economic advances, to be controlled by a few, then we have to see to it by law that the rights of the many have some kind of compensation because of these advances.

C, machinery: Machinery has thrown men out of work right and left, but we must find new markets, new ideas, new things of production. But we have failed in that. It has not been done. The Congress should study this question of technological unemployment. The answer is probably in a shorter day's work, in a shorter week's work, with no change in pay; with the old standard of pay. Otherwise it does not amount to anything.

I understand from those better acquainted with labor situations than I am, that every time we cut down the hours of work of men in America there has been a wave of prosperity, because more men were called to work to make up that time.

The Ways and Means Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate might find a way of compensating human labor, thrown out of work by advanced machinery, by a good, strong tax on labor-saving machinery and the profits of all labor-saving machinery, and let that money find its way back, through taxes and through appropriations for public works or for keeping up the Federal pay roll, into the hands of the people; back into business, back into general distribution and circulation. All those things should be done.

Another thing that can be done is to accept the suggestion of Mayor Walker, of New York City; of my colleagues, the gentleman from New York, Mr. CULLEN, the gentleman from New York, Mr. O'CONNOR, and other wet Members of this House, and create an entirely new business and a new market, and help unemployment. We are not going to do those things by trying to present Herbert Hoover in a false and great light before the people, because he has not worked out that way. The Democrats are not going to do that by constantly harping on Thomas Jefferson. Thomas Jefferson is not running for office. He had his day. There should be a new democracy. There should be a realistic democracy, to get down to business and tackle these new things that have come upon us, and to stop looking into the past, but look into the future and try to parallel the economic advances with governmental advances for the great masses of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, in the pending appropriation bill for the Naval Establishment there are several more or less revolutionary propositions. The Navy by Executive order is decommissioning a number of the boats in use for the training of the Naval Reserve. The committee has lent its approval in the bill by limiting the appropriation so that these boats will have to go out of commission about September. Under our philosophy of government and because large Military and Naval Establishments are repugnant to the American principle, we depend almost entirely for national defense on a well-trained civilian military and naval reserve. It is the cheapest possible kind of national defense, and it is the safest kind, because civilians in peaceful occupations do not want to go to war. They are not junkers, they are not militarists, but they act as a strong safeguard against encroachment by any outside nation. If an outside nation knows that a well-trained civilian reserve of citizens who love their homes and peace enough to fight for them and are prepared and capable of fighting, then we are much less of a temptation to invasion from without or to invasion of our own rights abroad. We have proceeded upon that theory. We have a minimum of standing Military and Naval Establishments. Our Army, for instance, is seventeenth in the armies of the world—down at the bottom. Our Navy, while small, has been highly efficient, probably the most efficient Navy in the world, and along with that has gone hand in hand a very efficient Naval Reserve. The basis of this efficiency is the training these boys get on these boats, particularly in the Middle West, where the Great Lakes are available. We have had these Eagle boats and gunboats, and they have been of inestimable value in training these boys. It must be kept in mind that probably in excess of 80 per cent of the enlisted personnel of the Naval Reserve are officer material and in time of war would be immediately either commissioned or sent to officer-training schools. It is the cheapest kind of preparation and training for national defense.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. The gentleman speaks of our Army being seventeenth. Does he mean by that in percentage of number or in efficiency?

Mr. MAAS. I mean that we are seventeenth in number. It may surprise the gentleman perhaps to know that there are 16 nations with larger armies than ours.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it not true, with respect to the five training ships and the two Eagle boats on the Great Lakes, that within the last few years, indeed the last year, an item of $150,000 was spent on them to recondition them, to put them in good shape, with new machinery, boilers, and so forth?

Mr. MAAS. The gentleman is correct. We have put in a considerable amount of money in reconditioning and modernizing these boats. They are now not only to be decommissioned, they are to be junked. The States themselves, in many cases, have contributed a substantial investment in national defense in these ships and in facilities for them.

Mr. CLANCY. And is it not true that the ships are absolutely to be sold as old iron and junked?

Mr. MAAS. That is the understanding. These ships are to be sold as old iron. They will not bring one-tenth of the cost of reconditioning them in the last year or so. If they are to be decommissioned, there should be an order prohibiting their being sold for junk or being junked at all. They should be saved so that if later the financial conditions of the country make it advisable to again put them in commission they will be available, and we will not have to go out and spend several million more to get some new ships. We have an investment in these ships, and if economy forces us to lay them up for the time being, they should be at least laid up, and I am sure the committee will agree to that proposition. We will receive nothing substantial from them as old iron.

Mr. GREEN. In that connection the same thing obtains more or less with respect to our merchant marine. It is reported now that our Economy Committee are about to almost destroy our merchant marine.

Mr. MAAS. I should think it would, though I have not investigated that situation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. TABER. I desire to make a little statement on this matter, and if the gentleman requires it I shall give him a little more time. The program for decommissioning these ships was that of the department, and the first intimation that our committee had of it came through the Army and Navy Journal. It was their program to cut out the 2-week summer cruises with active duty for the Naval Reserves. The program itself contemplates the laying up of these ships on the 1st of September, and also contemplates that during the summer of 1932, up to September 1, there shall be week-end cruises, which the commander of those ships state are regularly taken, so that the reserve will have the opportunity to train. If the condition of the Treasury permits it, personally I can see no reason why, if the situation demands it, those ships should not be put back in commission again in the spring or summer of 1933.

Mr. MAAS. I thank the gentleman for the explanation, and I hope the Navy will follow his suggestion.

Mr. CLANCY. If the gentleman will yield further, the Navy Department says that they are going to sell those ships, after September 1, for what they can get. They say that they are going to cut out the summer cruises. There is a great deal of confusion upon the subject because the Navy Department came before this committee after the hearings were closed and printed. There is much conjecture except what you can get here and there largely by hearsay.

Mr. TABER. I do not want to make a statement with reference to the ships being junked, because we have nothing before the committee or in the hearings which would support any such policy. That may be the policy of the department, I do not know; but I understand that it is not the intention of the Navy Department to do away with the active service for the naval reserve when conditions will permit it to be resumed.

Mr. MAAS. I shall offer an amendment when we reach that section of the bill prohibiting the junking of these ships.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. For the benefit of the members of the subcommittee, let me say that I have a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in which it is indicated that these boats are going to be junked because of their obsolete design and the expense of maintenance. I do not believe they are giving the committee all the facts.

Mr. TABER. I will be perfectly frank and say that we have not gone into that.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. I have been informed that they are going to junk these ships.

Mr. MAAS. That is as I understand it.

Mr. WHITE. I am interested in knowing what saving is going to be effected and what is going to happen to the Naval Reserve.

Mr. MAAS. It is not the intention to abandon the Naval Reserve but merely to curtail its activities temporarily, but the thing of which I am fearful is that during this temporary suspension they will junk these boats and then they will have nothing with which to resume this training unless they go to the expense of getting new boats.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. I think I can give the gentleman information as to what the saving is going to be in the Great Lakes district. By abolishing the summer cruises a saving of $36,000 per year is expected, and that is a bad guess, for I believe there will be a loss.

Mr. WHITE. Can the gentleman tell me how many men are trained there?

Mr. CLANCY. On the Great Lakes they train about 2,900 men, and they are trained so well that when war is declared they can operate the ships which are put into service because of the declaration of war. They are not only trained for service in the engine room, but they are trained to navigate the ships.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Can the gentleman inform the committee as to how much it will cost to recommission or recondition these ships if they are laid up over the winter?

Mr. MAAS. I can not give any figures for that.

Mr. WHITE. Have they not just been reconditioned?

Mr. MAAS. Yes; they have just been reconditioned. As I understand, it is not their intention to lay them up, but it is their intention to junk them. However, I have no information available as to what it will cost to lay them up for a year.

Mr. ANDRESEN. It will cost a great deal to get them back into condition if they do lay them up.

Mr. MAAS. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. ANDRESEN. That would be just an additional excuse to secure more money to build some new ships when this program is resumed.

Mr. MAAS. That will be true if they do junk them.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. SPARKS. How recently were these ships reconditioned to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. MAAS. I think some of them were reconditioned within the last year, at least within the last two years.

Mr. PITTENGER. The Paducah was reconditioned within the last year.

Mr. SPARKS. Does the gentleman know about what the cost of reconditioning was?

Mr. MAAS. I do not remember the figures on that, but it was a very substantial amount.

Now, I want to go on with another phase of this bill which I think is of vital importance.

Mr. GREEN. Before the gentleman goes on with that will he yield?

Mr. MAAS. For a brief question; yes.

Mr. GREEN. I appreciate the gentleman's position, and I hope he will offer an amendment to the end that if operation is to be suspended it will be temporary and that these boats shall not be junked.

Mr. MAAS. That will be the purpose of my amendment.

Now, gentlemen, this bill proposes another new principle in aviation, on the question of flight pay. Some years ago, when the modern air corps of this country was planned, legislation was enacted which provided for 50 per cent of the base pay for pilots and those assigned to flight duty. This bill proposes that the flight pay shall be limited to $1,100 as the maximum per year per pilot, regardless of rank, grade, or pay. It does not provide $1,100 for everyone. It is 50 per cent up until they reach the point where they would receive $1,100 and then that is the maximum.

Now, gentlemen, perhaps the greatest individual reliance this country has in national defense is aviation. Because of our isolated position we are interested only in national defense. We are not interested in the military branch for aggressive warfare, but we must be in a position to defend our own shores. The only way we can defend our shores is with airplanes. Battleships to-day are not going to come into New York Harbor or San Francisco Harbor. They are not going to come within gunfire reach. Airplane carriers are going to be convoyed by enemy ships to within 100 or 200 miles of our great cities and then great hordes of planes are going to be let loose which will come, perhaps, in the night, over our cities and drop tons and tons of high explosives and destroy our cities.

We do not have to provide long-range coast guns any more. We are not going to be invaded by big battleships. There is only one way you can fight airplanes and that is with more airplanes, and there is only one way to win battles in the air and that is to have a superior air force, both as to efficiency of pilots and as to number of planes.

The United States has the most efficient air force to-day in its Navy and Army of any nation in the world. This is admitted by the technical military experts of other nations, and one of the reasons is because of the high caliber of our personnel in our aviation branches of our three military services, Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

Flying is a hazardous occupation, and needs this extra compensation on the general principle that any hazardous occupation needs additional compensation.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. MAAS. There is much more, however, involved than the question of hazard in the matter of additional pay. I want to show you why the principle of 50 per cent is correct, including every rank up to the rank of generals in command.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman means 50 per cent increased pay?

Mr. MAAS. Fifty per cent increase above base pay. I thank the gentleman for the correction.

I am going to try to show the committee the necessity, the fairness, and the equity of this position as originally established, and the inequality of the present proposal.

The general assumption is that the bulk of the hazardous flying is done by the officers in the grade of ensign and lieutenant in the Navy and lieutenant and captain in the Army and the Marine Corps, respectively. However, we have progressed beyond the point of flying just a few ships in the air together. We have learned from our Army Air Corps maneuvers and our great Battle Fleet maneuvers that the aerial wars of the future will be with great bodies of planes, great numbers of them where they will undoubtedly be led by at least captains in the Navy and colonels in the Army. To-day the unit is a squadron and the commander of a squadron in the Army is a major and in the Navy a lieutenant commander, and yet this principle that is being enunciated now gives recognition to the maximum of hazardous flying only below the grades of captain in the Army and lieutenant (senior grade) in the Navy. In our large units now in wings we will have captains in the Navy commanding in actual battle or in actual combat, and we will have colonels leading their organizations into combat, doing exactly the same kind of flying that the second lieutenant is doing. The hazard is there for all alike, but the higher the rank the greater the responsibility.

It is true that the higher the rank, perhaps, the less experimental flying in time of peace, but this is the principle I want to get over to you—the real, vital necessity for 50 per cent extra pay for flight duty.

All of us recognize the question of hazard. We know that the lieutenant who flies 100 hours a month is subjected to more hazard than a major or colonel who flies 10 or 12 hours a month. This is quite true, but the basic thing for which we are compensating is the fact that the military or naval pilot is using up his life that much faster. To-day, with the development of aviation, a pilot is subject to terrific strain, the physical effect of which is tremendous.

The average time of service of an officer may be a little over 30 years, but the principle is recognized that he may retire after 30 years of commissioned service. In aviation we have come to a realization of the fact that an active pilot can not last in the military or naval service over 20 years. This means he can serve only two-thirds or less of the usual time in his full capacity of efficiency.

If this is correct, then he should be compensated for his full military life; and if in giving his full military life to the service he can serve only 20 years, he should receive pay over that period commensurate with his brother officers who can serve the full 30 years, and the proper way to accomplish this is to give him 50 per cent more pay during the 20 years, which will approximately—although, of course, not anywhere near fully—equal the pay of his brother officers for their 30 years.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. CLANCY. The gentleman's general argument is in favor of military and naval aviation preparedness. Does not the gentleman know that there is good opportunity for this sort of preparedness in the Coast Guard? There is a conflict among the officers of the Coast Guard as to whether there should be a very large sum of money spent for motor boats and for large ships in looking after rum runners or whether a larger proportion of the funds should be spent for seaplanes which can cover a much larger territory for life-saving and rum chasing at much less expense, and in time of war can be devoted to war purposes.

Mr. MAAS. I think that is quite correct.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. I want to satisfy myself as to one part of the gentleman's remarks. Assuming, for the sake of economy, that these training ships are junked—if training is resumed, what will the Government use in the place of these ships, and will not such administration be more costly in the long run than if an adequate reserve were maintained at this time?

Mr. MAAS. I feel that is correct, and I am opposed to dispensing with this service or even suspending it.

I think most of you know that I am at least partially qualified to speak on this subject of aviators. I am a pilot, and hold a commercial transport license as well as naval and military licenses. I fly practically every day. I have flown nearly a hundred thousand miles. I have flown in China, and I flew to South America and back through Central America. I have crossed the continent by plane dozens of times, and I know a little bit about the effect on the human system of high-altitude flying. I know that you can not fly 20,000 feet in the air and put your plane into a dive and dive 300 miles an hour down to within three or four or five thousand feet of the earth at such terrific speed and then pull out suddenly, as is necessary in military flying, without something happening to the human body.

I know that flying in such altitudes and flying in these high-speed planes and the drone of the motor have some effect on the aviator's ears, so that they all become slightly deaf after a while. I know it does something to their eyes. It is only just that we should compensate them for this. Their useful military service when in aviation is depleted that much sooner, and with respect to limiting the pay or stabilizing it at the grade of a captain in the Army or a lieutenant, senior grade, in the Navy, what have these men to look forward to after that?

Those who go into the aviation service as a career know that they can not last long; they know that they can not serve as long as their brother officers in other branches of the service. They have gone into this as a career with the expectancy that they would receive 50 per cent more pay during the time they were employed, and it does not compensate them for the differential, nor will it ever compensate them for the loss of their faculties and the effect on their nervous and physical systems.

They look forward to promotion—a lieutenant expects to be a captain and draw the pay of a captain; the major expects to be a colonel. But here you suddenly make a change in their standard. If the principle of proportionate compensation is correct, the compensation ought not to arbitrarily be cut along the line somewhere, as is proposed.

We know the hazards of aviation, and we know from the death records the vast proportion of deaths in the military service as compared with the proportion in commercial aviation. The proportion is as high in the higher grades as it is in the lower grades, proportionate with the number of officers in those grades.

Mr. SWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. SWICK. The gentleman speaks of the strain on the human body in flying. Will the gentleman tell us the percentage of men who fail to become pilots in taking the examination?

Mr. MAAS. A great majority of those who apply for service in aviation are rejected. Only a small percentage are accepted.

Mr. SWICK. I understand it is only 1 out of 40—out of the examinations that have occurred, it is only 1 out of 40 who is physically capable, and passes the other tests.

Mr. MAAS. That is true.

Mr. SWICK. It is only the cream of the applicants that pass for an aviation pilot.

Mr. MAAS. Exactly, and we want to keep that boy in the military service; we must have the best for that service.

Mr. BEAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. BEAM. Is the examination for a pilot in aviation any different from other examinations?

Mr. MAAS. Yes; an entirely different examination. In addition to the normal examination you have a rigid examination of the heart and the lungs. They have what they call the "Snyder Index," which is a rating of the effect of violent stimulation of the heart and lungs, which is not given at all for entrance into the ordinary military service. The examination is very rigid.

Then, as to the examination of the eyes. The examination is entirely different than the ordinary applicant has to pass. You have to have, medically speaking, a perfect eyesight. You have to have 20-20.

Mr. SWICK. There is really no comparison between the two examinations?

Mr. MAAS. No comparison at all between the two; no.

The fact that there is this extra hazard is recognized by insurance companies. It costs a military or naval pilot on an average of about $20 a month more for insurance. Most of the pilots are putting a large part of their extra flight pay into insurance premiums, and much of this will be lost. It runs from $12 to $50 a month. I do not think it is ever less than $50 a month for a marine aviator. Some companies will not write insurance on Marine Corps pilots at all. They are subjected to more hazards because they are called into active duty more often. An interesting thing is that you can almost always pick out a Marine Corps pilot when he is landing in a field, because he lands right on the spot, on the edge of the field. They have to do so much flying in the jungle, where they have to land on a dime, that they have trained themselves to land in inconceivably small places. There is unusual hazard in that connection, and it adds to the loss ratio of pilots. That thing has been recognized by the insurance companies.

When we had trouble in one of the South American countries and were trying to assist that country to pacify itself, some remarkable work was done by marine aviators, and that work was led not by a lieutenant or a captain but by a major, who at that time was some 45 or 46 years old. He did some of the most remarkable military flying that has ever been known in the history of the world and it is being studied to-day by every air corps of every nation in the world. He did something absolutely new and original and he should be compensated for it, in proportion to his rank and pay. He flew over the jungles, where a forced landing would mean absolute death, if not from the crash itself, at least a very tortuous death by the bandits, and he did that flying in old crates, ships that Gen. Billie Mitchell called "flying coffins," that had been abandoned by the other two branches of the service. That man and those men who followed him should be compensated in proportion to their hazard.

Most of all, in closing I want to leave this thought with you. Of course, there is a hazard and it should be compensated for, but most of all is the fact that an aviator can not endure the strain of flying, mental and physical, for very long. The drain on his nervous system and the tax upon his physical system are such that 20 years of active military flying uses up his military or naval usefulness, where his brother officer can serve 30 years, and perhaps 40 years if he started young enough. We should see to it that those officers are compensated, those men who elect that as a career, in the Navy particularly; this is true, because aviation is an assignment, and if you do not do it, then when these men get to the grade of major in the Marine Corps and lieutenant commander and on up to captain in the Navy they are not going to continue to do aviation service when they can do line duty without the strain and the tax upon their systems, mental and physical, without the hazards and the worry to their families, unless they are properly compensated for it.

The effect of this proposed emasculation of the flying pay will be to destroy the morale of the aviation branches of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps. When the higher grades and pay periods are reached, so that $1,100 is not a sufficiently attractive inducement to incur the extra hazard of flying by officers with growing families and increased financial and domestic responsibilities, these officers will transfer out of the aviation branches. You will have only the younger, less-experienced officers left.

You can not lead cavalry troops on foot, and you can not lead planes in combat from the ground. Experience, maturity, and rank are necessary in this branch as in all others. You will not have them available. But on top of that, soon the best of the young men will avoid the air service because those services will hold no future for them. It will then become no economy but a vastly greater expense, an extravagance we can not afford. It costs from $35,000 to $50,000 to train each military and naval pilot. If $1,100 becomes the maximum flight pay, there will be a very high rate of turnover in the aviation branches of the services. The men will stay and get flying experience until they reach the maximum of promotion in flight pay and then leave to go out of the military service into commercial flying, or at least into other branches of the military and naval services.

It will mean an enormously increased expense over the present outlay to keep training enough men to keep the air services manned at all. The most efficient and desirable young men will not be attracted to the aviation branches. The lowering of the quality of our flying personnel may well cost far more than the flight pay saved, in the way of more crashes and less-efficient operation.

Every time a flying officer is killed or leaves the flying service the Government loses an investment of from thirty to fifty thousand dollars.

Gentlemen, I believe this measure, if adopted, will not result in real economy but will prove to be the most expensive kind of attempted saving.

I hope this matter will be referred back at this time to the legislative committee. This matter was not really heard by the Committee on Appropriations. It is a legislative matter and requires both extensive and intensive study and consideration, lest we defeat our own purpose and at the same time do irreparable damage to national defense and gross injustice to the aviators involved. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER].

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to go over the ground just covered by my colleague [Mr. MAAS]. I shall make my remarks brief and to the point. The U. S. S. Paducah is stationed at Duluth, Minn. There is something radically wrong somewhere with this program that has come out of a clear sky. I do not know just where the "something wrong" is located, but it is somewhere over in the Navy Department. I can not find in these hearings the detailed testimony on the subject of the Paducah, but I do find something somewhat analogous that will probably sustain the charge I shall make in a moment. The printed hearings have just made available. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES], in questioning the representatives of the Navy Department, said:

> For the seagoing branch of the Naval Reserve for all purposes you propose an allotment of $2,581,617 as against $2,663,385 for the present year, or a cut of 3 per cent. For the aviation branch for 1933 the allocation is $1,215,383, as against $1,957,450 for 1932, or a cut of 35 per cent. How do you justify that action?

In other words, there was a 3 per cent cut in one branch and a 35 per cent cut in another. That testimony is interesting, but I shall not go into it. I suspect that you shall find a similar situation over in the Navy Department regarding the Naval Reserve, because I understand the matter of decommissioning these vessels was not brought before the Naval Affairs Committee. You will find, I think, that in the interest of economy they heard there was going to be a sort of 10 per cent cut in these different departments, and I suspect that the Navy Department is starting out to operate on that and that probably by cutting the heart out of the Naval Reserve, to the extent of 30 per cent, they will have a 20 per cent excess there to apply on the bureau here in Washington. You are going to find something like that somewhere.

What are the facts about the Paducah? I will let BOB CLANCY run the Navy at Detroit, but I know something about the Navy in Duluth. I do not want to see it done away with. They spent $51,000 last year to recondition the Paducah. How does that stack up with this letter—I do not know who wrote it, but it is from the Secretary of the Navy. In this letter he tries to tell me that they want to junk the Paducah, although $51,000 had been spent to put her in good condition last year, to make an oil burner out of her. He says that these vessels are of obsolete design and that due to their age they are expensive to maintain in serviceable condition and all that sort of stuff, and that they are going to change the policy. I shall not take time to read that letter.

I have had some figures prepared, and I think they are authentic. The cost of taking the Naval Reserve Force from Duluth to Chicago by train and from Chicago to the navy yard in Philadelphia is about $60,000. I think that is for the round trip.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield.

Mr. SPARKS. Was there anything said last year, when this boat was reconditioned, about it being obsolete then?

Mr. PITTENGER. No. They were making an oil-burning boat out of it.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Has the gentleman any data as to what it would cost to annually take care of the repairs, upkeep, and operation of that ship?

Mr. PITTENGER. I will answer that question in this way: It will not cost more than the extra money, railroad fare from Duluth to Chicago and Chicago to Philadelphia and back again—around $60,000. That is as much as it will cost in any one year to maintain the boat, to put these naval reservists on it and give them training and pay them, and pay all the expense. That only amounts to about $60,000 a year.

This idea that there is any economy in training the Naval Reserve Forces of the Great Lakes on the Atlantic seaboard is all foolishness. Now, I have only one other explanation. Somebody is trying to take extra good care of some other branch of the Navy, at the expense of the Naval Reserve Forces. I am for an adequate Navy. I am for adequate appropriations for the bureau in Washington, but I want the bureau in Washington to stand by these little Naval Reserve units in my district and in other districts. I think they are doing a useful public service. I think the military and Naval Reserve Forces ought to have the whole-hearted cooperation of this Congress. I do not think they should be crippled in the matter of appropriations. I do not think their cruises for 1933 ought to be suspended. I do not believe they ought to be disorganized, and I do not think they ought to be put out of business. They are just as important and just as vital to the military and naval defense of this country as any other branch of the Navy in Washington or anywhere else.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Is it the alternative plan to send these men to the Atlantic coast to train them?

Mr. PITTENGER. That is the information contained in this letter from the Secretary of the Navy. I was just attempting to show that this large additional expense would not be economy, but it would be additional expense.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PITTENGER. I yield.

Mr. TABER. The trip to the Atlantic coast would not be within the scope of the department's plan for the fiscal year 1933, but would be ultimately, after they returned to their practice of giving them two weeks' active duty, as I understand it.

Mr. PITTENGER. Yes. As I understand it, in 1933 they will do away with this entirely.

Mr. TABER. Do away with the cruise entirely in 1933, except they have provided for week-end cruises on these ships up to September 1, 1933. They have provided that the Naval Reserve officers and men may take week-end cruises on the Paducah and other ships on the Great Lakes during the summer of 1932, up to September 1, 1932.

Mr. PITTENGER. Which is a part of the fiscal year 1932.

Mr. TABER. No; from July 1 to September 1, 1932, is a part of the fiscal year 1933.

Mr. PITTENGER. The Secretary says in his letter that it was decided that the 15-day cruises for the fiscal year 1933 might well be discontinued.

Mr. TABER. That is true. That is the 15-day active duty which it has been customary to give to naval reservists; but in addition to that they have also used these ships for week-end cruises, and as a matter of fact I believe the week-end cruises are probably the greater portion of the training rather than the one block of 15 days.

Mr. PITTENGER. I do not want to admit that. I would rather think the opposite would be true, but I am willing to go along on an economy program. Not only the naval reservists but everybody else will have to do their part and make some sacrifice until the Budget is actually balanced. But I do not like the proposition of junking these vessels, of wrecking the Naval Reserve organization under a pretext of economy, unless the department in Washington is going to take its proportionate share of the cut that is ostensibly sponsored in the name of economy. I do not believe the facts will bear out their economy argument. That is the way I feel about the matter. I have many other facts and figures here, but I want to say that I hope the time will never come, whether in the interest of economy or otherwise, when we take steps to cripple the military and naval forces of this country. I am not arguing for a big Navy, but I want an adequate Navy, and I want to treat our boys right. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, while I do not approve all of the provisions of the general or omnibus bill which, it is understood, will be reported by the Economy Committee of the House, and will vote against some of the provisions, if the parliamentary situation affords an opportunity, I am in accord with the general objects and purposes of the proposed bill, and will support it.

When we consider the unhappy and deplorable condition which exists in our great country, and realize that agriculture and industry are paralyzed; millions of our fellow countrymen are anxious to work but can not find employment; prices of staple commodities are far below the cost of production; homes of our people are being sold under the sheriff's hammer for taxes and other debts; the Federal Treasury facing a gigantic deficit, and the grim, gaunt, spectre of hunger and want stalking in the land, it would seem high time for the Congress to give serious consideration to a reduction of Government expenditures,

It is claimed many causes have contributed to these almost unbearable conditions, some of which I will venture to name. One is the fact we have not yet recovered from the staggering costs and effects of the World War, which it is estimated cost the countries engaged in it the almost incomprehensible sum of $400,000,000,000.

Again, it is estimated that within the last few years the people of the United States have invested $15,000,000,000 in foreign bonds and securities, many of which are practically worthless, and the most of which have heavily depreciated; for a number of years prior to the fall of 1929 our people engaged in a veritable saturnalia of wild bond and stock speculation, and when this balloon was punctured financial disaster and ruin spread over the country; a tariff law has been enacted by the Congress which causes such a high tariff wall to exist as to seriously impair, and in many instances to destroy, our foreign trade; but aside from these considerations, it is undoubtedly true that the high cost, and in many instances unjustifiable expense of our Federal, State, and local Governments has largely contributed to the serious depression which we are suffering.

It is of interest, and indeed, should challenge our deepest consideration when we think of the almost unbelievable increases to which our Government expenses have amounted in the past few years, and the magnitude of increases of appropriations. According to reliable estimates, the National, State, and local expenditures in 1903 were $1,570,000,000, of which the local cost was $913,000,000. In 1913 the total had grown to $2,919,000,000; in 1923 the grand total had reached $9,920,000,000, and of this there was but $3,885,000,000 which represented national expenditures. In 1929 national costs reached $3,932,000,000, while State had mounted to $1,990,000,000 and local to $7,126,000,000, and thus the grand total had advanced from $2,919,000,000 in 1913 to $13,048,000,000 in 1929. In the last two fiscal years the Congress appropriated approximately $10,000,000,000.

It would seem safe to estimate that in the span of a comparatively brief period the expenses of government in the United States, including National, State, and local, has advanced approximately 400 per cent.

Mr. YON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. YON. What percentage of the expenditures for governmental affairs is outside of the National Government—that is, State, county, and local?

Mr. WRIGHT. I just stated that State costs had mounted to $1,990,000,000 and local costs to $7,126,000,000.

Mr. YON. So the biggest part of our taxation is local.

Mr. WRIGHT. Oh, yes. As an illustration of how Federal appropriations have increased, I call attention to the fact that in 1922 the sum of $17,911,419 was appropriated for the Department of Commerce, and in 1931 this appropriation had gradually increased until it reached the sum of $61,300,936.

While it may be a delicate matter to discuss, appropriations for the Executive Office, the White House, in 1915 was the sum of $263,040, and in 1932 this appropriation had steadily increased until it reached $457,380. In 1915 the President had only one secretary, and now we find three are employed at $10,000 each. Only in the last few weeks we are told 11 or 12 new automobiles have been purchased for the use of the White House.

In 1929 there was appropriated for salaries and expenses of the Federal Farm Board $1,500,000 and for the fiscal year 1932, $1,900,000, and for the fiscal year 1933 there was an estimate of the Bureau of the Budget of $1,880,000, but this estimate was reduced by the House to $1,000,000. In 1922 there was appropriated for the Veterans' Administration $389,566,732, and in 1932, $1,118,810,707, which included $200,000,000 for the payment of loans on the adjusted-compensation certificates. There are now 1,400,000 veterans and their dependents who receive from the Public Treasury each month the aggregate amount of $60,500,000, which is more than $2,000,000 each day. I do not mean by this illustration I would deny our worthy veterans and their dependents one dollar to which they are entitled but simply illustrating the increase in appropriations.

Many more illustrations showing tremendous increases in practically all agencies and departments could be furnished.

These enormous expenses can only be met by the levy of taxes and the incurring of debts by our National, State, and local governments. To meet these heavy tributes requires from 14 to 15 per cent of our national income.

We have, of course, no control over the State and local expenditures and taxes, but we can apply the pruning shears to the Federal expenditures and thus set the example to the State and local governments, and, my friends, the hour has struck for this to be done. It is no easy task. When we propose a reduction in the appropriation for some department, as we have in all of the appropriation bills this session, we are usually met by the protest of the Cabinet member presiding over such department. When we propose to curtail or eliminate what would seem to be some nonessential activity, we are told this should not be done. When we suggest a reduction of the salaries of Government employees, we are deluged with loud and vigorous protests; and among other arguments we are told we should not set the precedent of reducing salaries of Government employees, as business and industry will follow the example; but my reply is that business and industry have already reduced salaries.

Let me say here and now the only way to reduce expenses is to reduce. We should cut expenditures by eliminating many activities which are nonessential, and then materially reduce those which are essential. Abolish bureaus and departments and consolidate others. Materially reduce the compensation of Government employees from the highest down, including Senators and Congressmen, and also reduce the number of employees.

An already overtaxed people are faint and tired of hearing of additional sources of taxation being found to further burden their now almost unbearable load, and are crying for relief. We can give this relief, let us do it.

We have had great agitation during the past weeks about "balancing the Budget." There are more ways to accomplish this besides levying further onerous taxes on our distressed people, and one way is to reduce expenditures. Be it said to the credit of this House that each appropriation bill which has been reported this session has carried substantial and radical reductions under the Budget estimates. This is, indeed, a paradoxical period through which we are passing. Our granaries and warehouses are overflowing with surplus grain and cotton, and yet a large percentage of our population is hungry and half clad. These conditions must not continue to exist. Confidence must be restored and business, agriculture, and industry once more placed on a profitable basis and our great country with its boundless resources made "to blossom as the rose." For one, I still believe the courage, wisdom, and patriotism of our people and their chosen representatives will bring to pass these happy results. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GARBER].

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, it is reported that the Economy Committee will recommend a suspension for a period of one year of Federal vocational assistance to the States for vocational education. Of course, such a proposal is made in the name of economy to balance the Budget, but it would be the most expensive economy this Government has indulged in since the profiteering days of the World War.

The proposal is accompanied by no explanation, statement of facts, or justification. We can not believe that it was deliberately made with due appreciation of the value of the work proposed to be suspended.

It would disrupt and disorganize the public-school system throughout the country. Such suspension would not only be false economy but bad faith with the several States.

The Federal Government proposed the present vocational education system. The States did not propose it. The Federal Government drew up the articles of agreement and requested the States to accept them. Within six months after the proposal was made 48 States accepted the conditions and have ever since carried on the work in the fulfillment of the partnership agreement.

The work has progressed over a period of 15 years. The system has developed into a permanent, constructive policy of vocational education in the most important fields of human labor, in agriculture, in trades and industries, in home economics, in rehabilitation. It therefore supplies an educational need unsupplied by any other agency.

If I were to select two of the great Presidents of this country during recent years, I unhesitatingly would select Theodore Roosevelt on the one hand and Woodrow Wilson on the other. These two great Presidents are responsible for this system of education as a part of the common-school system of this country. Theodore Roosevelt pioneered the thought and Woodrow Wilson pioneered the legislation essential to the adoption and application of the system throughout the country.

President Wilson saw this need when he appointed his Commission on National Aid in Vocational Education in 1914. After thorough investigation and congressional hearings, the commission reported the imperative need for national aid to the several States for vocational education.

In its findings of fact the commission stated that—

> Of the 23,000,000 men and women engaged in agriculture and manufacturing in this country, only 1 per cent were technically and skillfully trained to do the things that they were attempting to do.

Of the 12,500,000 persons engaged in agriculture in 1910, the commission found that less than 1 per cent had any scientific preparation for farming, and that the same was true of the 14,250,000 persons engaged in manufacturing and mechanical pursuits. Of the 7,000,000 young people between the ages of 14 and 18, but approximately 1,000,000 were enrolled in high schools and a very small percentage of these were pursuing studies of a technical character.

During the school year 1929–30 there were enrolled in the high schools 4,399,422, a commendable increase over that of 1910.

The recommendations of the commission were embodied in the Smith-Hughes Act, approved by President Wilson on February 23, 1917. This act was supplemented by the vocational rehabilitation act of 1920, as amended and extended in 1924 and 1930.

The act of 1924 extended the benefits of the national act to Hawaii. The George-Reed Act of 1929 provided for further development of vocational education. The act of 1929 provided rehabilitation for the District of Columbia. The act of 1931 extended the benefits of the national act to Porto Rico.

Thus we see that during this period of 15 years Congress has in six separate acts expressly approved the policy of Federal assistance for vocational education in the several States. The system has been adopted and extended by every State. It is the result of gradual improvement and development over a period of sufficient length, with repeated congressional approval, to classify it as a permanent policy of the Government.

Is all the organization work of these years, the development and building of an enlightened public opinion, the preparation and education of competent teachers, the dissemination of information to the children of the country, and the moneys expended and the efforts put forth, to be brushed aside by an ill-advised, ill-considered recommendation of the Economy Committee simply because it is made in the name of economy to balance the Budget?

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARBER. I gladly yield to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Was not this movement started largely for the purpose of encouraging the States along such lines of education, and was it not the intention of the National Government then to withdraw its aid? And does not the gentleman from Oklahoma think it would be better for the National Government gradually to withdraw not only from this but from many other such partnerships, partnerships into which it has been induced to enter? So far as education is concerned, instead of having the Federal Government meddle with it in such ways, would it not be better to leave it to the States and to the people themselves?

Mr. GARBER. There is much merit in the suggestion of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa if adopted at a point of development wherein the States would carry on this great work, but we have not reached that point at this time. The findings of the commission will reveal the magnitude of the work involved in this system.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. May it not become of such magnitude that after a while we will have the National Government dictating to the States and to the people in matters of education instead of permitting the people to develop their own educational systems and maintain their own individual entities?

Mr. GARBER. I recognize the merit of the gentleman's position, but in this act let me assure the gentleman from Iowa it is one of the requirements that Federal assistance can only be granted to a public school under the supervision and control of a State.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. GARBER. I appreciate the courtesy of the distinguished gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARBER. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. HARDY. I have told my friends out in Colorado that of all the money spent for education above the grades, where properly handled, I think the Federal vocational work is the best and most profitable of any work in the school system.

Mr. GARBER. I am very glad to have the gentleman's commendation.

Mr. HARDY. I think there are a lot of students taking Latin and Greek and journalism and other things who would better be studying vocational education.

Mr. GARBER. The gentleman has tersely voiced the central thought of the system.

Mr. HARDY. I have four children that I spent a good deal of money to educate, and I am therefore speaking from experience after making somewhat of an investment in education; and with respect to the proposition of leaving this out for one year, I am told that in some of the States, including Colorado, if this is deferred for one year, it will eliminate the work entirely in that State because under the enabling act they can not use their money unless the Federal money goes with it.

Mr. GARBER. And that is true with reference to all the States. Suspension would leave the States helpless. It would prohibit the use of their own funds collected on a 50–50 basis.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARBER. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. ARENTZ. I think it is very important also to recognize the fact that in vocational education the child appreciates the fact that he has a project before him, because in the schools of the rural districts each child has a certain task at hand and he completes that task and has something to show for it, and in this way, under vocational education, he is taught to complete his work in a logical way.

Mr. GARBER. That is a very important observation. The system develops the qualifications of the student by actual service and work in his chosen vocation. The students are taught to exercise their own judgment, to exercise their own management, and the merit of the system is that it qualifies by actual work the boys and girls for their chosen occupations.

See the breadth and the scope of this work—agriculture, trades and industries, home economics, economy and commerce, embodying and embracing all the fields of activity in which the individual works with his hands. It is not sectional; it is not narrow or provincial. It is as broad as the policy of the Government itself and includes every section of the country.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARBER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FOSS. If this appropriation is denied to the States, how is it going to affect a great many of our eastern towns and cities that have already made their appropriations, having in mind the fact that they were going to receive this aid? I am receiving letters from superintendents of schools in my district, saying they will have to suspend this work entirely because they have made their appropriations and will not have the money to carry on the work without this aid.

Mr. GARBER. The gentleman is correct. The funds of the States were collected on the condition that they would be used to match the funds of the Federal Government.

Mr. FOSS. If the Government is going to suspend this appropriation, it should only be done after a year's notice, so that the different States may regulate their affairs accordingly.

Mr. GARBER. The suspension of this appropriation would discontinue the courses of the students in their several lines of occupation. It would disrupt organizations that have been effected. Relying upon the representations of the Federal Government, what did the States do? Each State was induced to levy taxes, effect organizations, train teachers, purchase equipment, and enroll students.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARBER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DALLINGER. Has not this House already passed the independent offices appropriation bill, making an appropriation for this work?

Mr. GARBER. That is true.

Mr. DALLINGER. And what does the Economy Committee propose to do?

Mr. GARBER. That bill is still pending in another body, and the Economy Committee proposes to cut it out.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. How much is involved in this appropriation?

Mr. GARBER. The Government advances to the several States $8,800,000 annually.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. GARBER. I yield.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. I have always been a strong believer, especially during the last two or three years, in the sentiment that one of the best ways to relieve unemployment is to encourage people to go back to the farms. Does the gentleman think that the training these young boys and girls receive will have a tendency to keep them on the farm rather than have them leave the farm?

Mr. GARBER. I am very glad, indeed, that the gentleman has called the committee's attention to that phase of this work. It is an important phase. How are you going to keep the boys and girls of this country on the farm unless you make it attractive for them to stay there and make it profitable? If you do not, what will be the result? They will drift into the cities, crowded with the unemployed, and but intensify the menacing problems of unemployment there.

According to a Department of Agriculture calculation, the average price of all farm products in the United States on January 15, 1932, was only 63 per cent of the average over the last five pre-war years, while a similar calculation of the prices of goods which farmers are accustomed to buy was 121 per cent. On this basis the farmers as a group are able to make only 51 per cent of the purchases which they were accustomed to make in the pre-war years.

This lack of purchasing power of the farmers throughout the country is the main contributing cause to our unemployment. It is more than that; it is the cause of the inability of the farmers to pay their taxes, interest, and coming-due obligations resulting in the foreclosure of mortgages by the thousands throughout the agricultural States.

This is but a short, condensed statement of actual conditions, but it visualizes a tragedy taking place in every farm community. It shows the imperative necessity of rehabilitating agriculture in the first instance before substantial recovery can be reasonably expected. The farm mortgages of the country total in excess of $9,000,000,000, not including personal obligations and taxes.

Unless every effort is put forth to stimulate, encourage, and assist the farmers on the farms and enable them to pay their existing indebtedness with a purchasing power as great as that which they borrowed, they will lapse into a state of tenantry and peasantry from which there will be no escape.

A substantial hope for the rehabilitation of this industry lies in the 4-H clubs and in the young men and young women coming on with modern vocational qualifications and equipment to meet the modern farm problems of to-day.

Mr. MANLOVE. Is it not a fact that a great many boys not temperamentally fitted to take up professions or acquire educational qualifications have been educated in mechanics, whereby they become exceedingly useful citizens in the mechanical lines?

Mr. GARBER. The gentleman from Missouri is entirely correct. He probably was not in the Chamber at the time I made the statement in regard to the broad scope of the system. It includes agriculture, trade, commerce, home economics, and rehabilitation. Time will not permit me to speak of all the different fields of vocational education, but, as the gentleman from Missouri has said, the same consideration is given to the boys and girls in the country as in the cities, teaching them by actual contact to work with their hands in their chosen occupations.

Mr. MANLOVE. I want to point to what the gentleman said a few moments ago, which it would be well to consider further, and that is the question of relationship of the different communities of our Government—the different school districts in which these men have been employed to teach pupils, relying on what they considered a contract with the United States. They have contracted with these men for the coming season, and these districts will not be able to carry out the contract, because the United States Government has not kept its quasi contract with them.

Mr. GARBER. The gentleman's suggestion raises the question of good faith on the part of the Government if Federal assistance is suspended.

Mr. FRENCH. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. GARBER. Suspension would not only nullify the construction work that has been done, but it would be bad faith on the part of the Government. It would compel the States to break their contracts and abandon their schools.

Mr. MANLOVE. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. GARBER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri, who has always aggressively supported vocational education.

Mr. MANLOVE. My district has already contracted with some expert instructor in a vocational way to carry on the coming year. They did that relying upon the agreement with the Government as laid out in previous appropriations, and without any intimation that this appropriation would not be carried for the next year.

Mr. GARBER. From 1917 to 1931 the Government has passed six acts enlarging the system, extending the system, acts which were the deliberate expression of approval of the system.

No later than 1931 an act was passed extending this system to Porto Rico. In 1929 the Reed Act was passed extending it and enlarging it in this country.

The benefits of the acts have been distributed in all the fields of activity in every State. Back of your naval appropriations, back of your battleships, back of your military line, is a qualified producing citizenship, our first line of defense. [Applause.]

I regret that my limited time will not permit me to yield for further interruptions.

In the field of practical economy, the committee should have, and I am sure will have, our undivided support. It is the desire of every Member to economize, cut down expenses, cut out useless agencies, retrench, reform, and balance the Budget. But when it comes to cutting out one of the most valuable features of our common educational system, when it comes to striking down our first line of defense, this committee will demand substantial reasons in justification for such action.

We venture the assertion that in all the fields of its far-flung activities, the Government receives a more valuable return on its investment in vocational education than in any other.

A brief consideration of the requirements for Federal aid will show the commendable purposes and object of the Government to equip boys, girls, men, and women for the more effective operation of their respective occupations. The main conditions precedent for Federal assistance are:

First. That any school receiving Federal aid shall be below college grade.

Second. That such schools shall be under public supervision and control.

Third. That the enrollment in federally aided classes shall be limited to persons 14 years of age and over.

Fourth. That each dollar of Federal money expended under State plans shall be matched by a dollar of State or local money.

Fifth. That Federal funds shall be used only for the reimbursement of part of the salaries of teachers and supervisors.

At the time of the passage of this legislation every agency of our educational system—grammar school, high school, college, and university—was engaged particularly in providing training of academic character adapted to what were conceived to be the requirements of a liberal arts or professional education, yet only 8 per cent of our population ever got into these liberal arts and professional employments. In other words, the great mass of our population, representing the 92 per cent of our boys and girls, had no opportunity to get the type of training they needed, training directed toward their peculiar needs in the rôle they must of necessity occupy in the economic and industrial life of the Nation.

It is this 92 per cent of our workers who produce our food, our clothing, and our shelter. It is they who produce not only the books but also all other instruments and materials upon which the 8 per cent are dependent in acquiring their education and training. They build our schools, our factories, our public buildings, our private residences, and our magnificent structures of commerce and finance.

They dig the coal, chop the wood, drill the oil, and produce the electricity for our light, heat, and power. It is they who clear our forests, build our railroads, span our rivers, and tunnel our mountains. They have constructed the vast ocean liners, laid the ocean cables, built our roads, our automobiles, our airplanes, and our radios.

It is from this group which contributes daily to our peace, our security, and our comforts that to-day the larger part of the great army of unemployed has been recruited. They are more quickly responsive to the ever-recurrent changes of our industrial life and progress and, lacking the flexibility of readjustment to these rapidly changing methods and processes, find themselves constantly confronted with the hazard of unemployment.

As a direct result of the participation of the Federal Government in the program of vocational education, three types of vocational schools have been established as integral parts of our public-school system:

First. The vocational day school for boys and girls who have chosen an occupation and desire training for it.

Second. The part-time school for persons who are employed but who can devote part of the day to receiving systematic instruction and training in the line of their employment.

Third. The evening school for workers who desire to devote some time outside their regular employment hours to improving their efficiency in the occupations in which they are engaged.

In 1930, as a result of the stimulus given this endeavor by the Federal Government, more than a million persons, of both sexes, young and old, were enrolled in these schools, learning to farm better, to make better homes, or to be more efficient at some particular job in industry.

The objective of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, the Federal agency charged with the promotion of this vital aspect of our educational program, has been in part to assure to every boy and girl, every adult worker, and every disabled person in America an opportunity to acquire or to improve his or her vocational efficiency in some selected field of human endeavor, upon the theory that educating for work is as truly the resoonsibility of our free public-school system as is educating for college, for the professions, for citizenship, or for leisure. It is undeniable that our future prosperity is inseparably associated with training for industrial or vocational efficiency.

Under the various acts the Government expends annually approximately $8,800,000 to the several States and Territories for vocational education and $1,100,000 for vocational rehabilitation. Wherever a dollar of Federal money is spent, at least a dollar of State or local money is expended for the same purpose. In some cases States and local communities are spending as high as $10 of State and local money for every dollar of Federal money used for vocational education.

The total amount expended by Federal, State, and local subdivisions is approximately $34,000,000 annually. In 1931, of the amount paid to the States by the Government, approximately $351,000 was expended for training teachers for agriculture, $358,000 for training teachers of trade and industry, and $353,000 for training teachers of home economics.

In 1931, the total enrollment in vocational schools was 1,126,385. In the field of agriculture for the year 1931 there were 7,900 agricultural schools receiving Federal aid. In these schools were enrolled over 237,000 persons. In support of such schools, there was expended a total of $9,978,000 of which $4,432,000 was from local funds—$2,085,000 from State funds, $3,461,000 from Federal funds.

The value of the earnings from vocational projects in agriculture during 1931 exceed $6,024,000.

This vocational education and training is extended to the boys and girls who are unable to take a college course. It opens the door of opportunity to those to secure such training and education in their chosen occupations. It develops a desire and ambition to go on with school work and secure a college education so necessary nowadays.

The teachers in agriculture must have had actual experience in farming. The training and education of the students likewise include the actual work on farm projects. It develops the power to exercise the judgment essential to good farm management. It develops a much-needed leadership in farm economics and an intelligent scientific modern equipment in the individual to meet the preplexing problems of the farm. At no other time in the history of the development of this country has there been such an imperative need for such qualifications in agriculture.

The following table shows the extent of the assistance rendered by the Government, and the result of Federal and State cooperation in the State of Oklahoma:

OKLAHOMA

Number of vocational agricultural departments—1931–32	118
Number of boys enrolled in departments of vocational agriculture—1930–31	3,404
Number of farmers enrolled in departments of vocational agriculture	2,733
Total amount spent for vocational agriculture	$226,822
Amount of Federal funds spent	$102,782
Amount of local funds spent	$106,986

Amount of labor income derived from the practical work of the boys and the farmers under the supervision of agricultural teachers for 1929–30—last year for which records available—$370,141, as against an expenditure of total State and local funds of $226,822.

The improved practices in farming operations dealt with such problems as—

Conservation of soil and soil improvement, terracing 20,000 acres of land; use of legumes, pure seed, and livestock; improvement of homes; keeping farm records; better production practices.

Work of the agricultural teachers includes among other things:

Development of leadership through the future farmer organization; community improvement contests; working with a community council of farmers.

In 1931–32 Federal funds allotted to Oklahoma in the field of vocational education in home economics totaled $14,420.76. Nine thousand one hundred and eighty-five adult women were enrolled in the home-making classes, 453 girls in all-day schools, and 112 senior home-economics students taking teacher training.

In the adult classes of home makers teachers are giving specific help to members of the class in meeting the emergency problems in the homes that have arisen because of the depression. This includes health, the selection of the best type of food for the least money, making over clothing, getting the best service of it through proper care and repair, keeping up the family morale, preventing a breakdown in the home, budgeting a limited income, providing adequate food for the family when little or no money is available by gardening, raising poultry, canning and preserving food to tide over the winter months.

In the all-day school program the girls are taught how they can help in the homes to share the responsibilities of their parents. They are taught how to market foods, prepare them, and select the best foods for the money; how to make their own clothes, care for and repair them; how to help their mothers in the care of younger brothers and sisters.

In Oklahoma, which has made appropriations for vocational education under the Federal-aid program for the past 15 years, the withdrawal of Federal funds for one year, according to information furnished by Hon. John Vaughan, State superintendent, would mean:

In vocational agriculture:

First. Depriving 5,000 adult farmers of receiving organized instruction in problems which confront them locally, including living at home readjustment.

Second. Depriving 4,000 farm boys of continuing their training in vocational agriculture, through whose efforts 68,000 acres of home farms were terraced.

Third. Unemployment to 130 specially trained teachers of agriculture.

Fourth. Destruction of 15 years of effort in developing an efficient training program for future farmers.

Fifth. Depriving 130 local communities in the State of funds necessary to provide a systematic and efficient training program.

In vocational trades and industries:

First. Destruction of educational opportunity for 4,906 boys and girls who are now going to school half time and working half time—they would be out of school entirely.

Second. Destruction of educational opportunity for 3,107 men in training supplemental to their daily employment.

Third. Destruction of educational opportunity for 200 boys who are now taking trade-preparatory training.

Fourth. Depriving 22 industrial centers of the State of funds necessary to carry on a training program of trade and industrial education.

Fifth. Destruction of 15 years of earnest effort in building an efficient program of industrial training for those engaged in industry.

In vocational home economics:

First. Depriving more than 30,000 home makers of receiving vital instruction in problems relating to the home.

Second. Handicapping the follow-up of the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection in placing its findings and recommendations in every home in the Nation.

Third. Removal of one of the strongest forces for building up the home, which strikes at the foundation of society.

Should vocational education be suspended for one year, as outlined by the Committee on Economy, it would make impossible the reviving of vocational education in Oklahoma for many years to come—and what is true of Oklahoma is equally true of the other States which have recognized and accepted in good faith the advantages offered in the Federal vocational-education program.

The system of vocational education in its economic fairness includes vocational education for the trades and industries. Its object is similar to that in agriculture—to provide opportunities for persons 14 years of age or over to secure practical training for profitable employment in their chosen industrial occupations.

The range of occupations served through this program is constantly increasing. It is indeed surprising to learn of the avidity with which the opportunities extended are seized. During the year 1929, organized courses in trades and industries included 225 different occupations. During 1931, approximately 592,000 persons were enrolled in trade and industrial schools and classes for which Federal funds were used. Of this number, more than 511,000 were persons who had left the regular schools and were actually employed in industry. Of this number, 187,000 were girls.

The system includes vocational education in home economics, in rehabilitation and commerce, in all of which fields of activity it has rendered most valuable service, supplying an actual educational need to qualify those who are unable to secure the advantages of such education in the higher institutions of our country.

The proposal to suspend Federal aid in vocational education for a period of one year, if adopted, might save the Government approximately $8,000,000, but it would dislocate and disorganize and destroy the continuity of the courses being taken by more than a million students. It would suspend the creation and development of permanent values in qualifications in earning power for occupations. It would not only suspend the creation and development of these intangible values but in many cases dislocate and destroy them.

When the Government requested the several States to cooperate with it in the maintenance of this system and thereafter enlarged it by supplemental acts of legislation, it undoubtedly pledged itself to a continued assistance and policy. It induced the several States and local subdivisions to invest the tax moneys in the purchase of necessary equipment and facilities and in the preparation of teachers to carry on the work. And now to propose a suspension for a period of one year, in the most important work in which the Government and States have cooperatively engaged, would not only violate the partnership agreement carried out so faithfully but dissolve the organizations affected and nullify much of the constructive work accomplished.

Nowhere, perhaps, has the importance of the system been more forcibly stated than by President Hoover while Secretary of Commerce:

My attention has been called to comments in the press on the increasing cost of education and more particularly of vocational education in our public schools. Expenditures in States last year under the Federal vocational education act amounted to less than $15,000,000, or approximately 15 cents per capita. Of this amount States and local communities contributed in round numbers $11,000,000 and the Federal Government $4,000,000. * * * This cost can not be regarded as constituting a serious financial burden upon the community. * * * Expenditure on account of such education is in the nature of an investment which will yield large dividends from year to year through the progressive increase of labor, skill, and industrial efficiency. * * * In some of our State universities the cost of providing education for the professions runs well into the thousands of dollars per graduate. Vocational training for the commoner wage-earning pursuits and skilled trades is equally as essential as is training for the professions. The humblest worker, equally with the youth who proposes to enter the professions, has a right to the sort of training he needs for the occupation by which he proposes to earn his livelihood and support his family and through which he will render his service to the community in getting the community's work done. * * *

We in this country believe that education pays for itself and is worth while and if this is true of any sort of education, it is certainly true of vocational education—that it pays for itself. * * *

Men of affairs the country over are being impressed with the fact that the cost of training labor on the job is one of the great industrial costs, but they know that the cost of inefficiency and lack of training is very much greater, and that labor must be trained whatever the cost. If they or the community do not provide such training, they can not compete with the foreign producer whose labor is vocationally trained at public expense, nor can we, as a nation, adequately supply our own needs for the product of labor if we neglect to provide for the training of labor.

The cost of providing this training is just as properly a charge upon the public revenue as any other form of education. * * * The cost of such training certainly should not be put upon the individual worker unless we are prepared to abandon our traditional policy of providing free education and equality of opportunity for our youth. We can not in fairness continue to provide specialized education free to the few who propose to enter the professions, while denying education to the many for commoner vocations.

A community must pay either for the cost of training labor or for the much greater cost of inefficiency of labor, and inefficiency of labor means inevitably general industrial and commercial inefficiency. * * *

No American employer can hold his markets and continue to employ labor if his labor is relatively unskilled or if its costs for training greatly exceed those of his foreign competitors.

* * * * * * *

Can we expect to maintain our commercial standing in the world's markets if we neglect to train our labor * * *?

Having taken the lead in vocational education, we certainly shall not now permit ourselves to slip back because of a notion of false economy. I have been thinking particularly of the service rendered by vocational education in the broad fields of industry and commerce, but the social and economic value of such education is, of course, equally great in other fields. There is, in fact, no better economy than the economy of adequate training for the pursuits of agriculture, commerce, industry, and the home. Our youth must enter into these pursuits, and it is in the public interest that they be well trained for them.

To provide such training is clearly a public responsibility. Education in general, including vocational education, for the youth is democracy's most important business. * * *

I can not believe that it will be the deliberate judgment of the Members of the House in the name of economy to destroy the vocational education system of the country to save $8,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY].

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks with a table and excerpts in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, on this occasion I believe I am talking to a sympathetic subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. The last time I addressed a subcommittee of this committee during this session I was not addressing a sympathetic subcommittee, but one which opposed my ideas.

I am happy to say that although I waged a 1-man battle in that case, I won the battle, because the Committee on Appropriations and this House have consented to include the Senate language with respect to the limitation upon the cost of Government-purchased automobiles.

I maintained here in several speeches that it is absolutely impossible to buy the lowest-priced car, a Ford or a Chevrolet, in some Rocky Mountain regions and in some localities for $750, the freight being included in the cost, but I also maintained that on some kinds of roads and in some kinds of country it was economy to buy a car costing in the neighborhood of $900.

I also protested against language restricting the use of autos by the President and by Cabinet members.

The Senate listened to those arguments and wrote my conclusions into the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was accepted by the House Appropriations Committee and passed yesterday by the House.

The country is demanding economy. Taxes are $14,000,000,000 per year. Only two-sevenths of that amount are Federal expenditures, but the limelight is upon Congress, and the Congress must cut, hit or miss, and make up for its mistakes later on. Of the $4,000,000,000 Federal expenses, $3,000,000,000 are for war and insurance against war in Army and Navy appropriations.

Our problem is tremendous. We are all for economy, and the United States Naval Reserves Association is also for economy and is willing to take a cut and a big cut, but it wishes the cut applied fairly and intelligently.

The Navy Department very suddenly decided recently to abolish reservist training on the Great Lakes, and decided to cut out the summer cruises and to junk and sell five training ships and two Eagle boats.

One of those ships admittedly is obsolete and in bad condition, but one only. The others have been modernized, and two of them have cost $150,000 for improvements within the last year.

The Navy Department came to the Committee on Appropriations after the hearings had all been closed and after the hearings were printed. It is very hard to get an intelligent idea of just what is intended, and the debate here this afternoon by the two gentlemen from Minnesota, Mr. MAAS and Mr. PITTENGER, Mr. WHITE, of Ohio, and myself, in colloquy with members of the subcommittee, demonstrates that.

This is what the Navy Department intends to do. Notwithstanding their sad experience in bringing reservists from the Great Lakes region to salt water before 1929 and abolishing such an experiment, they now seek to abolish fresh-water training and aim to bring the reservists of that region to salt water.

The whole question of national defense is involved. Although the United States depends for its existence largely on water defense, it has less of Naval Reserves than three or four of the great powers. Even with Great Lakes training we provide for training only 40,000 men a year and in the Great War we called 350,000 naval reservists to the colors.

On the Great Lakes last year 2,960 men were trained. The Navy Department maintains that training on the Great Lakes is not as good as on salt water, but the reservists, who are intelligent men, maintain just the opposite.

Admiral Sims says that it is the best training in the world, and other admirals, if their tongues could be loosened, would testify to the same fact.

Why? Because in navigating the Great Lakes one is really navigating. They are not on the ocean where they may see a ship once a day or once in two or three hours or no ship at all. On the Great Lakes and connecting rivers one navigates through channels which are often only 300 feet wide and must pass some of the largest ships in the world, freighters 625 feet long, with tremendous suction, at a distance of 50 feet or so, and one has to navigate very skillfully or the suction or swift currents bring the boats into collision.

If training on the Great Lakes is abolished and the men are taken to salt water and the claimed saving is $36,000, that is an infinitesimal sum. As a matter of fact, the naval reservists maintain there is a large financial loss in bringing the men to salt water.

I have some tables and arguments here to prove that, and I have received permission to put them in the RECORD.

It costs $240,000 per year to maintain these Great Lakes ships. I have here a picture of one of them—the Dubuque. It is a very satisfactory ship and it is working very well since it has been reconditioned and refitted, and is prepared to go on with its good work for some years to come.

It costs $240,000 to run these ships around the Great Lakes and to have the summer cruises, and it will cost more to abolish these ships and then bring the men to the Atlantic coast.

But also the United States Government breaks faith with the Great Lakes States and cities when it does this. The Navy said to the Naval Reserve Forces, "You have great political pull. Get your States to make appropriations for the national defense," and national defense is a Federal job. My State gave $600,000 to these naval reservists. My city, Detroit, gave a million dollars in property to the naval armory.

The State of Illinois gave $800,000, and other Great Lakes States gave in proportion. But the Federal Government, after having gotten that investment of money, says, "We are pulling out."

That is not fair. We do not want those ships junked. One officer in the Navy Department says he intends to sell them as old iron. In any event, we want to make this record to-day in the House and aim at saving these ships in the House or Senate.

I have had a tender from the Navy Department with regard to the Dubuque. If this legislation goes through Congress, instead of junking the Dubuque the Navy will offer it to the State of Michigan, if the State of Michigan will agree to use the ship for training naval reservists. That is the offer in effect, and it is not so good, for the State is very hard up.

Now, the House must act rapidly, and yet we should act as intelligently as we can when we do act rapidly. We hope there comes out of this discussion to-day and the next few days an amendment which will result in as little damage as possible to this service. And we want to save the Dubuque.

This economy item, which does so much damage, is infinitesimal. It is only three-twentieths of 1 per cent of the total Navy appropriations. I am not going to reflect on the high command of the Navy or the War Department, but it is obvious when pressure is placed upon the Navy Department to economize, they are likely to economize on those services which have the most political influence, and in this case those are the reserves: The reserves in the Army, the citizens' military training camps, and the Officers' Reserve Training Corps, and the reserves in the Navy, the United States Naval Reserve Officers' Association. Then there is a better chance of restoring the cuts. I do not know whether it was done with malice aforethought or not, when this action was sprung so suddenly, and without printed hearings, but what we are asking the Members to do is to give consideration to all the facts before taking final action. [Applause.]

I include as my own remarks a memo which was given me by a constituent and fellow Detroiter, Commander M. B. Wortley, president of the United States Naval Reserves Association.

Business men subscribe fully to the establishment of all logical measures for the economical operation of governmental departments. The precarious financial situation now confronting our country is fully appreciated.

The policy of our country has always been to maintain a small standing Army and Navy, and in an emergency to rely principally upon the citizen components to augment the regular services. During the World War the reserve strength of the Navy was developed to approximately 25,000 officers and 350,000 men. All present ranking officers are veterans of the World War.

They give unsparingly of their time and energy in preparing themselves to serve the country, and believe it to be false economy and entirely unjustifiable to remove the small opportunity now afforded for preparation in the way of professional training.

Naval Reserve Budget estimates for 1933, as submitted, and which contain provisions for summer training, were 17 per cent less than the previous year, or an approximate reduction of $840,000. It is now proposed that a further cut of $516,000 be imposed, although it is interesting to note that the total Navy appropriation was only 4.6 per cent less than the previous year. By the Navy Department's own estimate the saving involved by discontinuing cruises amounts to $516,000 (only three-twentieths of 1 per cent of the total Navy appropriation) but at the same time reduces the Reserve appropriation by almost 30 per cent.

The basic law which created the Naval Reserve as a Federal force (Naval Reserve act of 1925) provides that its officers and men may also be members of the naval militias of the various States. It also specifically provides for 15-day periods of training duty annually. The Congress has appropriated funds in the Navy appropriation bill for that purpose each year heretofore.

The various States, in return for their right to utilize the Naval Reserve as a part of their militia in an emergency, and acting upon the assumption that the Federal Government's share of the cost of maintenance was a permanent and continuous arrangement, have not only invested large sums in the erection of armories, and so forth, but also have appropriated thousands of dollars each year for the maintenance of these armories. For example, the following approximate amounts have been spent by the States indicated during the past two years exclusive of land values running into millions of dollars and not including municipal and public subscriptions, namely, New York, $500,000; Illinois, $800,000; Michigan, $600,000; Ohio, $200,000. Many States have definite armory-building programs laid out, which include Naval Reserve armories and which very obviously will not be executed if governmental support is withdrawn.

Now, prior to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, and without regard for the States' rights and welfare in the matter, and without warning, the Navy Department has ordered the elimination of training afloat, which is vitally essential for the citizen sailors' training duty as contemplated by law, and which is practically the only experience aboard ship they obtain.

In regard to the order for the decommissioning of the Great Lakes training ships U. S. S. Wilmette, U. S. S. Wilmington, U. S. S. Dubuque, U. S. S. Paducah, and U. S. S. Hawk, it is very peculiar that, after recognizing for 35 years that training ships on the Great Lakes were a valuable asset to the training of citizen sailors, it should suddenly be decided that their usefulness was over.

These ships are looked to by the marine interests of the Great Lakes, which support a commerce greater than that of the Pacific coast and twice that of the Gulf of Mexico, as a recognized establishment of strategic value. Furthermore, these ships are relied upon by the States in the event of any local emergency. They have been utilized in the past to take off refugees and furnish food and medical supplies in the case of forest fires; they have gone into ports after cyclones and established patrols in cities and areas otherwise not accessible, furnished fresh water, hospital supplies, and so forth. It is practically the only contact that the Middle West, a district of 13 States, has with the Naval Service.

The Navy Department has estimated that the decommissioning of the vessels on the Great Lakes will save approximately $36,000 a year, and that the training of reservists aboard regular Navy ships would bring an increase in efficiency.

We feel that the question of relative results obtained by training on Great Lakes ships and on regular Navy ships is one which can not be adjudged hastily by casual observation. Ships on the Great Lakes are officered and manned entirely by reservists, who are of necessity on their own initiative; and we feel that they obtain more practical training through the actual responsibility of operation of these ships than they would or do by simply standing by as observers of some one else. These ships have navigated the Great Lakes and rivers and channels connecting them and have cruised thousands of miles in formation and maneuvers without serious accident of any kind. Last year 220 officers and 2,640 men cruised on these ships for a total of 6,500 miles per ship. The suggestion that they be taken over by the States may be answered by bringing out the fact that the States are facing an even more serious financial problem than the Federal Government, and it is simply preposterous to think that the various States could at this time agree to take over and operate these ships.

The resultant saving by cruising Middle West reservists on the coast is subject to question when due consideration is given to the expense of transportation involved and the maintenance of coastal ships.

For example, attention is invited to the travel cost of only 13 reduced-strength divisions out of a total of 53 divisions in the district of Philadelphia for coastal training in the year 1929. It is significant to note that owing to the prohibitive travel costs these trips were abandoned after 1929 and training on the Great Lakes substituted. See statement of actual travel costs attached hereto.

It is estimated that the cost of maintaining the five Great Lakes vessels concerned is approximately $240,000 annually. This figure is based on past costs. The expense of transporting the Middle West divisions to the coast for cruising is conservatively estimated at around $230,000, without any consideration being given to the additional expense of ship operation on the coast or time lost in travel. It is unfair to assume that any material saving can be effected if the ships are decommissioned, and if once withdrawn it is doubtful if they will ever again be replaced owing to the Rush-Bagot "treaty" complications.

It has been alleged that these ships are antiquated and obsolete. Attention is invited to the fact that only last year $150,000 was spent on two of them for modernization. All of them have undergone modernization during the past three or four years and are now in better condition than at any time since they were assigned to this duty. They are particularly adaptable to the training of reserves, the majority of whom are assigned ships on mobilization of a somewhat similar type, such as auxiliaries, tenders, and so forth. In conclusion it is interesting to note that the United States maintains the smallest naval reserve of any of the naval-treaty powers. The last available figures show that Great Britain supports a naval reserve of approximately 75,000 officers and men; France, 170,000; Italy, over 200,000; and Japan, 55,000; while the reserve of the United States has a paper strength of only 40,000, of which 7,500 are officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, after listening to a great deal of discussion on the question of economy one gets the impression that we are all in favor of economy except on those subjects which pertain to our own particular hobby. It is a great deal like our tariff attitude. We are in favor of a low tariff as long as it affects the other man's districts and goods.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield? Did the gentleman hear my remarks made a short time ago?

Mr. HARLAN. I am sorry, I did not. If the gentleman will excuse me, I do not have the time right now to yield.

On last Sunday there was published in the papers the text of President Hoover's economy bill. That bill is headed as follows:

A bill to effect economies in the National Government.

Now, I think we could all safely assume that in a bill to effect economies, anything that does not effect economy is not properly placed. In other words, this bill that is proposed to this Congress in this dire period of storm and stress ought not to be a bill introduced for the sake of garnering votes. It ought not be a bill introduced for the sake of catering to any interest that might be able to contribute to our fall campaign expenses. It ought not be a bill put in this great wealth of material as a rider to slip over something that probably can not be put over in any other way.

Specifically, may I read section 408?—

After the date of the enactment of this act, except as may be necessary to carry out existing contracts, the Postmaster General shall not manufacture for sale, cause to be manufactured for sale, or sell any stamped envelopes bearing any printing, lithographing, or engraving except the stamp.

Now, the provisions of that bill are before this Congress in due channels, in a bill to prohibit the printing of anything except the blank line for the signing of the name in the return corner. It will come before Congress, not in this economy wave of emotionalism, but in a cool, deliberate way, after consideration by the committee.

While this bill was being considered, the same thing as provided in section 408, although not quite so drastic, the Postmaster General of the United States, who at least ought to have the facts at his command, wrote to the committee in these terms:

Should either of these bills become a law, the department would lose revenue on the vast amount of printed-corner-card envelopes sold, represented by the difference between the contract cost and selling price, not including postage value. For example, on a letter contained in such an envelope the department receives the full postage, the contract cost of the envelope, including printing thereof; and, in addition, all of the apportioned costs involved in the sale and distribution, amounting to more than $2,000,000.

This is not true of letters mailed with adhesive stamps, as the cost of the manufacture of the stamps, their handling, transportation, etc., are included in the postage charge of 2 cents. Furthermore, the expenditures of the department in the operation of its dead-letter branch would be further increased, as no printed-corner-card envelopes are included in the 20,000,000 dead letters now passing through the Dead Letter Office.

In other words, the Postmaster General of the United States, who has these figures in hand, says that if this section is passed there will not be any economy effected, but the Post Department will lose, $2,000,000. It will cost the Post Office Department $2,000,000 more than their present expense to carry out this provision of the so-called economy recommendation of the President. While he does not figure out any other losses, he does state that it will place a great burden on the Dead Letter Office.

I have not the time to go into the figures, but I have obtained figures as to approximately what that will cost, and if section 408 is adopted in our alleged economy measure the Dead Letter Office will have an additional expense of $22,140. The Postmaster General briefly refers to the cost of printing the stamps if this is discontinued, and if the President's measure is adopted, I have gotten figures from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing which, with a little computation, show that there will be an added expense to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of approximately $115,000 for printing these stamps. There will be a $2,000,000 loss to the Post Office Department, an additional expense of $22,000 to the Dead Letter Office, and $115,000 added to the expense of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to carry out one of our Executive's economy proposals.

There may be other arguments in this matter. Possibly the President has something that he is thinking about, but certainly, gentlemen, you can not say that this kind of a bill should be included in any proposal to effect economy.

I suppose it would be well to explain for a minute the way this business is run, so we can understand the picture. The Government every four years advertises for sealed bids to print these embossed envelopes. Under the present contract they are paying for printing the return name on these envelopes 2.1 cents per thousand. In other words, the Government pays practically nothing to have this done. All the Government has to pay is just the cost of the ink and setting the type. The machinery is all there and it is all done in one operation.

If you take that same work and take the envelopes out and print them in little job-printing shops throughout the country, they will cost those consumers who buy in 500 lots 1,500 per cent more to do it in a small job-printing shop than it will the way it is being done now. It will cost those who buy in 1,000 lots from 800 to 1,000 per cent more to have it done, because to have it done when the envelope is printed saves labor to the extent that there is practically no cost at all. The Government, which pays 2 cents per 1,000 to have this done, sells them to the consumer for 24 cents per 1,000, and out of this business, according to the letter of the Postmaster General, the Government is substantially making a profit of $2,000,000 a year, yet the President, in this period of storm and stress, when he is asking to save every nickel we can, comes and says $2,000,000 is nothing, we will just throw that out of the window.

Now, the people who have come here to advocate this measure—the only people who have advocated it—are those interested in the country-newspaper business. They come here and urge that this be discontinued so they will have this printing. I am not going to argue that. There may be some merit in it, but I do not think there is. If there is, this is no place to consider it. It should be considered before the proper committee and not be contained in an economy program. There is a group, however, that is vitally interested in this proposition, and that is the envelope association in this country, which is trying to get its hands on this envelope business.

In 1926 this matter came up before the Congress of the United States, and it developed in the hearings before the Post Office Committee that this envelope association raised a fund of $75,000 to propagandize this proposal. I can not go into all the details, because I have not the time, but the head of that organization, after they were unable to stop the Government from doing this, turned around and bid and tried to take the business itself. They were underbid, however, and now, through this welshing process, they are attempting to undermine this company by getting the President to inject it into his alleged insincere economy program.

A few months ago our Executive was accused by a certain group of being abysmally ignorant. That being a controversial matter, he did not wish to decide it himself, so he appointed a committee to determine whether or not he was abysmally ignorant. That committee, after due consideration, reported to the world that he was not abysmally ignorant, and for the purpose of this argument I am perfectly willing to admit that he is not abysmally ignorant. Now, when we see a man who is not abysmally ignorant proposing in an economy bill a measure that is going to cost the Government considerably over $2,000,000 to put into force, what must we assume? Either that the measure is put in with a view of the coming election, in which certain contemplated votes are in view, or that this company—this welshing organization—that went into this to try to get this business and then failed is about to offer its assistance to the coming campaign.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman tell us where these stamped envelopes are printed now?

Mr. HARLAN. They are printed in Dayton, Ohio.

Mr. TABER. In the gentleman's own district?

Mr. HARLAN. That is my district; yes. Nevertheless, that does not mitigate against the facts that I am presenting here.

In 1929, three years after this group failed to get this business, there appeared in their organ, called the Envelope Industry, this editorial. If the gentleman who is interested in where this is being done will listen to the editorial and will then have any real answer to it, that would be more interesting. This is the Envelope Industry that is saying this:

> The fight against the Government envelope policy will not be allowed to languish this spring.

This was in 1929.

> "Keeping everlastingly at it" is the motto, even in the face of the warning that the new Congress will have no time for miscellaneous legislation at the extra session. Tariff revision and farm relief are supposed to have a monopoly of attention at the special session. But, at that, the crusaders for envelope reform are keeping the pot of propaganda boiling and will be on the alert for any opportunity to edge in, as an entering wedge, the proposal to restrict the printing of return cards.

In other words, in 1929 they were simply trying to get the return cards taken off as an "entering wedge." The President goes them one step farther and practically eliminates the whole business, because the "entering wedge," apparently, has got in a little bit farther in the last few years.

> In the Seventy-first Congress, as in the former Congress, the envelope manufacturers will not appear as instigators—

These gentlemen are so proud of their propaganda that they are ashamed to appear—> because of the criticism that they are selfishly interested. The campaign of education and promotion will be left to the legislative committee of the National Editorial Association—

This is the group of little country newspapers who have been carrying on this fight—> which attacks this injustice of governmental competition with private business from the standpoint of the commercial printers who are bereft of envelope-printing jobs that are rightfully theirs.

Gentlemen, to turn this out of its present channels and turn it over to these printers will put on the little missionary society, the country doctor, the minister, and small users this additional burden, and 37 per cent of these envelopes are purchased in lots of 500. Eighty-three per cent of them are purchased in lots of less than 2,000. It is just the little fellow in the small towns who buys these envelopes, and he will have to pay from 800 to 1,500 per cent more to get them if this "economy" plan is adopted.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three more minutes.

Mr. HARLAN (reading):

> As on previous occasions, the renewal of the envelope fight will be first staged in the Senate where, for various reasons, the situation is most favorable.

Now, again, in the issue of this same paper of last March these gentlemen who are hiding behind the skirts of the country editors had a convention in Chicago, and here is what they said on that occasion:

> The stamped-envelope situation has aroused the resentment of of envelope manufacturers—

This same group that in 1926 raised $75,000 to propagandize this proposition—> for many years, since it takes business away from envelope companies and printers, although the Government actually loses money on every 1,000 stamped envelopes sold.

This is the statement that is being handed out to the country, and the Postmaster General says that instead of losing they make $2,000,000 a year off of this business, and yet such false stuff as this is handed out to mislead voters.

It was brought out at the convention discussion that the Government competes with private organizations in the envelope business, and yet sells Government envelopes with a printed corner card at only a few cents more per thousand than the cost of the printing alone.

And in the next paragraph there is the statement that they are raising $5,000 to propagandize this particular Congress.

Gentlemen, if we ever expect the people of this country to accept our efforts at economy or to accept the professions of economy of the Executive, let us have a little bit of ordinary frankness and honesty in these matters. The fact that there is an election coming on, the fact that there is a group of people who have some votes and another group of people who have some money willing to back up their proposition, is no reason why we should falsify or try to mislead, under the guise of a campaign for economy, about a proposition that is going to run this Government considerably farther into the red.

If there is really a sincere desire on the part of the Government to effect economy in this matter, the addition of a very small amount to the price which the Government charges the envelope users would bring into the Post Office Department three-quarters of a million dollars. This could be done without hurting anyone and with practically no objection.

Again, it now costs the Government $8.80 a thousand to handle letters going to the Dead Letter Office. Incidentally, not one letter printed with the corner card found its way to the Dead Letter Office last year, although 20,000,000 other letters, containing checks, stamps, money orders, and loose money to the amount of over $4,000,000, went through that department. The Government by the simple expedient of requiring every letter to have printed, either by hand or in type, the name and address of the sender could eliminate this office so far as first-class mail is concerned, save $175,000 annually, and stimulate the small printer's trade.

Neither of these measures, however, would offer any relief to the Envelope Trust, who are desirious of driving the International Envelope Corporation out of competition, and apparently the President is only interested in the form of "economy" which appeals to the envelope association.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE].

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, American citizenship is our greatest heritage. Millions to-day enjoy its rights and privileges. For its benefits and blessings we are indebted to the one man who did the most to create a free and independent Nation, George Washington.

His sincerest hope, his greatest ambition, was to achieve an independent American citizenry. This induced him to assume the leadership of the movement which ultimately won for us our freedom. As a delegate to the Virginia convention at Williamsburg, he took the lead in insisting that the Colonies should have the right of self-government. There he patriotically pledged himself to "raise 1,000 men, subsist them at my own expense, and go at their head for the relief of Boston," which then had been closed to commerce by an act of Parliament.

The Williamsburg convention fittingly elected him a Virginia Delegate to the First Continental Congress, and when reelected to the Second Continental Congress he declared it to be his "full intention to devote my life and my fortune to this cause."

There Washington courageously sat from day to day in his blue-and-buff Virginia colonel's uniform, clearly indicating his firm conviction that sooner or later the Colonies would have to unite and fight for that which they knew was right. At a time when Samuel Adams, James Otis, and Doctor Warren, of Boston, were threatened by the British with hanging as traitors Washington unhesitatingly risked a similar fate and patriotically offered to devote his life and his fortune to the American struggle for freedom.

He was unanimously elected by the Second Continental Congress as "Commander in Chief of all the Continental forces raised or to be raised." Promptly accepting, he set out for Boston, where he took command of the Continental Army on July 3, 1775.

Washington found his army a group of untrained, half-clad, improperly fed, and poorly equipped men. Despite all this, the confidence Washington inspired in his men aroused in them a spirit of patriotism which made of them, though never a finished army, an instrument with which he was able to accomplish his great purpose.

While Washington was with his Continental forces Virginia adopted a bill of rights and a constitution declaring the independence of the good people of that State and severing all allegiance to the British Crown.

Washington was born in Virginia before the outbreak of the Revolutionary War and when Virginia owed allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain. In general, the place of birth determines citizenship and allegiance. At the time of Washington's birth there was no independent government of Virginia and no United States to which he could owe allegiance; he was a British subject.

When Virginia renounced allegiance to Great Britain and declared herself independent, all persons actually and permanently domiciled in that State became her citizens, bound and protected by her laws and owing allegiance to her government unless they elected within a reasonable time to adhere to their former British allegiance.

By Virginia's declaration of independence George Washington became a citizen of that State. All allegiance to Great Britain was terminated. Every act and deed of his indicated that such was his intent and purpose.

When later the Second Continental Congress solemnly published and declared "that these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States," Washington was busily engaged with his army in the field. By the Declaration of Independence every member or citizen of the Thirteen Colonies, unless he promptly severed his allegiance thereto, became ipso facto a citizen of the United States. Washington, a citizen of Virginia, thereby became a citizen of the United States.

Had it not been for Washington and the army he led, the Declaration of Independence creating American citizens would have had little effect, American citizenship would not have been preserved.

In a letter to the Congress of the United States, February 5, 1777, Washington called attention to the fact that there was no oath of allegiance for the officers, and requested that there be one. Congress responded to Washington's request by prescribing the form of the first oath of allegiance. Its purpose, according to the records of the Continental Congress, was to "devise effectual means to prevent persons disaffected to the interest of the United States from being employed in any of the important offices." Washington took and subscribed the first oath, which was as follows:

I, George Washington, Commander in Chief of the Armies of the United States of America, do acknowledge the United States of America to be free, independent, and sovereign States, and declare that the people thereof owe no allegiance or obedience to George the Third, King of Great Britain; and I renounce, refuse, and abjure any allegiance or obedience to him; and I do swear that I will to the utmost of my power support, maintain, and defend the said United States against the said King George the Third, his heirs and successors and his or their abettors, assistants, and adherents, and will serve the said United States in the office of comr. in chief as aforesd., which I now hold, with fidelity, according to the best of my skill and understanding.

G. WASHINGTON.

Sworn before me, camp at Valley Forge, May 12th, 1778.

STIRLING, Major Genl.

This original oath is found in the War Department at Washington. In his capacity as Commander in Chief he swore other officers of his army. That oath did not change; it merely fortified his American citizenship. By it he declared himself to be solely, American.

Two years after Yorktown, the treaty of peace being then signed, Washington resigned his command. In strict conformity with his offer to Congress when he took command, he refused to accept any pay for his personal services during the war. His only request was reimbursement of $64,315, the amount he had used out of his own private funds for war expenses. Upon accepting his resignation, General Mifflin, then President of the Congress, said:

> You retire from the theater of action with the blessings of your fellow citizens, but the glory of your virtues will not terminate with your military command, it will continue to animate remotest ages.

Washington believed that there could be no strong central government without a strong united citizenry. The Government of the United States during the Revolutionary War and for a few years thereafter operated under the Articles of Confederation, which contained neither an express nor an implied definition of United States citizenship. It merely provided that the free inhabitants of each of the States should be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of free citizens in the several States. Each State had its own naturalization laws, and each one's law varied widely from all the others.

Before resigning his command Washington wrote a letter to the presidents and governors of the States, expressing his conviction that there could not long be peace and security for the States unless they organized themselves into an indissoluble union and set up a real government endowed with the power and ability to maintain its dignity and standing among the nations. The Continental Congress was weak and quite ineffectual because intercolonial rivalry and jealousy made it almost hopelessly decentralized.

Washington was appointed a delegate to the Federal Convention in 1787, and was elected its President. Nothing in Washington's history more clearly marks his power as a leader than that convention. Confronted by great differences, especially the relative claims of great and small States, he patiently led them all through to harmonious agreement. Here again, in the midst of bitter conflict, his courage, tact, foresight, and ideals set "a standard to which the wise and honest can repair."

The Constitution of the United States was adopted chiefly because of the influence of Washington. He was the outstanding leader in the formation of the Union.

Citizenship, neither national nor State, is defined by the Federal Constitution of 1789. The treaty of peace with Great Britain contains a recognition of the existence of American citizenship; determination of who were such citizens was left to the laws of this country.

In 1787 naturalization was a proceeding administered by the States. Each had its own rule and requirements.

In the debates of the convention, presided over by Washington, it was determined that the process of naturalization should be uniform throughout the several States. After due consideration, it was agreed that Congress should have the power to provide "An uniform rule of naturalization." This vested in the Federal Government exclusively, all power and authority over naturalization.

The only other reference to citizenship in that document appears in the qualifications for the offices of President, Vice President, Senator, and Representative. Otherwise, naturalized citizens of this great country of ours are given equal rights with the native born. There prevailed at the Federal Convention a sentiment that there should be a citizenship distinction in the qualifications for these offices. So it was provided that "No person, except a natural-born citizen, or a citizen of the United States, at the time of the adoption of this Constitution shall be eligible to the office of President * * *," that a Senator must have been a citizen for nine years, and a Representative for seven years.

George Washington, the first President of the United States, was not a natural-born citizen, solely because this Nation did not exist in 1732. While he was an American by birth, he was a British subject. Virginia declared its independence and then came the Declaration of Independence of the Colonies. These declarations severed his British allegiance. Washington and all of his compatriots became citizens of the United States. American independence and American citizenship date from July 4, 1776. All documents executed by the United States so declare.

Washington was unanimously elected the first President. He took the oath of office at the Treasury Building in New York City. In his first message to Congress, which was dated January 8, 1790, he called attention to that provision in the Constitution which gives Congress the power "to establish an uniform rule of naturalization." This message is addressed to—

> Fellow citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives, I embrace with great satisfaction the opportunity which now presents itself of congratulating you on the present favorable prospects of our public affairs. * * *
> Various considerations also render it expedient that the terms on which foreigners may be admitted to the rights of citizens should be speedily ascertained by a uniform rule of naturalization.

The first act establishing a uniform rule of naturalization was quickly passed and signed by George Washington. It contained the simple requirements that an alien to become a citizen must have resided within the limits and jurisdiction of the United States for the term of two years and take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

This act failed to distinguish between the aliens then in the United States and those who would come in the future. The same rule was applied to all. The second naturalization act divided aliens into two classes. Aliens thereafter entering the United States could be admitted as citizens upon proof of 5 rather than 2 years' residence, a declaration of intention at least 3 years before admission to citizenship, and proof that during the 5-year period "he has behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same." The alien then residing here could become a citizen by declaring on oath that he had resided two years within the United States and one year within the State or Territory where the naturalization court was held, that he would support the Constitution, and that during the 2-year residence period he had behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same.

George Washington, in his farewell message, emphasized that the same obligations of citizenship were imposed on both the native born and the naturalized. The message states:

> Citizens by birth or choice of the common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just price of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religon, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts—of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

Not until the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution was there a constitutional definition of citizenship. Yet no one questioned that Washington was, from the date of the Declaration of Independence, a citizen of the United States. He became the first citizen by right of service, ability, and example.

Most of us are citizens to-day merely by being born here. The others are citizens by virtue of a simple naturalization process.

Washington's citizenship was not so easily acquired. As a Delegate to the Continental Congress he pledged his services to the struggle for freedom; for seven years as Commander in Chief he suffered much and endured more, fighting for American independence. By his oath in the field with his Army he renounced his allegiance to George III and swore to support, maintain, and defend the United States. He conquered an enemy army. Seven additional years of his life, his energy, and influence were given to the formation of the Union, the adoption of our Constitution, and the creation of a new Nation, his and our United States of America.

When he became President he took the oath to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, both foreign and domestic. His words and his deeds recognized the sovereignty only of this Nation, and that to this Nation alone his allegiance was due. His great example marks the path for all to follow, a path of obedience to majority rule, of reform and advancement through legal means, of active and intelligent interest in the affairs of government, of defense of that government in case of need, and of education, religion, and public integrity as a means toward this end. Such was the citizenship of George Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, along the lines of economy, which everybody is talking about at this time, I want to call attention of Members to what it costs to print the hearings. I said something the other day when the District of Columbia bill was up as to what it cost a page to print the books. I asked the Public Printer what it cost to print the hearings of the subcommittee on the naval bill. You have here a book of eight hundred and seventy-odd pages, which the Public Printer says cost $9,033.20 to have printed.

That book was not available for anybody to look at until this morning, when the Appropriations Committee had met from 10 to 12 o'clock to discuss the bill.

When we came in here at 12 o'clock it was the first opportunity you had to look at the hearings. So we have paid $9,033.20 for the printing of this book—but that is not all of the cost.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. I yield.

Mr. CRISP. Those figures do not include the compensation of the stenographers.

Mr. HARDY. The reporting cost of the hearings, according to the reporters' division, is $1 to $1.50 a page; so we will add $800 to the figures I have given, which makes the cost of this volume of hearings $9,833.20.

We talk a lot about the weather and do not do anything about it. We talk a lot about printing and do not do much about it. I think it is a good thing for the members of the different committees and the Members of the House of Representatives to know something about these costs. I can not see much hope that this information may penetrate to the other end of the Capitol, which as a matter of fact is more extravagant than this end. I think it is a good thing if we talk about it and know what it is going to cost the country when a Member fills a few pages in the hearings or a few pages in the RECORD.

The Public Printer's estimate is that a page of printing in the hearings—that is, plain, reading type—in 10-point type costs $5.22 a page; but if the page has in it a bunch of figures, mixed pages, then it will cost about $12 a page; and if it is solid tables of lines back and forth and up and down, it costs in the neighborhood of $21 a page. This particular book has mixed type, some of it reading matter and some of it tabular matter, and by the Public Printer's own figures it cost $10.26 a page.

I do not know that it does much good to bring these matters up; but I find in sitting around my own table at home, where expenses are considered now and then, it does pay to talk about it, and I have always insisted on my family finding out what a thing costs before it is bought. If families will do that, I think they will save money in the household. When I walk along the streets doing window shopping and see a store with many fancy things in it and no price mark upon them, I conclude that that is a high-priced shop.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. May I say this to the gentleman from Colorado, and I say it from observation and experience? I do not think there is a man in the House who is quite so familiar with the subject which the gentleman is discussing as he is. I know that he is rendering a real public service in the fact that he has looked into the cost of this printing, but here is a situation that I want to ask the gentleman about, if he will permit me. Speaking now alone of the committee of which the gentleman and I are members, although it applies to all of the committees of the House, when these estimates come, of course, there is the necessity of going into a very full and complete investigation of every item, by the committee in the first instance, in order to know just what it ought to do with respect to the item. Every Member of Congress is entitled to know, and I think the public is entitled to know, so far as possible, just what has been said, just what the arguments are in favor of and against the appropriation that is asked. We are considering now a bill that carries $326,000,000. The gentleman, as I understand it, says that the hearings on this bill cost $9,000 and over. That is doubtless too much, and I am not taking issue with the gentleman; but if we can not do otherwise, would we not better spend $9,000 investigating a $326,000,000 appropriation than have no public hearings at all? If the gentleman can devise some way by which a lot of this useless stuff is kept out of the hearings, well and good; but if it has any bearing on the subject, it seems to me that Members of Congress are entitled to know something about it. How would the gentleman stop this extraordinary expenditure, and I admit it is too high?

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I have not undertaken to bring in any proposition here about shutting off anybody from being heard anywhere nor from publishing anything, especially facts that come before the committee that hold these hearings. I do think that often there are pages of tables that go in that are unnecessary, and I think often there are many moments of conversation requiring printed matter that are not worth $6.50 a page.

Mr. BYRNS. There is no doubt about the correctness of the gentleman's position, and I think he is performing a great public service when he is calling it to the attention of the House. It is true not only of the hearings, but it is true of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

A great deal is published in the RECORD and in the hearings that could be eliminated, possibly more than half, but I am just wondering what you are going to do when a member of the committee insists on something going in which he says is important and has a bearing upon the subject.

Mr. HARDY. I am not a censor, but I rose just to make a few remarks about the expenses.

Mr. BYRNS. I am glad the gentleman is doing so, and I wish all the Members of the House were here to hear the gentleman.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Has the gentleman ever given consideration to the suggestion that the appropriations be made biennially instead of annually, and the saving that might be accomplished by making appropriations for two years instead of one?

Mr. HARDY. No; that is a larger subject than I want to consider along with this item.

Mr. JONES. I do not know whether it its practical to do so. I understand a good many States have adopted that system.

Mr. HARDY. It is hard enough to appropriate money for the year 1933 on estimates made up by the Budget last May. It is hard enough to arrive at this time of year at what we ought to spend in 1933. I think if you got into making appropriations for 1934, you would have a still greater difficulty.

Mr. JONES. I asked the question for information. It would eliminate half of the expense of that to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. TABER. I think it is a fact that the Committee on Appropriations finds that between the date of the Budget hearings—sometime in May, June, or July—and the time the appropriations are made, there are large items the necessity for which disappears before we hold our hearings, and if we had biennial appropriations and appropriated what was asked for on estimates so far ahead, we would appropriate a lot of money that the departments could waste that we save by having our annual appropriations.

Mr. JONES. I was asking for information, and I was wondering if the committee had given consideration to that, and if it would entail a greater loss.

Mr. HARDY. Oh, it could not be done at all. The gentleman can understand that.

Now, speaking of the different committees, the revenue bill that was recently brought before the House cost $11,558.69 to print the hearings. I have no doubt the reporting of that cost two or three thousand dollars more.

The tariff bill which we considered a year or so ago, for the printing of the hearings and the bills which were required at both ends of the Capitol, was $430,000.

The Navy Department appropriation bill, which is before us now, contains an item of $550,000 for printing. That is a reduction of $25,000. I have no doubt it is a fair reduction and can be made.

The printing in the departments costs a great deal of money. That is a different subject from that which I mentioned first. In the War Department it costs $648,000 a year; the Treasury Department, $941,000; the Agriculture Department, $1,000,000; the Post Office Department, $1,895,000. The Department of Commerce, $2,894,000. These are the figures for 1931. Of course the Department of Commerce had the census which in itself cost $750,000.

The cost of printing for all the departments, including the Congress, is $14,500,000. The cost of printing for the Capitol, the House, and Senate, is from $2,500,000 to $3,000,000. It has grown. It has become more expensive.

Now, our printing is done at cost. I think it is a rather high cost. The Public Printing Office is the finest printing office in the land. It is probably the best job printing plant in the world. It figures what all of the business cost for the year and tries to make a charge for each page, for each form, in proportion to what the cost would be. The Public Printing Office is a big employer of labor. It employs 5,000 people. One reason that our costs are high is the fact that we work it overtime, nights, Sundays, and holidays. There are a thousand people working over there to-night to get out the work for the Government. One thing that makes printing high is the fact that the people who order it do not stop to consider cost. They send it over there and they ask for rush work. Some Members of Congress ask that their speeches be produced immediately. If the people who have this printing done had to pay for it—or even if all Members and departments would consider costs as they do in private enterprises, I am sure the cost of the hearings would be less, the size of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would be considerably smaller, and the cost of printing by the departments would be reduced from 30 to 40 per cent. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has again expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes at this point.

Rather than the chairman of the subcommittee, because I have less responsibility in connection with this year's appropriation bill and hearings than the chairman, probably I should make a brief statement in regard to the matter with reference to which the gentleman from Colorado has just spoken.

First of all, I want to acknowledge the debt of gratitude that I, and I am sure all members of the committee and the House, owe to the gentleman from Colorado for the analysis he has made. On the other hand, we must not be confused with the thought that all printing is waste and that printing, to the extent it is indulged in by the naval subcommittee and other subcommittees, does not produce fruits far above the value of the cost, to which reference has been made.

Going back over all the years that I have been a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Navy Department, I am satisfied that this committee has not printed more than 20 or 25 per cent of the data received by the committee, probably far less than that. We have tried to be sensible in applying the principle to which the gentleman from Colorado has referred, of sorting out and eliminating material submitted the printing of which would be costly and unnecessary.

On the other hand, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. BYRNS] said a moment ago, it sometimes happens that an individual member of a committee insists that certain material be printed because he regards it of the highest importance. Other members may not regard it so highly. Nevertheless, it goes into the sum total of expense to which the gentleman has referred.

On the whole, it is well for the Members of the Congress to keep in view the specific figures to which attention has been called as an admonition to us to keep the costs down to the extent it is possible.

Again, looking at the problem from the other standpoint, I have in mind a specific item that this committee went into when it did not know where the trail would lead, when it undertook its investigation that resulted in an actual saving of between six hundred and seven hundred thousand dollars because of the study that the committee was willing to make of the particular subject. The pending bill, as the result of the hearings—and we did not have definitely in mind what we should find when the hearings began—we have reported to this House with reductions of approximately $15,000,000 under the estimates that came to Congress from the Bureau of the Budget, and I am reminded we have made these reductions for the most part with the approval of the department.

Nearly every item where a reduction has been made indicates that upon close scrutiny, with our eyes fixed upon the specific needs of a project, we can come to understandings that are wholesome, that are reasonable, that meet the situation, and yet that will not cost as much as it was originally thought the cost would be.

So I want to say that, in my judgment, very great good comes from holding up at all times to the public that which the Congress is holding up through the RECORD and the hearings, because in that manner the eyes of the world are focused upon conditions, policies proposed, and asserted principles which are alleged to have merit within them; and as a result of the criticism which comes to the individual Members, the committees, and the Congress, great good may result over and above that which would be the case if hearings were not published at all, if congressional debates were not published, and if hearings and proceedings were held and then permitted to go by the board without any permanent record being made to serve as a guide to the committees in the future or to future Congresses.

The guide, then, should be: What will be the effect of publishing this page or inserting this table, and the justification for its publication can be sustained only if good will result therefrom?

At this moment I want to compliment the present chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. AYRES] for the fidelity with which he has adhered to that principle in assembling the data and bringing them to you in the hearings upon the naval bill.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER] such time as he may desire to use.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, we have before us now H. R. 11452, making an appropriation for the Navy Department, which carries an appropriation of several million dollars, and we have had during this session of Congress several others of like kind and which carried an appropriation far beyond the needs of the departments, in my opinion.

I believe in maintaining the efficiency of the Government when it is economically administered, as it should be, and the time has now come when we must cut these appropriations to the core if we maintain this Government without increasing taxes, and we must do that. We will have to cut the appropriations during this session, and if we maintain the same reductions in this and other appropriations as we have in the other bills that have passed, about $400,000,000 under the President's budget recommended to this Congress, and that will be saved to the taxpayers of the United States.

I say frankly to you, that, in my opinion, $500,000,000 could have been cut out of the bills, and it would not have hurt the efficiency of either department. The purpose of the Budget was to bring the appropriation bills down to where the revenues collected for that fiscal year will be sufficient to pay them out of the money collected without having a deficit in the Treasury. The Budget Director should do this, or at least suggest it, in his report to the President and to Congress, and Congress should see to it that no appropriations are made beyond that estimate.

Much has been said recently on the floor of this Congress and through the press about balancing the Budget of the United States Treasury. With the reckless extravagance that has been going on for the last 10 years, under the administration of the party now in power, it would not stay balanced 10 days, if it were balanced. I will discuss this question further in the course of my remarks to-day if I am given time to do so.

I want to discuss with you for a while the present conditions in the United States and find out if we can, what is the matter and how to fix it. We are living in a peculiar day, a day in which we have more money than we ever had, and yet only a few have any money at all; we have more corn, wheat, cotton, rice, and other agricultural crops than we ever had before, and the farmer can not sell them for the cost of production, and yet we have in the United States now more hungry people and more people in need of clothing and more people out of work than we ever had before. If the hungry could be fed for the next six months as they should be, and clothing should be furnished to those in need of them, we would not have a surplus of either commodity.

It is said that there is no one so far from the market as the man who has nothing to sell. It might be as truly said that the man who is hungry and wants to buy and has no money is in a worse fix than the fellow who has plenty and can not sell it. The man who has it can satisfy his hunger, but the other can not.

There is something radically wrong when a condition of this kind is brought about in a great country like this, and so let us reason together and see if we can locate the cause of this condition.

It is said by our leaders trying to get employment for the unemployed that we now have 8,000,000 people out of employment. They are working people who want to work to earn a living for themselves and families, and can not get work. I can imagine no greater embarrassment to a man who is at the head of a family, with wife and children depending upon him for bread, that goes out in the morning leaving them in want and seeking a day's labor so that he may bring home to them at night that which is necessary to satisfy their hunger, and has to come in the evening in his disappointment and tell them, "I could find no work to do to get money to buy bread with."'

This condition should no longer prevail, and it must be remedied. What is the cause of this? It is a lack of proper distribution of the wealth of the country. It is said that 504 people in the United States out of more than 120,000,000 of people own 90 per cent of its wealth. When money is thus centralized in the hands of the few, it is next hoarded away and places a power in their hands that they can control the finance of the country at their will, and that is just what they are doing now.

This class have withdrawn their money from circulation and business, and the buying power of their dollar is increasing faster hidden away than they could make in any investment in business. There is about 60 per cent of the money in the United States hidden away and about 40 per cent in circulation. Business can not survive with this condition on, and you know it as well as I do. We must face it like men and correct this evil.

You ask how could so few people gather all this wealth and control it. My answer is that it is on account of a single standard of money and special privileges given them by unwise legislation by Congress, such as the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill, which is destined to make the rich richer and the poor poorer.

The Constitution of the United States delegated to Congress the following power, and here I quote the Constitution in its exact language:

> To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measure.

Congress, instead of exercising this power as they should and as it was intended that they would, has largely delegated this power to the Federal reserve and national banks. I want to see Congress exercise this authority as it should do.

We are on a gold standard of money now, when we should be on a double standard of gold and silver as we once were. Gold is a coward and hides away. I doubt if there is a man in the sound of my voice that has seen a gold coin in 30 days. Silver is never hoarded. It is a medium of exchange that is always in circulation. It is the poor man's money that stays in use and builds a country and promotes happiness.

There are only $11,000,000,000 in gold in the world. The United States has about $5,000,000,000 of that amount and France has about $4,000,000,000, or in other words, the United States and France own nine-elevenths of the gold of the world. Is there a man who would claim for a moment to be an economist that would say that a world business could be carried on, on the basis of $11,000,000,000? No, he would not.

Three-fifths of the world are on a silver basis and two-fifths on a gold basis. What does this mean when you consider a world trade? It means this, if you are on a single standard of money that you must confine most of your trade to the nations using your kind of money. Take, if you will, China or India, as an example. They are on a silver basis, and we are on a gold basis. When China comes to the United States to buy our cotton, wheat or rice, or other agricultural products, they have to buy with their kind of money. The silver that is now contained in a dollar is worth only 25 cents, measured by our gold standard, where it would be worth a hundred cents if it were remonetized.

When we get 5 cents per pound for cotton, it costs them 20 cents per pound. If we were on a bimetallic basis, our farmers could sell all their cotton now for 20 cents per pound and our wheat and rice for $1.50 per bushel. This is the way to bring our agricultural products back to a fair price. Besides that, the people in other countries can only grow a very inferior grade of cotton. They would not grow any at all if they could trade with us under a double standard of money, as our cotton is so far superior to theirs.

I have proposed a bill to do this, and it would restore prosperity in 60 days if it could pass in this Congress.

The present administration has started in at the top instead of the bottom to give relief. You may pour your millions in at the top, but it never gets down to the man at the bottom that really needs it to enable him to produce wealth.

The present administration first advocated giving a moratorium to Europe of $252,566,803. I voted against that, but enough of you voted for it to pass it. Only a small part of this went to Germany. It was distributed to the European nations as follows: Austria, $287,556; Belgium, $7,950,000; Czechoslovakia, $3,000,000; Estonia, $600,372; Finland, $312,295; France, $50,000,000; Great Britain, $159,520,000; Greece, $1,109,080; Hungary, $69,342; Italy, $14,706,125; Latvia, $250,653; Lithuania, $224,545; Poland, $7,486,835; Rumania, $800,000; Yugoslavia, $250,000; and Germany, $6,000,000.

The administration next advocated a $2,000,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be set up to loan to big corporations. I voted against that in the House; but you passed it.

You voted out of the Treasury at one time $500,000,000 of the people's money for this purpose. Then $125,000,000 to the land banks and $125,000,000 under the Steagall bill, making a total of $992,000,000 for the four appropriations. This only lacks $93,000,000 of being a billion of dollars. Then what follows next? A cry goes up to the country that we must balance the Budget. We must raise a billion dollars by taxation at once to balance the Budget, or, in other words, to put back what you have taken out.

They brought in a tax bill, and enough of you voted for that to pass it. I voted against it. If you had voted with me, there would be no balancing-of-the-Budget cry going out to the people and requiring them to pay a billion dollars more in taxes in this time of distress. I trust this bill will be defeated by the Senate.

They tried to put over a sales tax or a consumers' tax to raise $600,000,000 of this sum, trying to require the consumer to pay on practically everything he used. The good judgment of the House killed that too dead to ever be raised again. It would have been more burdensome than the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill. The purpose of the sales tax was to take it off the rich that now pay income tax and put it on the poor.

There was no use passing this tax bill at all, and the situation could have been met under the gold standard of money as we have it now and under the existing law. The existing law requires that a 40 per cent reserve of gold be kept in the Treasury. The reserve of gold now runs 80 per cent. We can issue $3,500,000,000 of money to-morrow, if the administration would permit it, under the present law. I will not vote an additional tax on my people when the Government refuses to function under the law. Besides that, now is no time in this time of distress to further tax the people.

No one has better credit than the Government, and if it will not increase the volume of money as it has a right to do, let it use its credit just like it always has, and take care of the Government obligations with short-time notes just as it always has done and just as it should do now.

There must be an expansion of our currency. The Federal reserve banks could put $2,000,000,000 into circulation under existing law if they would do so, and it is my understanding that they will give immediate aid in expanding our money, but to what extent I do not know. I hope it will be at least $2,000,000,000. The soldiers' bonus bill, if passed, will put $2,400,000,000 into circulation at once and pay a just debt that the Government owes them for services rendered. It simply proposes to issue that amount of money under the present law, and which they have a right to do, and pay this debt, and it will not cost a single taxpayer 1 cent of money, and give great relief to depressed business conditions. This would not only aid the soldier boy, he would be able to pay his debts, if any, or buy him a home. It would be an aid to merchants and banks and would put money into circulation where all would be benefited by it. I would oppose the payment now if it had to be raised by taxation, but not one cent of it would be raised by taxation under the bill now pending.

Economy ought to be the watchword both for our States and our National Government. Some of our State governments are now being burdened with a heavy load of debt that they are struggling under. In our National Government the remedy is to abolish useless bureaus and commissions that ought never to have been put into use, for many of them serve no useful purpose at all, and could be abolished without hurting the efficiency of the Government.

The basis of our wealth now is and always has been agriculture. No time in the history of this Nation has it been so depressed. Cotton is lower this year than it has been in 100 years as shown by the records. I farmed until I was 28 years of age, and I know from my own experience that cotton can not be grown for any such price. It should bring at least 20 cents per pound, and will do it if we can change some of our laws regulating our trading in foreign countries.

We have passed during this session an amendment to the tariff bill which, if it passes the Senate and is signed by the President, will materially help our export trade. It provides for establishing reciprocal trade relations with other countries. We now have a high tariff wall around us to keep others out and from trading with us. They have passed retaliatory measures against us to keep us out of their countries. As a result we can not sell our products. We are sitting down counting our fingers because we have no money to count, and they are doing the same—and both nations suffering by reason thereof.

If this amendment passes, it will allow us to establish a trade relation with them by reducing the tariff or taking it off altogether, and they in return do the same for us. What we need is a world trade. We are an export Nation and always will be. We can not consume all we could produce. We want a world market so that we will not hear the cry of overproduction. We must have longer loans and a less rate of money interest, and the farmer will then prosper.

The United States is big enough to be fair with all the nations of the earth as she always has been. The United States ought to have the friendship of all the nations of the earth. The way to have friends is to be friendly, we are told. We ought to have no entangling alliances with any other country.

We are now spending more than 70 per cent of the revenue of the United States to pay for wars in the past and in keeping up an Army and Navy. If we could spend this sum for even 10 years in the United States for internal improvement, you would have the most prosperous Nation in the world.

You voted here a few days ago to refuse to take away from the Rules Committee the bill known as the Glenn-Smith bill which, in my opinion, would have done more for agriculture than almost any bill that could be passed. It affected 35 States in this Union. The finest lands in the United States are affected by this bill. To make these lands suitable for agricultural purposes they had to be leveed and drained. This required a large sum of money, and the taxes are falling due now, and on account of this depression and other causes much of this fine land is forfeiting to the State or to the levee and drainage districts, and the lands will be lost to many farmers.

The purpose of this Glenn-Smith bill was to refund this debt and to amortize this out for a long period of years and reduce the interest charges so that the lands might be saved to the farmers who owned them. We hope yet that this bill may be passed before the close of this session of Congress.

If Congress had given the same careful consideration to agriculture that has been given to aiding others, this Nation would not be talking depression at this time. You can take the $2,000,000,000 voted for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the moratorium of $252,000,000 voted to Europe and you can buy 15,000,000 bales of cotton and pay $100 per bale for it and you have only spent $1,500,000,000 and you have $762,000,000 left, and you can buy all the wheat and rice raised in the United States and pay $1.50 per bushel for that, and still have money left. If this money had been spent in that way, you would have all the money in the country that you would need. The banks would be full of money, the railroads instead of borrowing money would be hauling cotton and other freights and making money. The merchants would be busy in their stores selling goods, and collecting for goods sold, the man out of employment would get a job, and all would be happy again.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to express the hope that the United States Senate will take early action upon the measure which the House recently passed and which provides freedom for the people of the Philippine Islands. I hope also that it may have Executive approval.

For a number of years I have urged that the United States Government comply with its implied obligations to grant that independence.

Liberty is the finest word in the language of men. It embodies everything that is worth while to which men and nations may aspire. With that principle is linked everything that we hold dear.

At the time we took over those islands, we did so to help them escape from tyranny and to assist them in training themselves in the art of self-government, for which our forefathers had fought, and to which we owe a full measure of devotion.

I do not think it is a question of the interests of the United States Government, nor even a question of the interests of the people of the Philippines themselves. It is primarily a question of whether or not they are ready to handle their own affairs. I believe they are.

A few years ago I had the privilege of visiting those islands. I went among the people; I went into their homes; I talked with them; and I visited various parts of their country. I have never seen a more earnest, a more sincere people, or a people more desirous of development.

I have never seen a more burning desire for an education on the part of the children of any nation or race or people. One could go into the hotel and find the elevator boy with a schoolbook in his pocket, utilizing his spare time. The parents were willing to make any kind of sacrifice that their children might have the privileges of an education. You can not stop a people like this.

During the last few years it has been my privilege, as it has been the privilege of a number of you, to serve with several commissioners from the Philippine Islands. Every one of them has been an educated man, every one of them has been an intelligent man, and every one of them has been trained in the principles of self-government.

Many presentations have been made by various representatives before committees of Congress. These have all reflected wisdom, knowledge, and familiarity with principles of government. At the same time they have always breathed gratitude for the fine help that has been rendered by the people of the United States in the development of their home-land.

I do not believe I have ever heard two more eloquent short addresses than those delivered in this forum the other day by the two representatives of these Islands, Hon. PEDRO GUEVARA and Hon. CAMILO OSIAS, who closed the debate when we had up the question of independence. Their words seemed to be forged in the fires of their own love of liberty.

The setting was peculiar. It was the first time in the history of all the world that the representatives of a great people had voted voluntarily to surrender jurisdiction over another great land and another great people. If it has ever been done before, I do not know of such an instance. No finer tribute could be paid to the heart and spirit of America and to the institutions for which she stands than for her to express a willingness to relinquish this authority without compulsion of any kind.

We do not know, and can not know, what the future may hold in store either for us or for the Philippine Republic that is to be. But whatever the mystery of the years may unfold, whatever the genius of man may contrive, whatever dreams or plans may be wrought or molded into practical form, I do not believe any land or any race or any people will ever find anything to take the place of human liberty. [Applause.]

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POLK].

Mr. POLK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein two brief tables, one concerning the expenditures in the legislative branch of the Government and the other some suggestions with reference to economy in that branch of Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. POLK. Mr. Chairman, during the past months much has been said here in the House of Representatives concerning the excessive cost of conducting the affairs of the Federal Government.

The leaders of both of the major political parties have pledged their support to an economy program and are sincerely striving to accomplish material savings. At this time the Economy Committee of the House is in conference with the President of the United States in a strictly nonpartisan and patriotic effort to further cut down Government expenditures.

During the past 30 years the expenses of our National Government have continued to mount at a rapid rate. The average annual expenditures of the Federal Government for the period from 1898 to 1905, as recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for May 30, 1908, were $653,932,414. By 1907 the expenditures for this purpose were $762,488,752. In a speech delivered in the Senate on April 10, 1909, Senator Nelson W. Aldrich, then chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance, stated:

> The rapidity with which our national expenditures have increased within the last three years is a source of anxiety, if not of alarm. From an investigation more or less superficial, I am myself satisfied that the appropriations made last year could have been reduced at least fifty millions without impairing the efficiency of the public service. There are periods in the life of a nation when the spirit of extravagance pervades the atmosphere and the public money is scattered right and left, often without reference to the results to be secured. I hope and expect to see a radical reform in this direction.

These were the words of a distinguished Senator uttered on April 10, 1909, just a little over 23 years ago. These words were uttered as a protest and as a warning because the expenditures of the United States Government had mounted to the sum of $865,886,828 in 1909. So we see that this great problem is not a new one. I wonder what Senator Aldrich would say to-day if he knew that the expenditures of the same Government are in this year of 1932 $4,482,153,400.

Many reasons are advanced to explain this tremendous increase in the cost of Government. I know that the excuse most commonly offered for this greatly increased expenditure is that we were engaged in the World War for a period of just a little more than 18 months, and that because of this participation in this, the most expensive war the world has ever known, our national expenditures are what they are to-day.

Granting the great increase due solely to the World War, there are other and more fundamental causes. We all know that one of the fundamental causes is the natural tendency to be extravagant with the taxpayers' money, and that another is that political expediency, which causes legislators to grant the constant and ever-increasing drains on the Public Treasury through the constant additions to the Federal departments, their increase in personnel, and their constantly expanding functions.

In an article entitled "Debts and Taxes," written by former President Coolidge and appearing in the Saturday Evening Post of March 26, 1932, the former President gives a brief, condensed statement of this subject, and, after showing that from 1913 to 1930 the amount of tax, per capita, increased from $22.66 to $83.21, he makes this very pertinent remark, that on this basis the ordinary family of five persons, directly or indirectly, was called upon in 1930 to contribute on the average $416.05 in taxes yearly. He states further:

> Not much thought has been given to curbing the cost of Government. The appetite of the Congress for spending and of special interests for receiving was insatiable. * * * The only permanent remedy, the only relief for high taxes is a reduction of public expenditures. Such a reduction must be made. Almost all our Government units have been taxing, borrowing, and spending beyond the means of the people to pay. Taxes are remaining unpaid. That causes forced sales of property and destroys values. The credit of many units is exhausted, so that no more money can be borrowed by them. The local governments, on the whole, have been the worst offenders and find themselves in the most serious difficulties. Nothing but drastic retrenchment will restore them to financial health. It will be a painful operation requiring a good deal of executive energy, but it can be done. Unless it is done, the suffering and want that will result are beyond estimation.
> The only remedy for the situation in which we find ourselves is an aroused public opinion.

These are the words of the distinguished former President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, it is my contention that the National Government should set an example for the States by curtailing drastically all expenditures of public money.

It is easier for the Congress to do this than it is for the States, counties, and municipalities. It is not my purpose to-day to discuss the causes of the increase of Governmental expenditures; but I do wish to call attention to certain savings that could be made in the current appropriation bill for the legislative branch of the Government.

As shown in the table below, the appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government have increased during the past 20 years from the sum of $13,468,828 in 1914 to $20,214,869 as recommended in the present bill.

Total appropriations legislative establishment, 1914–1933

1914	$13,468,828
1915	13,577,399
1916	14,034,240
1917	14,540,138
1918	16,865,770
1919	18,571,306
1920	17,637,215
1921	18,452,570
1922	18,704,639
1923	15,164,782

1924	$14,786,007
1925	14,648,136
1926	15,719,806
1927	20,159,979
1928	16,479,580
1929	18,969,913
1930	21,337,669
1931	29,520,710
1932	28,127,387
1933	20,214,869

From the above table you will see that these expenditures have increased a total of $6,746,041 during the past 20 years. You will find upon examining the records that in 1914 the Senate appropriation was $1,821,486, while in this bill it is $3,236,524, an increase of $1,415,038, or 77 per cent. In 1914 for the House of Representatives there was expended $5,011,756, while for next year $8,178,924 is the amount carried in the current appropriation bill, an increase of $3,167,168, or 63 per cent. During these 20 years there has been no increase in the membership of either of these branches of government.

In an effort to materially reduce the expenses of the legislative branch of the Government, on January 15, 1932, I introduced a bill, known as H. R. 7805, providing that the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice President of the United States, and the heads of the executive departments who are members of the President's Cabinet, shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum each, and the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from Territories, Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, and Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum each. If this bill is enacted into law, it will mean an annual saving of $1,400,000 of the taxpayers' money.

The average annual salary of the governors of the 48 States is $7,667. Excluding the four States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Illinois, the average annual salary of the remaining 44 States is $6,659.09. Contrasted with these salaries of the governors, we have Federal salaries far out of proportion to the service rendered. Most of the boards, bureaus, and commissions fostered by the Federal Government pay salaries of $12,000 or more per year. Some pay $18,000 per year, and the salary of the general counsel for the Federal Farm Board has recently been increased by that board from $10,000 to $20,000 per year. As stated before, I think these high salaries are far out of proportion to the services rendered and should be immediately reduced.

I believe all Federal salaries above $3,000 per year should be reduced, and particularly those above $5,000, and a limitation, as mentioned before, placed on all Government salaries, so that $10,000 per year will be the upper limit for all Federal salaries except that of the President and the Justices of the Supreme Court, and so that only the Vice President, the Speaker of the House, and the members of the President's Cabinet will be eligible to receive $10,000 per year. It seems to me no member or employee of any board, bureau, or commission should receive more than $7,500 per year, which, as I have heretofore stated, is approximately the average of the salaries now being paid to the governors of the States.

Because of my firm conviction that we must cut Government expenditures, and my sincere belief that this cut should begin here in the expenditures of the House of Representatives, I have prepared the following table showing "Suggested savings in the Legislative Establishment appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1933":

Suggested savings, Legislative Establishment appropriation bill, fiscal year 1933

If the total reductions listed above were put into effect there would be a saving of $3,766,766. If these suggested cuts were made in this legislative appropriation bill this total appropriation would be cut $16,448,103, to slightly less than what it was in 1928. In other words, I would eliminate the increase of the past five years in the expenditures in the legislative branch of the Government.

In conclusion may I call your attention to another side of this economy program.

During these uncertain times there is danger in practicing a sort of false economy; there is danger of being "penny wise and pound foolish." This I believe to be true of the suggested abolition of the Federal-aid funds for the teaching of vocational agriculture, vocational home economics, and vocational industrial training. These educational funds should be continued, at least so far as they are used to help pay the salaries of teachers. This money, which is used to pay the salaries of teachers of vocational agriculture and vocational home economics, meets a very vital need in the rural high schools of our country. The teachers who are employed under this so-called Smith-Hughes law are well trained. They must complete a course of special training before they are permitted to teach these vocational courses. They are employed for 11 months of the year, doing community work, supervising farm projects, and serving as rural leaders during the summer months.

The pupils who are enrolled in these vocational agriculture and home-economics courses are almost all farm boys and girls. As a part of the required work each boy carries on a home project where he applies in a practical way the things he learns in the classroom. The same is true of the girls in the home-economics classes, as well as in the vocational trades and industries classes in the cities. These young people are all being trained for a vocation. Many of them will never have the opportunity to go to college. Most of them will go directly from the vocational classrooms out into the work of agriculture, home making, or trades and industries. If you abolish the Federal aid for this work, the local communities will not be able to carry it on alone. If you fail to continue this comparatively small appropriation, you will be taking a big step backward in the work of educating our young citizens in a practical way for intelligent participation in their chosen vocations.

We have voted to appropriate two hundred and fifty millions to foreign countries through a moratorium of European war debts. Most of you voted $2,000,000,000 for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. A majority of us voted $120,000,000 for Federal aid for roads. Surely we will be most unwise if we fail to make available this eight or nine millions to be used for the vocational training of our boys and girls who are the most valuable asset this Nation possesses.

We must have economy; we must scrutinize carefully every Federal appropriation; but I hope you will ponder carefully the suggestions made by myself and others before you rob our boys and girls of the opportunity of obtaining vocational training. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the Appropriations Committee comes to the floor so suddenly and with so many changes that it is exceedingly difficult for the ordinary run of Member to keep abreast. I know it is quite a task to take an appropriation bill such as the Navy bill and go through it, because either the technical knowledge is lacking or the experience of the seasoned Members of this, may I say, hard-boiled committee is difficult to match.

Mr. Chairman, there is such a thing as overdoing, and I fear that this epidemic of economy is becoming a mania, an obsession, in the minds of some of our colleagues, and that there is now a race, a competitive pruning, for just who can blindly cut the most out of a bill.

First, we started last fall with the Budget Bureau, making a very careful survey of the requirements of every department and bureau, slashing and reducing the estimates of the departments, calling before them the department and bureau heads and agreeing on what we then believed was the lowest possible figure under which the departments could operate. The Budget Bureau's figure represented the lowest possible estimate compatible with efficiency and good government.

In the meantime Congress convened and the miracles which were expected did not take place, and the gamblers caused stock prices to go down a little bit and there was more cry for economy, and the great Committee on Appropriations got busy and they, too, started to cut. This is not said in criticism but as a narrative of the true story.

Then a few of the bills came before the House, and Members with pet hobbies came along and offered amendments and there were more reductions; and the bills went over to the Senate, and suddenly we heard that there would be an additional reduction in a straight horizontal slash of 10 per cent, and yesterday this House of Representatives voted on reductions in a bill about which it had no accurate knowledge and less information.

Gentlemen, you can not take any large business with various departments and expect it to function if there is not going to be some coordination and some correlation in the adjustment of reductions.

The gentleman from Tennessee yesterday frankly stated in response to a statement which I made that the Committee on Economy would proceed, regardless of reductions made by the House or the Senate. So we are going to be faced with the situation that the entire machinery of government may be impaired and hampered unless we come to our senses and coordinate these various economy activities.

Certainly it is not scientific, it is not wholesome, it is not sound legislation, it is not good government to have not less than 1, the Budget; 2, the Committee on Appropriations; 3, the House; 4, the Senate committee; 5, the Senate; and then the Executive himself, six different agencies cutting appropriations, without regard to what the other is doing but simply to satisfy a whim of some organized group of tax dodgers—respond to the demands of gamblers of the stock exchanges, seeking to confuse the issue and to divert public attention from their own misdeeds.

All these people want to cover up their own misconduct, get people interested in writing for economy, believing that if we disrupt the machinery of the Government they can go back to the old days of 1890, where dishonest business could do anything it wanted without any supervision or control and that, perhaps, it would not be necessary to pass another tax bill.

Why, Mr. Chairman, let the country know that we are going to have another tax bill, that it is impossible to avoid it at this time, and that the normal activities of Government can not and must not be curtailed.

I have said it so many times: Is it not peculiar that every appropriation bill we have there is always a particular agency of the Government, some regulatory power, some supervision, which is the target for economy?

Is there much economy in this bill? Is there any talk of reducing the pay or salary of the Naval officers in this bill? Not at all, except in one instance, which I shall allude to later.

In the plan submitted by the President he was careful to say that in abolishing automatic increase or increment, it would apply only to the civilian personnel. Why? The Army and Navy does not supervise monopolies or banks, it does not interfere with evil trade practices or the improper employment of child labor. So we have lost the cry of economy, in this wild drive that is going on, in the Army and Navy appropriation bills.

We saw what happened to the Bureau of Mines. The gentleman who just had the floor referred to the attempted cut in vocational education and rehabilitation. My Lord, has the Government sunk so low that we are going to exercise economy by striking out the appropriation to give defective, lame, and unfortunate persons an equal chance to get an American education?

Here is another example of the economy plan. Save $5,000,000 by making poor Filipinos 4,000 miles away pay for their own constabulary, which, I suppose is going to be collected at the point of the bayonet. Does it require any courage to suggest or vote for an economy of that sort?

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. OSIAS. The gentleman refers to the scouts, not the constabulary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. OSIAS. The scouts belong to the United States Army. The constabulary is a police organization under their own supervision.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I thank the gentleman. It was a slip of the tongue. The method is just as vicious. That is an example of the economies that are coming. Oh, I suppose some people would like to see the Pure Food Bureau of the Department of Agriculture abolished upon the plea of economy. Others would like to see the Comptroller of the Currency and all of his banking examiners done away with. Others would be glad to see the last of the Federal Trade Commission which has stepped on too many people's toes, and the railroads, I have no doubt, would be very glad to wind up the affairs of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the plea of economy. The bootleggers would like to see the Prohibition Bureau abolished, and I suppose they think they have a right to come in with all of these other law violators who do not want supervision. I ask my colleagues, Where is this all going to end? We want an opportunity to examine these appropriations, or not be compelled to accept them as they come from the other body. The greater the usefulness of the department, the greater the service, the greater the desire to impair their activities on the ground of economy. Yesterday in the Interior Department appropriation bill the greatest percentage of cut was in the Bureau of Education and the next I believe was in the Geological Survey.

Keep people ignorant, close down the high schools, refuse to disseminate education, tax the masses, with no restriction on monopolies or trade, and a few people will be happy. I suppose some gentlemen may claim honors for heroism in cutting $400,000 from that bill which had been provided for the great, but politically weak, Howard University.

In the present instance they have taken the most useful branch of the Navy and have reduced the pay. Just why this attack was made on the flying personnel, I do not know. For the same kind of spite in the name of economy, no doubt. Of the two branches of the naval service that are hit, one is aviation and the other is the submarine. I had something to do in a small way of course with both of these extra pay services. A few years ago the House will recall the disaster of the S–4, and the attention of the country being directed toward submarine service. Many of the Members took that opportunity to look into the submarine service, and it was the general consensus of opinion, I believe without any objection on the floor of this House, to allow increased pay for submarine service. That went through, it is my recollection, without any opposition and properly so. There is no more important branch of military defense than that of the air, and particularly of the Navy. We have provided from the very beginning of aviation for increased pay known as flight pay, and now it is suggested in this bill to reduce flight pay to a maximum of $1,100. If I should suggest anything like that, every paper in my city would say that LAGUARDIA is out to soak the rich.

Mr. AYRES. And how many rich are in the flying business right now?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. None. That is why I do not want to reduce them. I know the gentleman is sympathetic, and I thank him for his suggestion. I do not want to reduce the pay, even if it is the pay of an admiral, because we can not have a good flying corps in either the Army or the Navy unless we have good and efficient men at the top of it.

The morale depends upon the inspiration which comes from the top, and unless the commanding officer is a flying officer himself we are not going to have the proper morale in that branch of the Navy. It is absolutely unfair to come here and reduce the flying pay of everyone over a lieutenant of the junior grade, making the maximum flight pay $1,100. It is wrong; it is petty; it is unjust; it is not keeping faith with the Air Service. In the Military and Naval Air Service the pilots are paid less than they are in commerce. I have some comparisons here which I borrowed from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL], who has given this matter a great deal of thought and study. I have here a comparison between the pay of the Air Corps officers and pilots in commercial aviation. The pay of the pilots of the Boeing Air Transport was $781 per month, of the Pacific Transport $723 per month, and of the Varney Air Line $696 per month in May, 1931. These rates still continue. There is another company that runs on a short line from this city to another city that pays a flat rate of $500 per month; and, by the way, I know that they increased that a few days ago. There are other lines that pay a basic pay and a mileage allowance in addition.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. I wish the gentleman would explain to the House the increased cost of insurance to these aviators. That has not been reduced, although we are trying to reduce their pay. That is a large part of their budget.

Mr. GOSS. And it is extra for night flying.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; in addition to the rates I have cited, it must also be borne in mind that military flying is more hazardous than commercial flying. The preliminary training is the same, of course.

The advance training is the same, of course. The flying time is the same, of course; but at that point, after the commercial pilot goes through the advance course, what is known as acrobatics, he is through. That is what is known as stunt flying. That gives the pilot absolute control of his plane. What we call "stunts" is putting the machine through all sorts of maneuvers in order that the pilot may become the master of his machine. In other words, he is a part of that machine as he flies it. The military pilot must continue his advance flying or acrobatics all of the time because military maneuvers are absolutely dependent upon getting the advantageous position over the enemy.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. What reason is assigned for these special cuts in the submarine and Air Service?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, this mania of economy.

Mr. BLACK. Any other special reason?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; of course not.

Now, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] suggests the cost of insurance.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. In connection with the hazards of the military flyer, he has to fly at times in formation and with other planes, and those very intricate maneuvers are hazards which the commercial flyer never encounters.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly. This art is improving all the time, and the plane is being improved, but, gentlemen, it is the same old law of gravitation. If anything happens, down you come, and anyone who has had any experience in close formation knows the hazard that is there. It is true that they now fly tip to tip. The wings are tip to tip, and the slightest disturbance in the motor of any one plane or the slightest false movement means a collision.

Mr. YON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. YON. I agree with what the gentleman says, because I have one of the real naval aviation training stations in my district at Pensacola, Fla., and I have observed them in their flying at that station. I agree with what the gentleman has said, because it is really a dangerous service in the Army or the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. I yield the gentleman from New York three additional minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss], the additional premium for aviation risk is now $25 per thousand in one of the insurance companies, which permits only $10,000 worth of such insurance to be taken. The additional premium is $12 per thousand in another insurance company, which likewise permits only $10,000 worth of insurance to be taken, and permits no insurance of a pilot who has had less than 400 hours' experience. Insurance for aviators is not obtainable in most of the other companies. The average annual premium payments by Air Corps officers for straight life insurance are at the rate of $10 to $15 per thousand for $10,000 worth of Government insurance; at the rate of $15 to $20 per thousand on $30,000 private insurance, without extra premium for flying risk, and $10 to $25 per thousand additional premium for flying risk on $30,000 insurance in private companies, depending upon whether he took his insurance at the time when private companies were offering this insurance at $10 per thousand extra premium or whether he took his insurance at a later date. This makes a total of from $850 to $1,500 annual premium, depending on age. These are commitments already made in the understanding that flying pay would be continued. The commitments will still remain necessary, irrespective of the continuation of flying pay.

I want to appeal to the committee to give us an opportunity to bring this matter squarely before the House when we are reading the bill for amendment, and I hope that in the meantime the committee will reconsider and restore the flying pay as provided in the law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FULLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11452, the Navy Department appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GILLEN on account of important business.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed Senate Resolution 202, relative to the death of the Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on Tuesday next to move that the House stand in recess until 8 o'clock p. m., and that it shall be in order between the hours of 8 p. m. and 11 p. m. to consider bills on the Private Calendar, unobjected to, beginning at the point where the last call left off.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if we can not agree on a limitation of the debate on the Navy Department appropriation bill? I would like to ask the gentleman from Idaho how much time he thinks he will require on his side.

Mr. FRENCH. I have requests for about an hour and a half.

Mr. AYRES. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the Navy Department appropriation bill be limited to two and one-half hours.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

OUR FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein some figures from the Department of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, the statistics and information on our foreign trade just issued by the Department of Commerce are so important that I have sought this opportunity of including them in the RECORD that the American people may know how essential it is that our foreign commerce be preserved and expanded in every possible way, so that our great exportable surplus of both agricultural and manufactured products may continue to find markets and not be thrown back on our hands to increase the depression at home.

Texas is still shown to be the second largest exporting State in the Union.

In spite of most unfavorable conditions, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has done wonderful work not only in aiding our trade to resist the efforts of foreign nations to take our markets but in promoting the growth of our commerce wherever it has been possible to do so.

The Commerce Department stated on April 15, 1932:

> The United States maintained its position in 1931 as the world's leading export nation, with a total value of $2,423,759,000 for outgoing shipments, while Germany, which displaced the United Kingdom as the second in rank, showed a value of $2,192,850,000. Exports from the United Kingdom (including reexports) reached only $2,069,823,000 in value. All other countries showed much smaller totals, France, in fourth place, attaining a value of only $1,192,516,000.

The importance of our foreign markets to farming, mining, and manufacturing interests in every State of the Union is apparent from the tabulation showing the distribution of exports by States. Even in a year of profound depression and drastic price declines such as 1931 the value of our domestic exports amounted to $2,377,981,786, to which total every State and Territory contributed its share. Only six States had exports valued at less than $1,000,000, while 30 of the States exported merchandise to a value of $10,000,000 or more, and 12 of the latter did an overseas business of more than $60,000,000 each.

The significance of export trade to American labor is clear when one realizes that more than 1,400,000 workers, receiving more than one and one-half billion dollars in wages, were directly engaged in producing goods for export in 1931. Furthermore, there was probably an equal additional number employed indirectly in service activities and in supplying the needs of those engaged directly.

Many of us do not appreciate the fact that these benefits from foreign trade are by no means confined to the larger eastern sea-coast States. Texas, for example, had larger exports than any other State except New York. Its total exports of $324,000,000 represented nearly $200,000,000 in wages paid to labor directly engaged in producing cotton, petroleum products, wheat, flour, crude sulphur, and other commodities shipped from Texas to foreign countries. As further evidence of the significance of export trade in the economy of this State, it may be noted that the value of her exports last year was more than ten times as large as the total of personal and corporate income taxes paid by Texas to the Federal Government in the last fiscal year, while the profits on trade were in excess of the total of such tax payments.

Indiana, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas, to mention only a few of the States which are not commonly believed to be vitally concerned in foreign trade, had exports of from $10,000,000 to $30,000,000 in the depression year of 1931. In the aggregate these seven States exported goods valued at $141,000,000, the production of which is estimated to have involved the direct labor of more than 80,000 workers receiving $85,000,000 in wages.

Although the value of exports in 1931 was 37 per cent smaller than in 1930, this falling off was due in large part to the drastic price declines during the year. In actual quantity, exports declined 20 per cent, or only slightly more than the decline in domestic business.

Instead of having lost its foreign-trade prestige, as seems to be the impression in many quarters, the United States led the world in exports in 1931.

The following statistics are based upon States of original shipment given by shippers in export declarations, which are the only advisable source of export statistics. While not completely accurate as to the relative export ranking of the various States, they are published to meet the demand for statistics of this kind:

TEXAS EXPORT TRADE VALUED AT $324,370,164 DURING 1931

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Washington, April 15, 1932.

Exports of merchandise from Texas were valued at $324,370,164 during 1931, compared with $506,083,298 the previous year, according to statistics made public to-day by the Department of Commerce.

Unmanufactured cotton ranked first in value among the State's exports during the 12-month period amounting to $206,981,439 compared with $301,055,127 during 1930 and was followed in order by gasoline, $38,226,548 and $79,342,939; wheat, $10,394,605 and $23,361,046; lubricating oil, $9,571,308 and $12,787,418; illuminating oil, $9,442,222 and $18,183,590; crude sulphur or brimstone, $8,621,778 and $11,993,758.

Other leading exports with comparative values for 1930 were: Gas and fuel oil, $7,837,332 and $11,197,301; crude petroleum, $4,787,112 and $4,510,081; carbon black, $2,988,890 and $2,832,506; oil cake and oil-cake meal, $2,293,109 and $908,951; and rice $2,049,022 and $2,902,314.

Edible animals, meat products, lard, hides and skins, leather manufactures, corn, wheat flour, fresh vegetables, refined cottonseed oil, rubber and manufactures, inedible vegetable oils, sawed timber, paraffin wax, iron and steel scrap, brass and bronze, aircraft and parts, and well and refinery machinery were included among the diversified products sent from the State to foreign countries during the year.

Domestic exports from the United States by States from which shipped during the calendar year 1931. Arranged in order of magnitude, with comparative figures for years 1930 and 1929

SOLDIERS' ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, instead of taking up the time of the House, I desire to call attention to the arguments being advanced against the bill now before the Ways and Means Committee to expand the currency and pay off the soldiers' adjusted-service certificates.

I was very amazed this morning at the statement of one of the opponents of the bill [Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota] to the effect that its passage "would probably bring on a panic."

Just what he would call a panic I am unable to say. In fact, we are in the midst of the greatest panic this country has ever seen. Our people are in distress. Many millions of them are out of work and unable to find sufficient employment to earn their daily bread. Every city of any size has a bread line which seems to be growing longer as the days go by. Our railroads are virtually idle, factories are shut down, cotton is selling for less than 6 cents a pound—far below the cost of production—and wheat is selling on the farms of the West for less than 30 cents a bushel, while the prices of corn, hogs, cattle, and other agricultural commodities are proportionately depressed. The farms of this country, if put on the block and sold to-day, would not pay the bonded indebtedness that hangs over them, and many thousands of them are being sold for taxes. Yet the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] admonishes us that the passage of this relief bill to expand the currency and pay these adjusted-service certificates off might "bring on a panic."

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], in his argument before the Ways and Means Committee, opened with a recital of the generosity which this Government has manifested toward its veterans in the past, referring, of course, to the disabled veterans of the various wars through which this country has passed. We do not deny that. Nor do the veterans of the country deny that statement. But a vast majority of the holders of these adjusted-service certificates have never asked for or received disability compensation at the hands of this Government. He went back into the Revolutionary days and told how generous the Government has been toward the patriotic veterans of the Revolution, as if that has anything to do with the solution of the terrible depression in which we find ourselves to-day.

He said that we were using the veterans for the purpose of bringing about an expansion of the currency and, therefore, "an increase in commodity prices." In that statement he is, in part, correct. This bill has two objects, one of them is to pay the veterans what the Government owes them, and the other one is to expand the currency, increase commodity prices, melt our bread lines, restore the property of the country, and put an end to this unprecedented depression.

In other words, he admitted that this bill would bring about an advance in commodity prices, but seemed to be laboring under the erroneous impression that it would increase the cost of living to the laborers in the city districts, without corresponding benefits. In that last suggestion he is mistaken. In my opinion, those laborers who are out of work in the congested centers can not hope to secure profitable employment until there is an increase in commodity prices and the purchasing power of the farmers is restored. If this bill passes, in my opinion, it will not only benefit the veterans who receive the cash for their certificates, but the concensus of opinion is that it will cause the price of wheat to rise to the 1926 level of $1.50 or $2 a bushel. In other words, a farmer with a thousand bushels of wheat would also be benefited to the extent of from $500 to $1,000. The price of cotton would in all probability advance to 15 or 20 cents a pound, and the farmer with 10 bales of cotton would be benefited to the extent of $500 to $750.

The farmer with 1,000 bushels of corn would be benefited by approximately the same amount. All other agricultural commodities would rise, farm lands would resume their normal values, and the buying power of agriculture would be restored. Those people could then begin to buy clothes and food and machinery and other supplies that must be produced by the city laborers. That would start our factories running again, diminish unemployment, and at the same time, give our transportation systems something to haul Instead of benefiting only the veterans who hold these certificates it would benefit all the American people. It would do more to break this panic than anything else that has been proposed at this session of Congress—and something must be done!

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] admits that these veterans will never be called upon to pay the interest on the loans they have received on these adjusted-service certificates. That being the case, why not pay them off now? He answered his whole argument when he made that concession. He calls attention to the fact that, as he says, a large percentage of the veterans are employed by States, counties, and municipalities.

Of course, there are a certain number of veterans employed in a public capacity in every State of this Union, but that is no argument against this bill; and the only effect it could possibly have would be to stir up feeling against the ex-service men who responded to the country's call during the World War and who are now fortunate enough to hold such positions.

He also states—and I am following his argument and stressing these points in the order in which they were made—that the unemployment question will not adjust itself. With that statement I thoroughly agree. This panic is man-made. It is brought about by the abuse of official power and the distortion of the functions of government, and it is going to require the correction of those distortions on the part of Congress even to make it possible for these evils to be cured. Congress will have to go a step farther and give its positive and material support in order to check the ravages of the present decline and to start the country on the road to recovery.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] suggested in his argument that Members of Congress would come out for this bill for "unpatriotic reasons"—intimating that they would do so for political reasons. I submit that that insinuation is unjust and unfair, and I am surprised at its coming from the gentleman from New York.

Members who are supporting this bill are doing so for patriotic reasons. If we were as unjust to the opposition as the above statement is to the proponents of this bill, we might suggest that some of them are probably browbeaten into their position by the influences of a subsidized press.

As I have said before, this country is at war—a war against poverty, a war against hunger, a war against bankruptcy, a war to save our homes and to save American institutions. I wonder if the gentleman from New York, or anyone else, thinks that those of us who are fighting this battle would take the abuse, the maligning, and the vicious misrepresentations that are constantly heaped upon us by the agencies of predatory wealth if we did not feel that we are fighting in just as patriotic a cause as ever drove nations to war or inspired men on the battlefield.

Then, as a cure for our present ills, the gentleman from New York advocates the passage of his own bill—H. R. 2—which, stripped of all camouflage, is nothing but a dole, and would probably cost this country billions of dollars without bringing any appreciable measure of relief to the country as a whole. He says, "The dole saved England."

The truth of the business is that if England has been saved at all, it was because her statesmen had the wisdom and courage to expand or inflate her currency—even to the extent of suspending the gold standard. We do not have to suspend the gold standard, because we have sufficient gold to supply an ample reserve for the issuance of every dollar of the United States notes necessary to pay these certificates off.

Let us manifest the same courage that England's statesmen did, and instead of going backward to a dole, as Mr. LAGUARDIA would have us, and perpetuating this unbearable condition, let us pass this adjusted service bill to expand the currency and restore the property of all the American people. In other words, let us turn at once, as England did, from the dead past to the living future and catch step with the onward march of modern progress.

Mr. LAGUARDIA'S statement that this bill would not get 30 votes on a secret ballot is ridiculous. It is an unjustifiable reflection on the integrity of a majority of the Members of Congress who are whole-heartedly supporting this measure. We will not only get a majority on an open ballot, but, in my opinion, would even get more on a secret ballot, for we would pick up some weak-kneed Congressmen who tremble with fear at the power of a subsidized press.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, in addition to his prediction that the passage of this bill would "probably bring on a panic," predicted that it would depreciate the value of money, to quote his own words, "as it did during the Civil War." He was referring to the United States notes issued by Abraham Lincoln, $346,000,000 of which are in circulation to-day and are worth 100 cents on the dollar, even though they have less than 50 per cent gold reserve behind them. Of course, those notes depreciated during the Civil War. Robert E. Lee was just across the Potomac River with a powerful army that constantly threatened the capture of Washington. We face no such condition to-day, but we do face an army of 8,000,000 unemployed. They are not approaching with fixed bayonets, but are calling to us with outstretched hands to do something for their relief.

The question was asked this morning, Why not issue these notes to balance the Budget? My answer to that is that we could have done so and could do so yet, so long as we did not reduce our gold reserve below the 40 per cent requirement or expand our currency to an unnecessary degree.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] predicts the failure of this bill and says that "all that will come out of it is a tragedy of blasted hope." If this bill is defeated and no other similar measure takes its place, I agree with him that the result will be a "tragedy of blasted hope."

It will not only blast the hope of the millions of veterans who are asking their Government to pay them what is owing them, but it will blast the hope of more than a million veterans who are unemployed, who marched away to join the colors 15 years ago to preserve our institutions, make the world safe for democracy, and wage a war to end wars. It will blast the hopes of our unfortunate veterans who are to-day standing in bread lines as well as those of their hungry wives and children.

It will blast the hopes of the farmers of this country—the wheat growers, the corn growers, the cotton growers, and all others—who are now selling agricultural commodities below the cost of production and seeing their homes swept away for debts or seized to pay their taxes.

Yes; if this Congress fails in this perilous hour to pass a bill such as this, it will blast the hopes of all the American people for a speedy and complete recovery from this the greatest panic America has ever known.

THE LATE SENATOR WILLIAM J. HARRIS

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resolution from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Resolution 202

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 19, 1932.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep regret and profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of 15 Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. HARRIS, which shall take place in the Senate Chamber at 11 o'clock a. m. on Wednesday, April 20, 1932, and that the Senate attend the same.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect his remains be removed from Washington to Cedartown, Ga., for burial in charge of the Sergeant at Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect; and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives, transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased, and invite the House of Representatives to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations of the Navy, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard, to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber.

Resolved, That at the conclusion of the services in the Senate Chamber, the Senate stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday, April 21, 1932.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions:

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 198

Resolved, That the House of Representatives accepts the invitation of the Senate to attend the funeral services of the late Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS to be held in the Senate Chamber Wednesday, April 20, 1932, at 11 o'clock a. m., and that the committee appointed by the Speaker of the House to attend the funeral shall act in conjunction with the committee of the Senate to make the necessary arrangements.

Resolved, That upon the return of the House to its Chamber following the services in the Senate Chamber the Speaker shall, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator, declare the House adjourned.

Resolved, That when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 10.50 o'clock a. m.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

The resolutions were agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 20, 1932, at 10.50 o'clock a. m.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 20, 1932

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR HARRIS

The casket containing the body of the deceased Senator was brought into the Senate Chamber, escorted by the committee of arrangements of the two Houses and followed by members of the family and friends of the deceased Senator.

The members of the diplomatic corps entered the Chamber and were seated to the right of the Vice President.

The Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, preceded by the marshal and clerk, entered the Chamber and were seated in the area to the left of the Vice President's desk.

The Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard entered the Chamber and were seated in the area to the left of the Vice President's desk.

The Members of the House of Representatives, preceded by the Sergeant at Arms and the Clerk and by the Speaker, entered the Senate Chamber. The Speaker was escorted to a seat on the left of the Vice President, the Sergeant at Arms and Clerk were assigned to seats at the Secretary's desk, and the Members of the House were given the seats provided for them.

The President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, preceded by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, entered the Chamber and were seated in the area in front of the Vice President's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are here this morning to pay our respects to the memory of a man whom we all loved, a faithful representative of the people of his State, a man whose passing we all mourn. The Chaplain will conduct the services.

The Chaplain of the Senate, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., recited from the Episcopal burial office as follows:

I am the resurrection and the life, saith the Lord. He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die.

* * * * * * *

I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though this body be destroyed, yet shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another.

* * * * * * *

We brought nothing into this world and it is certain we can carry nothing out. The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

* * * * * * *

Lord, Thou hast been our refuge from one generation to another. Before the mountains were brought forth or ever the earth and world were made, Thou art God from everlasting and world without end.

Thou turnest man to destruction; again Thou sayest, Come again, ye children of men. For a thousand years in Thy sight are but as yesterday, seeing that is past as a watch in the night. As soon as Thou scatterest them they are even as a sleep and fade away suddenly like the grass. In the morning it is green and groweth up, but in the evening it is cut down, dried up, and withered. For we consume away in Thy displeasure and are afraid at Thy wrathful indignation.

Thou hast set our misdeeds before Thee and our secret sins in the light of Thy countenance. For when Thou art angry all our days are gone; we bring our years to an end; as it were, a tale that is told.

The days of our age are threescore years and ten, and though men be so strong that they come to fourscore years, yet is their strength then but labor and sorrow, so soon passeth it away, and we are gone.

O teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

Glory be to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

(St. John xiv, 1)

Jesus said, Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In My Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know. Thomas saith unto Him, Lord, we know not whither Thou goest; and how can we know the way? Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by Me.

(Romans viii, 14)

As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things? Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Here endeth the lesson.

Miss Helen Howison, of the city of Washington, sang "Lead Kindly Light":

Lead Kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead Thou me on!
The night is dark, and I am far from home—
Lead Thou me on!
Keep Thou my feet; I do not ask to see
The distant scene—one step enough for me.

I was not ever thus, nor prayed that Thou
Shouldst lead me on.
I loved to choose and see my path; but now
Lead Thou me on!
I loved the garish day, and, spite of fears,
Pride ruled my will; remember not past years.

So long Thy power hath blessed me, sure it still Will lead me on,
O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone;
And with the morn those angel faces smile
Which I have loved long since, and lost a while.

The CHAPLAIN. Let us pray.

O Merciful God and Heavenly Father, who has taught us in Thy Holy Word that Thou dost not willingly afflict or grieve the children of men; look with pity, we beseech Thee, upon the sorrows of these Thy servants for whom especially our prayers are offered. Look upon them with the eyes of Thy mercy. Comfort them with the sense of Thy goodness. Take them in Thine arms of love and mercy and deal ever tenderly with them. Lift Thou up the light of Thy countenance upon them and give them peace. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O Almighty God, who has knit together Thine elect in one communion and fellowship, in the mystical body of Thy Son, Christ our Lord, grant us grace so to follow Thy blessed saints in all virtuous and godly living, that we may come to those unspeakable joys which Thou hast prepared for those who unfeignedly love Thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O Lord, Jesus Christ, who by Thy death didst take away the sting of death, grant unto us Thy servants so to follow in faith where Thou hast led the way that we may at length fall asleep peacefully in Thee and awake after Thy likeness through Thy mercy, who liveth with the Father and the Holy Ghost, one God, world without end. Amen.

Almighty God, with whom do live the spirits of those who depart hence in the Lord, and with whom the souls of the faithful, after they are delivered from the burden of the flesh, are in joy and felicity, we give Thee hearty thanks for the noble and gracious example of this Thy servant, who, having finished his course in faith, now rests from his labors. And we beseech Thee that we, with all those who are departed in the true faith of Thy holy name, may have our perfect consummation and bliss in Thy eternal and everlasting glory. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, in whose embrace all creatures live in whatsoever world or condition they be, we beseech Thee for him whose name and dwelling place and every need Thou only knowest. Lord, vouchsafe him light and rest, peace and refreshment, joy and consolation in paradise, in the companionship of saints, in the presence of Christ, in the ample folds of Thy great love. Grant that his life may unfold itself in Thy sight and find sweet employment in the spacious fields of eternity.

If in aught we can minister to his peace, be pleased of Thy love to let this be. And so keep us from every act which may deprive us of the sight of Him as soon as our trial time is over or mar the fullness of our joy when the end of the day hath come.

Pardon, O Gracious Lord and Father, whatever is amiss in this our prayer, and let Thy will be done, for our will is blind and erring, but Thine is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Dear Lord, my will from Thine doth run
Too oft a different way;
I can not say "Thy will be done"
In every darkened day;
My heart grows chill to see Thy will Turn all earth's gold to gray.

My will is set to gather flowers,
Thine blights them in my hand;
Mine reaches for life's sunny hours,
Thine leads through shadow land;
And all my days go on in ways
I can not understand.

Yet more and more this truth doth shine
From failure and from loss;
The heart that beats transverse to Thine,
Doth thereby make its cross;
Thine upright will cuts straight and still,
Through pride and dream and dross.

But if in parallel to Thine
My will doth meekly run,
All things in heaven and earth are mine,
My will is crossed by none;
Thou art in me and I in Thee,
Thy will, and mine, are done.

We seem to give him back to Thee, dear God, who gavest him to us. Yet, as Thou didst not lose him in giving, so we have not lost him by his return. Not as the world giveth, givest Thou, O Lover of Souls! What Thou givest, Thou takest not away. For what is Thine is ours always, if we are Thine. And life is eternal; and love is immortal; and death is only a horizon; and a horizon is nothing save the limit of our sight. Lift us up, strong Son of God, that we may see further; cleanse our eyes that we may see more clearly; draw us closer to Thyself that we may know ourselves nearer to our beloved who are with Thee. And while Thou dost prepare a place for us, prepare us for that happy place, that where they are, and Thou art, we too may be. Amen.

And now, Lord, support us all the day long of this troublous life until the shadows lengthen and the evening comes and the busy world is hushed and the fever of life is over and our work is done. Then in Thy mercy grant us a safe lodging, holy rest, and peace at the last. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Miss Helen Howison sang the following three verses from the hymn "Abide With Me":

Abide with me! Fast falls the eventide;
The darkness deepens: Lord, with me abide!
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O abide with me!

I fear no foe with Thee at hand to bless:
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness,
Where is death's sting, where, grave, thy victory?
I triumph still, if Thou abide with me.

Hold then Thy cross before my closing eyes;
Shine through the gloom, and point me to the skies:
Heaven's morning breaks, and earth's vain shadows flee:
In life and death, O Lord, abide with me!

The CHAPLAIN. Unto God's gracious, tender, loving mercy we commit you. May the Lord bless you and keep you. May the Lord make His face to shine upon you and be gracious unto you. May the Lord lift up the light of His countenance upon you and all who are near and dear unto you both here and yonder. And grant to them and to you the blessing of his peace. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

At 11 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m., the funeral ceremonies having been concluded, and the family of the deceased Senator, the committee of arrangements of the two Houses, and the invited guests having retired from the Chamber—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the order of the Senate and, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator from Georgia, the Senate now stands adjourned until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 20, 1932

The House met at 10.50 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord God, our Everlasting Father, graciously be with all the Members of this Congress, and may their hearthstones be under Thy fostering care. Upon the masses of our people, down to the wanderers of the street, let Thy blessing come for their enrichment and for the good of our country. Merciful Father, Lord of all loveliness, as we pass through the floods and the flames of earth's experiences, Thou wilt give us the victory. Do Thou bring all mourning ones out of their tribulations and sanctify to them their distresses. Almighty God, when the light of our little day begins to tremble and we journey on through the dull twilight gray, until falls the silence of our earthly house, Father of infinite love, be there, in the memorable name of our Saviour. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. MCCORMACK (at the request of Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts), on account of important business.

Mr. MAY, for the remainder of the week, on account of important court engagements.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 8397. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

THE LATE SENATOR HARRIS

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the membership that in view of the fact certain seats have been reserved for the committee appointed to attend the funeral on the part of the House, that the committee immediately follow the Chair and the membership then follow the committee. The House will proceed to the Senate.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 51 minutes a. m.) the Members of the House proceeded to the Senate Chamber.

At 11.35 a. m. the Members of the House returned to the House Chamber.

ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER. In pursuance of the provisions of the resolution (H. Res. 198), the Chair, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Senator HARRIS, declares the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 37 minutes a. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 21, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

531. A letter from the acting chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, transmitting a copy of report of an investigation made by the United States Tariff Commission of the effect of the depreciation in value of foreign currencies upon the importation into the United States of mechanically ground wood pulp, chemical wood pulp, unbleached or bleached, and pulp woods; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

532. A letter from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting a copy of the commission's report in I. C. C. Docket No. 23400, Coordination of Motor Transportation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

SENATE

THURSDAY, APRIL 21, 1932

Rev. Joseph R. Sizoo, D. D., minister of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, within the shelter of whose love there is room for all perplexed minds, all burdened hearts, all disturbed spirits, we seek Thy presence and Thy favor at the opening of this day.

To none of Thy children hast Thou ever said, "Ye seek my face in vain." Throughout all the years Thou hast been our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble.

Sustain us with the assurance that the God of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps and that underneath and round about us are Thy everlasting arms.

This we pray through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar days of Tuesday and Wednesday last, when, on request of Mr. FESS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

IMPORTATIONS OF WOOD PULP (S. DOC. NO. 84)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the acting chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 95, a report of its investigation of the effect of the depreciation in the value of foreign currencies upon the importation into the United States of mechanically ground wood pulp, chemical wood pulp, unbleached, bleached, and pulpwoods, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Costigan	Jones	Shipstead
Austin	Couzens	Kean	Shortridge
Bailey	Cutting	La Follette	Smith
Bankhead	Dale	Lewis	Smoot
Barbour	Dickinson	Logan	Steiwer
Barkley	Dill	Long	Stephens
Bingham	Fess	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Black	Fletcher	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Blaine	Frazier	Metcalf	Townsend
Borah	Glenn	Moses	Tydings
Bratton	Goldsborough	Neely	Vandenberg
Brookhart	Gore	Norbeck	Wagner
Broussard	Hale	Norris	Walcott
Bulkley	Harrison	Nye	Walsh, Mass.
Bulow	Hastings	Oddie	Waterman
Byrnes	Hatfield	Patterson	Watson
Capper	Hayden	Pittman	Wheeler
Caraway	Hebert	Reed	White
Carey	Howell	Robinson, Ind.
Connally	Hull	Schall
Copeland	Johnson	Sheppard

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are detained from the Senate in attendance upon the funeral of the late Senator from Georgia.

I also wish to announce that the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] is necessarily detained from the Senate by illness.

I also desire to announce that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is absent in attendance upon the disarmament conference at Geneva.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON]? A few days ago, following a conference with the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], it was agreed that the Alabama senatorial contest should come up to-day immediately following morning business. At that time it was my thought that it should come up following the morning hour at 2 o'clock. There are several resolutions coming over from a previous day and some important matters on the calendar. A number of Senators have asked me to submit a unanimous-consent request that we postpone the consideration of the Bankhead-Heflin contest until 2 o'clock and that during the morning hour we have the usual morning business and a call of the calendar.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, that is quite agreeable to me. I quite concur that we may well use the time until 2 o'clock with other matters and take up the contest at that time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we had a unanimous-consent agreement that on yesterday at 4 o'clock p. m. we would take up a certain matter of proposed legislation. Of course, the adjournment of the Senate on account of the funeral of the late Senator Harris has done away with that agreement. I ask unanimous consent that the order which was fixed for 4 o'clock yesterday be made for 4 o'clock to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. First let the Chair submit the unanimous consent requested by the Senator from Oregon. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the unanimous-consent request, but I wish to say that I think the time has come when we must insist upon action on appropriation bills without very much more unnecessary delay. I think we could dispose of the pending appropriation bill in a couple of hours. At any rate, I am going to give notice that consideration must be given to the appropriation bills and we must not set them aside by unanimous-consent agreements again. Of course, I recognize that the contested-election case is of the highest privilege, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. McNARY. I may say to the Senator from Washington that it is my purpose to ask the Senate to remain in session on Saturday, which will expedite the consideration of the pending appropriation bill to a certain extent.

Mr. JONES. I am giving my notice about appropriation bills for the future, but the one pending, especially, I thought we might get through with to-day. Of course, any agreement made with respect to the matter to which the Senator from Nebraska has reference should be carried out.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we have made several agreements with regard to the bill to which I referred—a bill which, in my judgment, when it is considered, will receive the unanimous approval of this body. Ordinary common decency and judgment would impel us to enact the bill into law. Without reason it has been deferred and put off. As a matter of courtesy to the Finance Committee, after the Judiciary Committee had unanimously reported it, we let the bill go to the Finance Committee with the unanimous-consent agreement then made and entered into that it should be reported back to the Senate on a certain day. It did not come back on that day. It went over still further. It is only a matter of common courtesy that ought to be extended now. The bill would have been a law to-day if it had not been for these delays which have come about without any reason, I believe, and I think with an entire misunderstanding on the part of those who have been instrumental in bringing about the delay.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Nebraska is entitled to have early consideration of his proposal. It was only by an unfortunate and unexpected death that conditions made it necessary on yesterday for it to go over. I am perfectly agreeable to have its consideration follow the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I appreciate the importance of the measure to which the Senator from Nebraska addresses himself. I may say that it is my purpose to open the discussion of the Bankhead case.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not trying to interfere with that.

Mr. BRATTON. I would be perfectly willing at that time to lay the contested-election case aside temporarily in order to take up the measure sponsored by the Senator, but I do not want the contested-election case to lose its status.

Mr. NORRIS. We had a unanimous-consent agreement that we would take up Senate bill 929 yesterday at 4 o'clock. Of course, nobody can be blamed that that agreement was not carried out; under the circumstances everything of that kind had to give way. All I have asked is that the order fixed for yesterday be carried out to-day at 4 o'clock.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that can be done, as I suggested, to follow the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. NORRIS. Why not make the agreement now, then?

Mr. McNARY. Very well; I was willing to do that, and I have suggested an agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state the first request, and then the Chair will submit the request of the Senator from Nebraska. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon to postpone the contested-election case until 2 o'clock? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not understand what the request was.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request was to postpone until 2 o'clock the order made to take up the contested-election case immediately after the conclusion of morning business, so that there would be two hours this morning for morning business. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. Now the question is on the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRATTON. If the agreement shall be entered into, it will not displace the contested-election case; in other words, that case will retain its privileged status, will it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I am willing, if the Senator would prefer to do so, that he should proceed immediately, and then take up the other measure at the conclusion of his remarks, if that would suit him better.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I am thoroughly sympathetic with the bill of the Senator from Nebraska and was a member of the subcommittee that reported it. I am wondering, however, if we can not at the same time reach an agreement to limit debate on that measure to one hour. I do not think the debate will require very long. I agree with the Senator that the bill will probably be passed unanimously when it is discussed before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me state to the Senator I think that such an agreement could be made. I do not think the bill will take an hour, but it will necessarily take some time. Some amendments have to be considered, and also a communication from the Veterans' Bureau, and it will necessarily take me some time to answer the questions raised. I do not believe there will be any contest about the bill when I shall have answered such questions as may be raised; but if the debate were limited to an hour, the Senator must realize that we might get into a tangle at the end of the hour, when, perhaps, it might not be possible to explain something which would be very easy to explain if we had an opportunity.

Mr. BLACK. On the statement of the Senator from Nebraska I am not objecting, and I am not even offering to amend the request for unanimous consent; but, of course, we are anxious to proceed with the contested-election case as soon as possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska that the bill referred to by him, being Senate bill 929, may be taken up immediately at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to ask if it is understood that we will proceed with that measure until disposed of?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. I realize, and so does every other Senator, that if the time is limited it would be very easy for any Senator to prevent the passage of the bill by simply taking up time. The fact that there will be no limitation I think will expedite the passage of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

He also presented letters, in the nature of memorials, from sundry citizens and organizations, in the State of California, remonstrating against the imposition of proposed taxes on the automobile industry, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND BUSINESS DEPRESSION

Mr. BARBOUR presented a communication signed by J. Cheever Cowdin, New York City, N. Y., which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, April 7, 1932.

United action for employment and/or the war against depression are engaged in a movement of tremendous value to our country, to our less fortunate citizens who are out of work and suffering, and to business generally. There have been some serious, but natural, misunderstandings and differences of opinion among the sponsoring organizations, but these have been overcome primarily because of the worthiness of the movement and the keen desire to see the goal reached regardless of personal or organization feelings. These differences have, nevertheless, in my opinion, affected the efficiency of our efforts, but, notwithstanding, good results have been obtained, as nearly 500,000 people have been put to work since we started. I am convinced that as we go forward our experiences of the past will lead to the setting up of an organization which will avoid most of the difficulties heretofore encountered. I mention the above to clear the air.

The underlying fact remains that we are determined to do our part in serving our country in these troublesome times by putting back to work a really substantial percentage of those still unemployed, both for their own sakes and for the benefit of business generally throughout the country. We can not fail to be encouraged by the United States Department of Commerce figures showing for the first time in many long months that the curve of employment has turned upward.

There are, however, additional results that might be accomplished if we act together as real partners, but in which none of us could succeed individually. Our next steps should be:

First. Complete what we have already undertaken, namely, putting a million men and women to work who are now unemployed.

Second. Urge the adoption of an 8-hour day, eliminating overtime, and giving this present so-called overtime work to those now unemployed. I suggest this because word has come to us from many quarters that concerns have lengthened their working hours to 10 and even 12 hour days.

Third. Advocate the staggering of work wherever possible all over the country.

Fourth. Undertake a national campaign for the establishment of a 6-hour day and a 6-hour pay, which would, of course, result in placing vast numbers at work when accomplished.

Fifth. There has been a great deal of discussion as to the wisdom of National and/or State building programs. Most of the opposition to these proposals has been predicated on the belief that the projects were not needed, that the work would create huge additional debts which would have to be paid for by increased taxes, and that much of the money would not actually go into the work itself.

I believe that these objections might be overcome if, acting as a unit, we backed the proposals with the understanding that each project be made self-supporting eventually by means of a toll, whether for a bridge, road, or canal, or something else. Each project, however, must be judged by its economic necessity as well as by the number of people who would receive employment as a result thereof. Equitable means must also be devised for the payment of only reasonably small profits, to the end that as much as possible of the moneys would actually go into work and employment and that it be expended, as far as possible, without political considerations.

All building projects now in the Treasury and other governmental departments, for which appropriations have already been made, should be immediately put into construction without waiting for blue prints of every detail.

It is easy to believe that a carefully worked out plan would create four or five billion dollars of profitable work over the next two years, divided proportionately among the States. If each project is made to stand on its own feet by passing the above requirements we would not need to fear the burden of future taxes. It should be recalled that in the late war over $20,000,000,000 of bonds were issued for a crisis, certainly not greater than our existing crisis, and without thought of whether taxes would or would not be increased. To control such constructive undertakings an independent board should be formed, composed of outstanding business men of the country, engineers, lawyers, National and State Government representatives, as well as members of your organizations and of such other organizations as may join.

I believe that if such a plan were carried out it would overcome most objections and would have the confidence of the country, and that it would enable the necessary financing to put well over a million people to work promptly. I appreciate that it will require time to complete such a program, and it would need united action by the great organizations having large membership throughout the country. I would, therefore, recommend inviting into active partnership every organization of size and standing in the country.

Sixth. Urge the substitution of State rights for our existing prohibition laws, with a view of allowing the manufacture and sale of beer and wines. In addition to the large numbers who would receive employment an important factor would be the revenues the Government would receive as well as putting a stop to much of the lawlessness prevalent to-day throughout the country as a result of the profit realized through lawbreaking.

As I view the subject, the prohibitionists have been well organized and amply financed, while the antiprohibitionists have not; but it is my belief that if the respective organizations, which I understand have already gone on record for modification, would get together and, acting in unison, join with such other organizations having the same views, such as the Crusaders, bar associations, engineers, and the many others, I believe you could secure the money necessary to finance a country-wide fight in every county of each State; and with a combined membership totaling probably 10,000,000 you would produce for the first time an overwhelming vote against prohibition, after which I believe we would have few so-called "dry" Members left in Congress.

We all know that what is everybody's business is nobody's business. I would therefore urge the establishment of a separate, properly officered unit for this particular objective, under which you would each be represented as well as such other organizations as might join you. There could then be set up the proper and complete State and even city organizations with ample funds at their disposal to work for the reelection of those so-called "wets" and the defeat of the so-called "drys" without relation to politics or affiliations with any party. Simply one question, "Are you wet?" "If so, we will support you. If not, we shall oppose you."

There are a large number of organizations working independently along the same lines, as well as many existing commercial and civic organizations which have already expressed themselves in favor of a change, most of whom would, I believe, be willing to join an impartial group to accomplish this end either at the coming conventions or at the polls in November. The success of this movement would place several hundred thousand men back at work promptly; but, again, it needs unselfish, united action.

The conditions of our country economically, politically, and socially are such as to demand the immediate action of all real Americans before it is too late, and I recommend an immediate meeting to discuss and decide ways and means of carrying out such of the above suggestions as you may deem wise.

Mr. Carl Byoir joins the undersigned in recommending the above as our next objective.

Respectfully yours,

J. CHEEVER COWDIN.

REDUCTION OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ODDIE presented a communication in the nature of a memorial from Frederic H. Lahee, president of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, Tulsa, Okla., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TULSA, OKLA., April 6, 1932.

The American Association of Petroleum Geologists, representing geologists of 43 States, assembled in annual convention, has heard with regret of the proposed reduction of appropriations for the Department of the Interior and the Department of Commerce, which presumably affects the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines. The delegates to this convention are unanimously of the opinion that any reduction of the helpful activities of the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines during this period of economic stress will be harmful to the proper development of the country's resources. As petroleum geologists, we believe that the unrestricted services of these bureaus are essential to effective development of our natural resources and their wise conservation.

FREDERIC H. LAHEE,
President American Association of Petroleum Geologists.

APPROPRIATION FOR CUSTOMS STATISTICS

Mr. ODDIE also presented a letter from V. G. Lumbard, chairman Tanners' Council of America, and president Calf Tanners' Association, of Girard, Ohio, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE OHIO LEATHER CO.,
Girard, Ohio, April 19, 1932.

Hon. TASKER L. ODDIE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This has to do with the appropriation for customs statistics, which is provided for in the appropriation bill covering State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments.

This appropriation bill passed the House on February 25 and was reported to the Senate on March 9. As I understand it, it will be taken up by your honorable body this week.

Recent appropriations for custom-statistics service have run about $385,000. The House bill cut this to $360,000, and the bill, as reported to the Senate by the Appropriations Committee, cuts this appropriation to $250,000. A cut, in other words, from recent appropriations of about $135,000.

I need hardly enlarge to you here upon the very great importance of the most complete and best possible custom statistics, and, of course, it will be evident to you that such a cut as this will inevitably be reflected in the statistics of imports which the Government will be able to compile and publish. I am informed that the proposed cut in this appropriation will mean that the Custom Statistics Division will have to dispense with the services of more than 50 clerks and assistants. This will give you an idea of the manner in which this very important statistical service will have to be curtailed.

It is, of course, inevitable that this appropriation will have to be cut some. It would be unreasonable to insist in these times that the old appropriation stand; but in view of the importance of this service to manufacturers, industry, and agriculture, it seems to me we should do everything we can to keep the cut from being an unreasonable one, such as I believe the $135,000 figure to be.

When future tariff bills are being written import statistics are of vital importance for proper information not only to Congressmen and Senators, but also to all industry.

As chairman of the board of the Tanners' Council of America, representing 165 companies, and president of the Calf Tanners' Association, representing 22 companies, with our industry producing products valued at over $600,000,000 and threatened with competition from European countries producing similar products to our own, manufactured with the payment of depreciated currencies, we to-day practically have very little protection, so these statistics are of vital importance to us.

Anything you can do to preserve the efficiency of the custom statistical service will be very much appreciated.

Yours very truly,

V. G. LUMBARD,
Chairman Tanners' Council of America,
President Calf Tanners' Association.

PROPOSED REDUCTION OF GOVERNMENTAL SALARIES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am daily in receipt of many, many telegrams, and doubtless other Senators are also daily receiving many telegrams. Those which I receive are almost too numerous to admit of prompt reply, and I am embracing this method of letting my constituents—at least those who receive the RECORD—know that my failure, promptly to reply, is not caused by indifference on my part. I have received one to-day that I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., April 21, 1932.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

We, a committee of business and professional citizens of Phoenix, do hereby protest against hasty, ill-considered, unreasonable, and general slashes in pay of Government employees predicated on the assumption that such wage and salary cuts will materially relieve present economic distress of the Nation or contribute any considerable improvement in business and industry.

Pay reductions can do no more than lower the standards of living, reduce buying power, and increase unemployment. The stagnated copper-mining industry of Arizona and of the Nation is a glaring example of the deplorable effects now being suffered as a result of curtailments of production, employment, and pay made for the purpose of returning prosperity to an industry and its workers. We believe in the honest protection and encouragement of the industries of the Nation for the increase of employment, as a means of restoring prosperity rather than running the danger of further straining business industry, the salaried worker, and the wage earner in the hope that somehow or other prosperity will be returned by means other than employment at a living wage. The Government would set a dangerous precedent by making any unwarranted reduction in pay. A mania of wage cutting would result, and our economic situation would surely become greatly aggravated. We are not opposed to true economies, and by this we mean such adjustments as will assuredly benefit and not oppress the people. Critical days require cool heads and strong hearts, intelligent and fair consideration, and unwavering action for the welfare of the Nation in general and the people of Arizona in particular.

We earnestly urge you to guard against specious contentions and work actively and agrressively against pay-reduction schemes mistakenly proposed as remedies for our economic ills. We put our trust in Arizona congressional delegation that this message shall be carried to Congress and to the President.

Edward Dorsey, pharmacist; George Eberle, automobile service; Mrs. A. H. Hammer, publisher; Vic Hanny, clothier; P. R. Helm, manager; A. L. Higgins, clerk; O. H. Johnson, editor; Harry Kay, realtor; Dr. Eugene McGuire, dentist; Harry Robertson, manufacturer; George T. Wilson, lawyer, Citizens' Committee on Economic Stabilization.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Arizona addressing the Senate for a moment? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senate will bear out my assertion that I have aggressively and actively opposed reductions in the salaries of Government employees. The telegram which has just been read is signed by a number of representative citizens of the State of Arizona.

It is the philosophy of defeat, the philosophy of gloom, of despair, of pessimism, and dejection that would seek to reduce salaries at this time. One year ago a Cabinet member suspected to having given out an interview in which it was stated that it might be appropriate to reduce salaries was excoriated over this country, until he announced that he had given no such interview; that he was not the type of reactionary who in a time of national distress and unemployment believed in increasing unemployment by reducing salaries.

So, Mr. President, for the tenth or eleventh time I appeal to Senators not to take counsel of gloom, despair, dejection, and defeat, but to take counsel of progress and success; to believe in America. When the Senate of the United States lowers its flag and announces we have reduced salaries, every industry in America will do likewise and will have the Government for its prototype and for its example.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator, and then I will yield the floor.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Agreeing with what the eloquent Senator from Arizona has just stated, I desire to ask the Senator if he is aware that the 10 per cent cuts in the appropriation bills are now needlessly and unexpectedly being used to effect reductions in salaries in various departments of the Government, regardless of the proposed salary-cut bill?

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator for the question. I am able to say that I know of instances where employers of labor will announce a reduction of salaries and wages, and in their announcement state, "Following and emulating the example of the Congress in reducing pay, we likewise reduce pay."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram in the nature of a petition presented by the Senator from Arizona will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent to have read a telegram which I just received, because it pertains to the same subject referred to by the Senator from Arizona.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 19, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington:

Our men are becoming anxious, depressed, and worried about the continued agitation for salary reduction. Many of them now have additional family obligations as a result of the depression, and none of them can afford the serious consequences of the proposed application of the Hoover plan, which would in effect mean a reduction of several hundred dollars. In fact, any salary reduction would be a hardship, and it is manifestly unfair to those who have served faithfully through many years while they were woefully underpaid. The Government should be the last to lower the American standard of a livelihood, and your efforts in our behalf have been and will be continued to be appreciated. I would also appreciate any word from you that might help to restore the spirit of our boys.

HENRY J. ZIEHR,
Railway Mail Association.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegram in the nature of a petition presented by the Senator from New York will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

PROPOSED DUTY ON SULPHATE OF AMMONIA

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have had long-distance telephone calls and telegrams protesting against what seems to be a proposed action on the part of some manufacturers in this country relating to sulphate of ammonia, which has now largely superseded and is being used instead of nitrate of soda. Sulphate of ammonia is an ingredient which is absolutely essential to the production of grain and food crops. I understand that these manufacturers are appealing to the tariff authorities to invoke the antidumping clause; that is, to apply the tariff, several dollars per ton, on foreign importations.

It seems that the domestic producers of this ingredient, on which we have been working for so long, largely taken from the air, have revolutionized the price. I understand there is to be a meeting to-morrow morning in the Treasury Department, in the office of the Under Secretary, to hear a complaint of the domestic manufacturers about the importations of the foreign article. The domestic men, I understand, have practically withdrawn from the market, and therefore we are dependent upon importations; and to place upon the already overburdened farmer at this time a tariff on what is essential for the production of his crops would be a disgrace to America.

I ask to have two telegrams and a letter bearing on this subject incorporated in the RECORD, and I hope that those who are interested in the welfare of the agricultural interests of this country will take cognizance of the meeting to-morrow morning.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 21, 1932.

Hon. ELLISON D. SMITH,
United States Senate:

Commissioner of Customs, Treasury Department, calling meeting Friday, 10 a. m., on foreign sulphate ammonia. Urge you oppose assessment of any duty as this for agricultural use.

MOLONY & CARTER CO.

ANDERSON, S. C., April 21, 1932.

Hon. ELLISON D. SMITH,
United States Senate:

Our letter 4th concerning antidumping duty sulphate ammonia. Understand Commissioner Eble calling meeting at office Under Secretary of Treasury 10 a. m. to-morrow for hearing on this matter. Extremely important southern interests be represented. Will appreciate your attendance this meeting. If this duty levied, price this important fertilizer material will be raised nearly 50 per cent. If can stop this increase, you will render great service to farmers this State.

ANDERSON FERTILIZER CO. (INC.).

COWPENS, S. C., April 13, 1932.

ELLISON D. SMITH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SIR: I know the Senate is taxed to the limit with investigations of various kinds; but, to my mind, we have a proposition of concerted national importance slapping us in the face now; that is, the sulphate of ammonia situation. The brokers have withdrawn their prices now just when the demand is most pressing, and, of course, when the prices reopen they will be higher, more in line with nitrate of soda, which is beyond our reach to purchase, and all of the parts connected with it.

Let's see if we can't get the ball to rolling at once and see where in the d—— that negro in the woodpile is.

With kindest regards for you and your interest, I am,

Yours truly,

A. H. SMITH.

A MARYLAND BUSINESS MAN'S VIEW OF TAXATION

Mr. ODDIE obtained the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the clerk to read a paragraph from a letter I received this morning from a business man living in a small Maryland town. It has so much common sense and humor in it that I think at this stage it would be appropriate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

We are strong for any tax that will fall on the other fellow, and for the reduction of salary or elimination entirely of any job that is not held by some of our friends, or our friends' friends, but let any proposition be made at Washington looking toward reducing any salary or eliminating any job, or cutting out any pension which hits any member of our society, fraternal organization, etc., especially the bridge club and the ladies' club, and there will be a howl which is quite likely to extend as far as Washington, and quite possibly result in an increase in your mail, and possibly visiting list, with a telegram or so for good measure.

LETTER FROM THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY TO CHAIRMAN ODDIE

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the morning hour a Senator who has a petition to present can not yield to other Senators.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I have received a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury which is of great importance to the Senate. So I will send it to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the letter?

Mr. ODDIE. I will ask permission, Mr. President, after the reading of the letter to comment on its essential features for five minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a question for the Senate. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada that the letter be read and that he may have five minutes in which to explain it?

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have no desire to object; but, so far as I am concerned, I have other official matters that demand my attention, and I should like to see the order of business proceeded with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair just held that a Senator can not yield to other Senators during the morning hour; but, if an exception is going to be made in one case, the Chair thinks that the Senator from Texas ought to be treated in the same way and a like courtesy be extended to him. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada that he be permitted to have read the letter referred to by him and to have five minutes in which to explain it? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, before the letter is read I desire to state that on Monday the Senate passed the McKellar resolution ordering the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill to be sent back to the committee for a cut of 10 per cent below the House figures.

I have asked the Secretary of the Treasury to inform me as to where these cuts could be made with the least possible damage to the public service, and this letter is in response to my request. I desire to state at the outset that there are several statements in the letter with which I can not agree. I ask to have it read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

LETTER OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE IN CHARGE OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL FOR 1933

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 20, 1932.

Hon. TASKER L. ODDIE,
Chairman of the Subcommittee in Charge of the Treasury Department Appropriation Bill, United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I understand that I am to appear before your subcommittee on Friday next in connection with the provisions of the resolution adopted by the Senate on April 18 directing a flat reduction in the amount of appropriations for the Treasury Department as at present contained in the appropriation bill, exclusive of the provisions for building and construction.

It occurs to me that the subcommittee may desire to have the views of this department for consideration and study prior to my appearance, and that it may be advantageous, if you deem it desirable, to insert this letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I appreciate the opportunity afforded me to be heard, not only as the head of the Treasury Department but as representing a great body of faithful and efficient public servants who have a vital interest in a sound solution of this problem.

The flat 10 per cent cut would effect a saving of approximately $14,000,000. I am prepared to indicate how savings in excess of this amount can be effected without impairment of the efficiency of the department and without necessitating the dismissal of thousands of necessary employees.

I am informed that the Senate has not considered as yet the effecting of the 10 per cent reduction by the use of a 5-day week for per diem employees and of a month's furlough without pay for employees on an annual basis, as suggested by the President.

I recommend, therefore, that such a provision be written into this appropriation bill, whether or not the Senate adopts the flat-cut method. The furlough plan is of itself a sound measure of economy. If the flat-cut method is to prevail, the furlough is essential to mitigate the hardships incident to this program. Legislation is clearly necessary if the furlough without pay is to apply, for I have grave doubts as to whether, without Congressional sanction, the Executive could legally and properly effect what would be a modification of the salaries provided for by the Congress in the classification act.

I recommend further that an amendment be adopted providing that not to exceed 15 per cent of any one appropriation may, with the approval of the Director of the Budget, be transferred to any other appropriation or appropriations under the same department.

I recommend that in view of the pending revenue bill the Internal Revenue Bureau be in any event excluded from the 10 per cent cut provision, though it should be included in any furlough provision.

I recommend that for the year 1933 the contracts covering certain building projects be not let, as indicated in my letter of March 29.

No one is more vitally concerned in reducing the cost of government than the head of the Treasury Department, responsible for conducting the fiscal affairs of the Nation in a time of great difficulty when our every effort must be directed toward balancing the Budget and maintaining the public credit. Economy is essential. But it should be constructive economy achieved through the elimination of waste, the curtailment of unnecessary activities, the postponement of projects not now essential to the public welfare, and the promotion of greater efficiency. An arbitrary cut applying uniformly and without discretion to every bureau and activity alike irrespective of its importance and irrespective of its efficiency or ability to bear the cut is not businesslike, and as I shall show, may not even be economy.

Our total appropriations aggregate $146,311,988, exclusive of the public-building item. Of this amount, $112,306,402 is for personnel service, representing nearly 77 per cent of the total, and $34,005,586 is for supplies, equipment, and miscellaneous expenses, representing about 23 per cent of the total. Of this last-mentioned amount, more than $11,000,000 is for construction, equipment, and operation of public buildings; over $7,000,000 for maintenance and operation and repairs of Coast Guard vessels and stations; and approximately $5,500,000 is for rent, travel, etc. Over $1,000,000 of the $34,000,000 represents pensions to retired Coast Guard officers and men. It is apparent that there is no economy in curtailing the adequate maintenance of public buildings and public vessels, and the amount to be squeezed out of the $34,000,000 short of inefficiency and neglect, is small. The bulk of this reduction, then, must be met by a reduction in personnel, unless you adopt a 5-day week and some such furlough plan as that suggested by the President. Provision for the furlough plan should be written into this bill. The alternative is a shocking one.

As nearly as we can estimate, without the furlough the 10 per cent cut in the appropriations for personal service would mean the dismissal of upward of 6,000 employees—nearly 80 per cent of whom are stationed outside of Washington.

I am not talking about place holders. I am not talking about political appointees, for practically all of the employees of the Treasury Department are appointed from civil-service lists. I am talking of 6,000 men and women whose services are needed; who have, generally speaking, decided to devote their lives to the public service, and who would in times when it is impossible to find another job be turned out on the street by the Government of the United States.

The President, in conjunction with the Economy Committee of the House, has worked out a national economy program, which, as it stands to-day without such further study as you gentlemen may care to give it, promises a saving in excess of that which it is proposed for all departments by the method of a flat cut without impairment of Government efficiency and without the intolerable hardship which dismissal would inflict on thousands of American families.

A flat cut applied to every bureau of the Treasury Department, without a furlough provision and without granting any discretion to the Executive as to where the savings can best be made, will not save money, but will cost more than the amount saved. It surely can not have been overlooked that the primary duty of the Treasury Department is the collection of the public revenues. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue informs me that a 10 per cent flat reduction for his bureau would have to be effected largely by the reduction of his field force. To give somewhat extreme, but nevertheless pertinent illustrations, the commissioner advises that if this reduction were effected by reducing the number of deputy collectors throughout the country, it would mean dispensing with some 1,300 deputy collectors. The average amount of additional tax recommended by each of these employees for the past fiscal year was $40,812. Assuming that the full amount of the tax recommended could be collected, on the face of it the reduction in the force of deputy collectors might result in a loss of over $50,000,000.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue further informs me that if a 10 per cent reduction in the appropriation for his bureau is to be effected through reducing the force of internal-revenue agents, an even greater loss of revenue might result. The average salary and expenses of revenue agents as of March 31, 1932, was $3,716. The average amount of additional tax recommended by each revenue agent for the past fiscal year was $105,000. Assuming that only 50 per cent of this tax was assessed and collected, in order to save $3,716 in salary and expenses we would sacrifice $52,500 in taxes. Assuming that 906 of these productive officers were dismissed, the amount of additional taxes recommended on the basis of the past fiscal year might be reduced by $95,000,000.

On July 1, 1932, the Treasury Department, in all probability, is to undertake the collection of over a billion dollars of additional taxes; some of them new taxes, others at rates high enough to invite evasion. We can not enforce the new law and collect these taxes without increasing our force. Yet if this resolution is carried out without modification, we are to attempt this new and difficult task with a reduced and demoralized force.

In my letter of March 29 to Senator JONES I pointed out that if an arbitrary reduction were to be made in the amount of the Treasury appropriations, a businesslike and effective way of making the saving would be to suspend the letting of contracts for a number of post-office buildings throughout the country. At that time the 5-day week and furlough plan had not been worked out. The Senate resolution specifically excludes any savings along this line. It is pertinent to observe that if towns and cities throughout the country have gotten along with their existing post-office facilities up to the present time, they surely can during these trying days wait a year or two longer for a new building of a monumental character. What is sacred about a new post office in times like these?

I know that it is urged that the building of $14,000,000 worth of post offices will give employment. It will give some employment, but surely this employment should not be secured through throwing out of employment more than 6,000 men and women. These dismissals will have to be made in spite of the valuable services performed in the past; in spite of reasonable expectation of continuance in service because of fidelity and efficiency, and in spite of the difficulty, if not the impossibility of finding other employment enabling those who have served the Government to continue to live and to take care of their families.

You can save these people from misery, maintain the efficiency of this department, protect the collection of the revenues, and still effect the savings which you have in mind by following the President's program and the lines indicated in my letter of March 29, foregoing for a year or two the construction of some post offices.

Sincerely yours,

OGDEN L. MILLS,
Secretary of the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to announce that the Senator has only five minutes.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury has very clearly pointed out the only alternatives open in this matter—either adopting the suggestion of the President in regard to the furlough without pay and the 5-day week, or decreasing the efficiency of the Treasury Department to such an extent that possibly $90,000,000 of revenue will be lost. Secretary Mills has pointed out that about 6,000 faithful, efficient, and useful men and women will have to be thrown out in the street if the 10 per cent cut is made without the furlough.

Mr. President, I can not bring myself to believe that creating the policy of the furlough and the 5-day week is the practical, right thing to do. I do not favor it. It will result in reduction of wages to a very large extent. This reduction in wages will have a damaging and discouraging effect on our country. I do not think it should be adopted. I believe we can get through better without it. I am not in agreement with the Secretary's opinion in respect to the Senate's action in eliminating the building program from the 10 per cent cut. Eliminating the building program from the 10 per cent cut will save a great deal to American labor and to American industry, and prevent a vast amount of suffering and a large increase in the ranks of the unemployed.

I have led the fight in the Senate against the 10 per cent reduction. I believe this cut is unwise and destructive. On April 6 I made a detailed analysis on the floor of the Senate of the effect of the proposed 10 per cent cut in the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill, and showed the damaging and destructive effect of the cut and vigorously opposed it as I have on the floor of the Senate numbers of times since. The Senate voted for the 10 per cent cut on April 18. I did my best to prevent it. I am compelled to accept the decision of the Senate and I will do my best in the matter. I want, however, to stress the grave consequences of putting this policy into effect. It will mean the crippling and demoralizing of the Treasury Department's working force to such an extent that the revenues to which the Government is entitled for carrying on its activities will be curtailed to a very large extent. This loss in revenue will be many times the amount saved by the 10 per cent cut.

Mr. President, I feel it my duty to call this letter to the attention of the Senate, and to state that while I agree with the Secretary as to the destructive influence of these cuts on the operation of his department, I differ with him as to the advisability of curtailing the Federal building program.

REPORTS OF THE PUBLIC LANDS COMMITTEE

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 4029. An act to restore homestead rights in certain cases (Rept. No. 578);

S. 4165. An act to remove existing discriminations incident to certain land grants and to subject them to the same conditions that govern other land grants of their class (Rept. No. 579);

S. 4416. An act to provide for the transfer of certain school lands in North Dakota to the International Peace Garden (Inc.) (Rept. No. 580); and

H. R. 5603. An act to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the State of Minnesota of lot 4, section 18, township 131 north, range 29 west, in the county of Morrison, Minn. (Rept. No. 581).

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10495) amending an act of Congress approved February 28, 1919 (40 Stat. L. 1206), granting the city of San Diego certain lands in the Cleveland National Forest and the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation of water, and for other purposes, so as to include additional lands, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 582) thereon.

Mr. CUTTING, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 3953) to amend the act approved February 7, 1927, entitled "An act to promote the mining of potash on the public domain," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 583) thereon.

ALABAMA SENATORIAL CONTEST

Mr. HASTINGS, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, submitted the views of the minority relating to the contest of J. Thomas Heflin v. John H. Bankhead for a seat in the Senate from the State of Alabama, pursuant to Senate Resolutions Nos. 467 and 485, Seventy-first Congress, which were ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 568.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF THE POST OFFICE COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters, which were ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HATFIELD:

A bill (S. 4436) to amend section 305 (a) of the tariff act of 1930, and sections 211, 245, and 312 of the Criminal Code, as amended; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 4437) granting a pension to Nellie Fredericks (with accompanying papers); and

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 4442) granting a pension to Jack E. Teele (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 4443) for emergency relief of Palo Verde Valley, Calif.; to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I introduce a bill relating to the subject of releases of trustees in the District of Columbia and desire to substitute the bill for a bill on the same subject which I introduced earlier in the session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

By Mr. BLAINE:

A bill (S. 4444) to provide for recording of deeds of trust and mortgages secured on real estate in the District of Columbia, and for the releasing thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 4445) authorizing the President to transfer and appoint Lieut. (Junior Grade) Arnold R. Kline, United States Navy, to the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), Supply Corps, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LOGAN:

A bill (S. 4446) granting a pension to Price V. Hendricks; and

A bill (S. 4447) granting a pension to John M. Roundtree; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CONNALLY:

A bill (S. 4448) to decrease the interest rates on adjusted-compensation loans; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 4449) for the relief of Walter Acker, jr.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 4450) for the relief of Alice F. Martin, widow, and two minor children; and

A bill (S. 4451) authorizing officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to accept awards of decorations tendered them by foreign nations associated with the United States in the World War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4452) for the relief of Franklin L. Hamm; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WHITE:

A bill (S. 4453) granting an increase of pension to Achsah E. Purinton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 149) making funds available for grasshopper control; ordered to lie on the table.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 7522) to provide a new civil code for the Canal Zone and to repeal the existing Civil Code, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

REVENUE AND TAXATION—AMENDMENTS

Mr. NORRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 88, after line 13, insert the following new subdivision:

"(c) Officers and employees of States: Any amount received by an officer or employee of a State or political subdivision thereof, as compensation for services in connection with the exercise of an essential governmental function or the operation of a public utility by such State or political subdivision."

On page 286, after line 18, insert the following new subdivision:

"(15) The term 'political subdivision' includes any irrigation district or other district created under the laws of a State or Territory for the purpose of constructing or operating any public utility."

Mr. HOWELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10236) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 243, between lines 5 and 6, insert the following new section:

"SEC. —. There is hereby imposed upon energy sold by privately owned operating electrical power companies a tax equivalent to 3 per cent of the price for which so sold."

On page 243, line 25, after "article," insert "(other than electrical energy)."

On page 282, in line 11, strike out "1934" and insert "1933."

On page 283, after line 4, insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. —. (a) The rates for each form or classification of postal service shall be based on the actual cost thereof, but no rate shall be reduced below that in effect during the fiscal year 1931; and, subject to the foregoing limitations, said rates shall be fixed and determined from time to time by the Interstate Commerce Commission, subject to the same legal provisions, rules, and regulations now in effect respecting the determination of railroad and express rates: Provided, however, That where Congress shall from time to time make special appropriations to the end of reducing the charge for any particular service, then and in such case said Interstate Commerce Commission shall take into consideration such special appropriation or appropriations in determining such rate or rates, as though the same were derived from payments for such service.

"(b) The Postmaster General shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to provide an additional form and series of postage stamps to be known as franking stamps which shall hereafter be affixed to all official and other mail now entitled to the franking privilege, and in the same amount or amounts as in the case of mail matter not entitled to free delivery. Such stamps shall be delivered, upon proper receipt therefor, to officials and others entitled to the franking privilege; and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall take into consideration the amount of such stamps used in lieu of regular stamps as postal income from the various classes of postal services.

"(c) During any period any increased rate of postage fixed pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) remains in force, only the receipts which would have accrued at the rates in force on the effective date of this section shall, until otherwise provided by law, be counted for the purpose of determining the class of the post office or the compensation or allowances of postmasters or of postal employees of post offices of the first, second, and third classes, and for the purpose of determining the commissions (as distinguished from the compensation and allowances based thereon) of postmasters of the fourth class.

"(d) This section shall take effect July 1, 1933."

CURTAILMENT OF LARGE INCOMES

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I submit a resolution and ask that it may be read, printed, and lie over.

The resolution (S. Res. 204) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States, and that it accordingly does instruct the Senate Finance Committee, that it reform the revenue act now under consideration (H. R. 10236) so that no person shall have an annual income in excess of $1,000,000, and so that no person during his or her lifetime shall receive by gifts, inheritances, or other bequests more than $5,000,000.

THE GENEVA DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an article appearing in the magazine Unity of Monday, March 28, by Sidney Strong, on the subject of disarmament; also a statement by Mr. Strong entitled "Power of Control at Geneva."

There being no objection, the article and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Unity, March 28, 1932]

THE FIELD

"The world is my country; to do good is my religion"

OPEN LETTER TO KING GEORGE AND PRESIDENT HOOVER ON DISARMAMENT[1]

As an Anglo-Saxon for 600 years—300 in America, 300 in England—I am impelled to address you openly on war (a crime) and disarmament (an absolute necessity). You are heads of practically all the peoples of earth classed as Anglo-Saxon under the names of Britain and America.

In the World's Conference for Disarmament now in Geneva your Governments play the controlling part. If something glorious and effective is not accomplished, Britain and America will be to blame. This is their hour on the stage of human action. This opportunity may never return—probably not.

I appeal to you to act as great leaders. Your people will follow you in any high aim that has regard for the lives and fortunes of mankind.

For three months now I have been watching the preparations for the world's conference, and for three weeks have attended all its sessions. I hear many voices, not all in unison. But I have heard one note from press, from pulpit, from delegates—one clear voice saying that if all nations would totally disarm there would be universal peace and prosperity. I have been compelled to conclude that any measure short of total disarmament is an enemy of peace. We must not compromise with crime!

So I appeal to you to instruct your delegates to stand for total disarmament now. What a leadership would be yours!

And this would not be "utopian" if you led. Total disarmament is no more utopian than the Ten Commandments, the golden rule. All that is required is application. They work, if worked. And total disarmament now is less utopian than the Golden Rule.

1. The people: You heard the voice that spoke at the wonderful mass meeting on Saturday, February 6. That was broadcasted all over heaven! That voice was the chorus of young men and women; of womanhood that spoke through millions of petitions from all over earth, from Canada to India; of the church; of the home; of the workshop—and it was unanimous and clear: No more war, total disarmament. If you fail to heed that voice, it will mean despair and chaos, perhaps revolution.

2. Denmark: One gallant nation has already led the way, splendid example for others to follow.

3. Russia: The Russians through their spokesman have before declared that they were ready for total disarmament at once. This is the third time that total disarmament through the Russians has knocked distinctly at the door of world disarmament conferences. If Russia is not afraid, why should America and Britain be afraid? Listen to these words:

"We have the conviction that the only infallible way to the solution of the problem of the organization of peace, the problem of the averting of war, the problem of assuring security to all nations, is the way of general and total disarmament. Total and general disarmament is the only effective guarantee against war."

[1] Copies of this letter were sent to 100 delegates to the disarmament conference.—EDITOR.

In this address the same view was reemphasized over and over, e. g.:

"Security against war must be created. This security against war can never be aschieved by roundabout ways but only by the direct way of total general disarmament."

What irony that such words were not uttered by Christian America and Britain! God generally travels incognito.

4. Germany: When this great nation spoke, did she ask for reduction? Nay; but for "general disarmament which would strengthen security." * * * "The German people ask that their own disarmament be followed by general disarmament, for general disarmament only will create for all an equal measure of security."

This is also the voice of Austria, Bulgaria, and Hungary.

Think you that these nations "were sinners above all others, because they have suffered? I tell you nay; but except ye repent, ye shall in like manner perish!"

5. Italy: Here is the Voice of Italy: "Two essential points of Italian policy are equality of rights between all states and the equalization of armaments at the lowest levels." And again, "The strongest states should be be first to renounce those means that serve essentially for a war of aggression." Italy would follow any lead in total disarmament set by Britain and America.

6. Spain: Once "proud mistress" of the seas! Hear her speaking with the wisdom of experience: "To-day war has no justification. Impartial in its absurdity, it punishes with equal severity the conquered and the conqueror, and ends by bringing both together in a common distress. * * * We are wasting time when we endeavor to render war tolerable and in so doing weaken the means of disarmament. * * * No; it is not chemical, aerial, or submarine war which we are out to abolish, but war as such."

Under the lead of America and Britain, Spain would vote for total disarmament now with both hands.

7. Turkey, Norway, Portgual: Who that heard the voices of Turkey, of Norway, of Portugal—in succession—can doubt that under the impulse of Britain and America these would fall into line, amidst the acclamations of their peoples, cheering for total disarmament?

8. Argentina: What a noble story of peace-making between Argentina and Chile! And this spirit of good will has spread over all South America. Who can doubt that all the republics of South America would vote for total disarmament if the United States led off?

9. Canada: Already disarmed for all practical purposes. A tip from the "mother country" only would be necessary to complete the job.. And Australia—were you listening, Mother Britain, when the big Australian was telling the story of 60,000 dead in Europe and Egypt fighting Turks—for what they did not know? They were needed to build up the young commonwealth below the Equator. These two countries would follow the lead of the "mother country" if she led the way.

10. France and Japan: Here you are doubtful. Doubt not. France has often risen to great heights in ways of freedom and peace. Nothing her people desire more than peace. Let Britain and America prove their sincerity for total disarmament—France might get ahead of them, as in tennis. And Japan—gone momentarily under a cloud; but if America and Britain took a real lead, she would, I feel certain, come through with distinction. Let the nation that is without sin cast the first stone!

Roll call: Call the roll of nations from A to Y—the majority of them would show their hands as in favor of total disarmament now, provided Britain and America led off. On second vote the minority would be scurrying to come in out of the rain. This would solve every vexed problem around the question of disarmament, such as security or disarmament first. The draft convention could go into the wastebasket, and the League of Nations palace (to be) would become a peace house for international celebrations.

The job of complete total disarmament could be done in a year—for the operation on the defeated powers was accomplished, the most of it, in 90 days. Mankind could thereupon give themselves up to a year of jubilee.

Two things—and here I respectfully address King George and President Hoover—heads of the Governments of Britain and America—I place the responsibility upon you and your Governments in the Anglo-Saxon world. First, are you willing to lead? Any measure short of total disarmament is an enemy to peace! The people will not be satisfied by slight reduction of armament. They demand that a way be found to put an end to war. No measure, no formula is sufficient except total disarmament, entered upon at once and carried speedily through. Second, the responsibility rests upon Britain and America! It is imperative that it be done at once. It would be fatal to provide for other conferences, and still other conferences! Situations change like the shifting sands. This is the opportunity—never to return. As says our prophet Lowell:

"Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side;
* * * * * * *
And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light."

"We see dimly in the present what is small and what is great,
Slow of faith how weak an arm may turn the iron helm of fate,
But the soul is still oracular; amid the market's din,
List the ominous stern whisper from the Delphic cave within—
'They enslave their children's children who make compromise with sin.'"

Britain and America! There is no hope for world peace until you disarm totally. The biggest must lead off! That is the divine order. Disobedience to that order will issue in war, more war—then world disaster.

SYDNEY STRONG.

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND.

POWER OF CONTROL AT GENEVA

(Letter to Cousin John)

I have been trying now for some time to locate the power of control at Geneva. I had heard that the French were "running the show," and were often troublesome. I was mistaken. The British have chief control. They own at least "51 per cent of the stock" of the League of Nations. Let me state some facts without comment—with a mind as unbiased, I trust, as Luther's when he went to Rome.

1. Take the secretariat, with its 500 or so employees. It is the machinery of the league, which will soon be housed in a palace, partly built by Rockefeller money. Over 60 per cent of the best-paid half of the employees are British. The head of the very important press section is British. The Secretary-General Drummond is British, and he is permanent. Drummond is equal to the whole managing board when it comes to control. I question if anything important could get through the league without his approval. He was born with the league, and has been intimate secretary for Balfour. He is right on the spot, and never hesitates to assume control in emergencies. He always sits next to the chairman of all meetings—be they council, assemblies, or conferences.

2. Take the council—the control board of the league. It is the "house of lords." Theoretically it is in session continuously. It is composed of 14 delegates, representing as many nations. Five so-called big powers—Britain, France, Japan, Germany, Italy—have permanent and front seats. The other nine serve each for three years and then pass out from control, giving place to other minor powers. The nine are chosen by the assembly. The council is the business end of the league, and even all acts of the assembly must be O. K'd by the council. The council holds the purse strings and must O. K. even the expenses of the excellent "labor" annex, popularly known as B. I. T.

I have spent hours watching the council operate, sitting within 50 feet of the horseshoe table where the delegates confer. I have many times witnessed the Japan-China tragedy. I have had considerable experience observing politicians and ecclesiastics in many lands since first I saw the redcoats in Egypt in 1885, and Turks in Palestine. I sharpened my faculties to observe the actors in the invasion of Manchuria and Shanghai as portrayed before the council of the league. I have studied Sato, of Japan, week after week as he hesitated, delayed, and excused, while Japan's army was daily advancing. I have weighed his voice, his physiognomy, as well as his words. In like manner I have watched Yen, of China, his frankness, in voice and words, urgently calling the attention of the council to the advancing troops of Japan. I was present the evening when Yen, pointing to the clock, said, "In three hours the bombing of Shanghai will begin." In all of these meetings the delegates did little more than mumble. They listened more attentively to the voice of Japan, whose delegate for 10 years had sat as a permanent member at that table and right next to Britain's delegate.

After China and Japan had presented their cases the Chair would sum up and call upon the delegates to express their minds. I noted that Britain enjoyed the right of primogeniture, and so was always first to speak. I noted that Britain exercised this "first born" son's right of leading discussions—were it at the opening of the disarmament conference, the assembly, or in the council. After the disarmament conference got well under way, in organization, it sounded quite natural to hear President Henderson, British, say, "The discussion will now be opened by Sir John Simon." My remarks, so far, carry no comment. I am looking for the chief power of control in the league. It is British.

3. Peace propaganda at Geneva is largely under British control. Again, I am seeking facts, and not yet making comment. The most ambitious program of peace people is known as the Budapest plan that took shape much over a year ago by the League of Nations Unions of many lands. It formed the basis of discussions at the Paris conference last November. It is largely British made, with Robert Cecil as head of the movement to get it before the disarmament conference for favorable consideration. A number of peace groups in America are acting under initiative coming from promoters of this plan. This extends clear down to organization of the local social and religious forces and to supplying information for the press, and even to influencing the American delegation to the conference. While the British are a trifle overambitious in exercising the principle of primogeniture in securing chairmanships, etc., yet they should be given the credit for their activities, while others are doing little.

When I ask myself what is it that the British peace people are after, I should say that they are willing to go far, if others do also, but never so far as comparatively to weaken themselves. Further, they are aiming hard to secure the formation of a permanent disarmament commission, which, in my judgment, does not promise well for world peace. There is still too much power located in the hands of a few big nations. Here, too, Britain would possess chief control. If a permanent disarmament commission should come out of the conference, it will mean a Pax

Britannica for a score of years. This might be a good thing for the world, but it is best to know what we are getting when it is handed to us.

4. The Far East situation: Here again the British are seen in possession of the chief power of control, so far as the western nations are concerned. For four months I watched the council of the league. At times I thought it was real tragedy, again that the delegates were only playing in a grim farce. It seemed to me that if Britain's delegates had only spoken a strong word of protest against Japan's invasion, Japan would have heeded. But it failed to come, day after day, week after week. Then came America's protest. The council seemed to arouse itself; listened to China's cry. Called the assembly. Meanwhile America was bearing the irritation in the situation, while the nations on the council were still hesitant. They seemed to fear to offend their old comrade on the council—Japan.

The assembly has at last spoken well, but Japan is now secure in possession. America has been moved into bearing the brunt of the opposition to Japan, and coming nearer to the danger line of war than the big powers of Europe. A commission of 19 will now seek to solve the problem. Of these, 12 are the regular members of the council of the league. If the council played a game of procrastination from September to March, it may be queried, What will the same men plus five other new men accomplish?

And, it is well to note, in order to locate the power of control, that it is the British ambassador in Shanghai who is chairman, a British admiral in Shanghai who calls the other admirals together and reports to the league, that Britain heads the commission to Manchuria. Britain's influence will dominate in the settlement of Far Eastern affairs. What will it be? A swift consolidation of China's life in national integrity or an encouragement of political weakness when Japan may secure a foothold in Manchuria and the Shanghai region? Will Britain play with Japan in order to check Russia, and to pronounce against the principle and practice of boycott in Asia? Who knows? Of this I feel convinced, as seen from Geneva, that in the world life now played Britain possesses the chief power of control.

5. If so, what of it?

(a) Britain must be held chiefly responsible for the output of the league, be that good or ill. This remark covers all acts of league organizations—council, assembly, or conference. Any measure that had hearty British backing would pass, given time. If Britain, for example, supported Russia's total-disarmament plan, it would go through. One must keep his eye on India and Russia to interpret (official) British policy at Geneva. Britain has the chief power of control at Geneva and must be held correspondingly responsible.

(b) Should America come into the league? I heard two lectures last week at the American Club declaring that we should. I am not yet persuaded and have it under advisement. Here are some observations.

America would occupy a subordinate position. Washington can not even telephone Geneva, except through England.

America is dull at diplomacy. It has been a profession for many decades in Europe. It does not fit American temperament.

The league is undemocratic. The assembly has little real power, its acts being O. K'd by the council.

The council—the seat of power—is a house of lords (14), with five big powers being hereditary, and Britain most powerful. Further, the council is an irresponsible body.

The council's chief business is to administer the rich legacy left by the Versailles treaty (mandates, etc.), most of it being property taken away from defeated nations, and to change national boundaries. I personally witnessed the painless transfer of the vast territory of Iraq from the mandate column to the column of independent nations—with Britain as godmother. I would prefer to have America keep out of that kind of legacy business. She refused to go into the mandate business 12 years ago, and I have always been glad. However, we did soil our hands with too much of the property of the defeated.

Would America be more useful for the peace of the world if she were in or out of the league? Here, as the Scotsman said, I have an open mind, but have some doubts. I am inclined to think that during the past six months America has been a greater influence for peace, by being outside. If she had sat at that council horseshoe table, she might have caught the same paralysis of tongue so marked in the big powers. Caution is contagious, especially at tables where great stakes are involved. Stimson, in Geneva, sitting next to Simon and Sato, would be less brave than Stimson in Washington. * * * I recall Wilson. He would have been more effective for world peace if he had remained in Washington. So, it seems to me, BORAH has more influence in the chancelleries of Europe than any American statesman I know who may have breathed London's fog or shot grouse in Scotland.

Further, I am inclined to believe that mankind is safer in case the big powers are divided as now and an ocean apart. There may be unity that does not make for justice and well-being.

When I get out the map issued by the league, showing the countries of the world, the location of the mandates, etc., I am inclined to be glad that America is not sitting as a big power on the council of administration. And, this carries no "holier-than-thou" intimation.

The question remains, Should America join the league?

I regret that I shall go away from Geneva with the question unanswered.

It depends on how the committee of 19 functions in the Asiatic tragedy centering on China.

It depends also on what the disarmament conference brings forth for the peace and stability of the world.

If these two creature organizations of the league perform some noble acts, which carry the peoples of Japan, China, and India up to greater heights of freedom and peace; if imperialism and plutocracy are shoved aside and human relations first recognized; if I can discern the voices of Sun Yat-sen, Kagawa, and Ghandi helping to shape the findings of the committee and the conference, I shall find it easy to go out and work for America getting into the league. I can not forget the words of Jerome uttered in 1919, "The League of Nations will come when mankind has grasped the fact that Christ was the only practical statesman the world ever produced." If the league at this time shows real signs of aiming for the ideal, thousands would swiftly rush to its support.

But, if there is to come at this time around Shanghai the same old weary diplomacy—mingled militarism, imperialism, with procrastination, with brutal disregard of the masses—one would turn away in disappointment. The world is sick and tired of exploitation.

SYDNEY STRONG.

P. S.—Later. Just come (March 17) from a 2-hour session of the committee of 19. Talk and act like the council of 14. Merely five more who can walk around in a circle. Only have power to advise and watch—and advice is foggy. The committee voted to take a vacation until after "the Easter holidays." Meanwhile the secretariat is to act in the capacity of Providence. If I were China, I should cease putting "my trust in princes" and the league and turn to the god of Sun Yat-sen and the people. Foreign domination of all kinds should be bowed out the open door. Good luck to you, China—one of the three great nations of the world in civilization and character. You'll pull through and come out on top.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR VOLUNTEERS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, 34 years ago to-day the United States entered the Spanish-American War. A poem commemorating our entry into that conflict has been written by Albert Perry Hinton, a Spanish-American War veteran, of Columbus, Tex. I present it for incorporation in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The poem is as follows:

THE SPANISH WAR VOLUNTEER MEN!

To the field of war they're marching,
In the days of the long, long ago;
Answered the bugle's wild summons,
To arms! 'gainst the vengeful foe!

Into the camps they're gathering,
From the shops, from the fields and fen;
From everywhere they came rushing,
The Spanish War volunteer men!

Now to work "Squads right," they're drilling,
How we cheered their thundering drums;
How bravely they flaunted Old Glory,
In their wake bright liberty comes!

To Cuba they went bravely fighting,
Their charges no foe could withstand;
See their deeds on hist'ry's bright pages,
From oppression they freed every land!

Into battle lines they're forming,
Open fire with a rolling crash;
Their flaming old Krags give answer,
To the cruel tyrants they smash!

In lands of the Mexic Sea, waving
The colors that with the stars blend;
They startled the world with their daring,
The Spanish War volunteer men!

Round the colors again they're massing,
In the west looms danger to fend;
Uncle Sam made a first-class power
By the Spanish War volunteer men!

Put the Stars and Stripes there flying,
In strange distant lands—till then
Liberty's flame never knowing—
By the Spanish War volunteer men!

Hark! To the clarion's calling,
For the brave overseas to send;
Once more they answered the summons,
The Spanish War volunteer men!

With the martial spirit flaming,
No thought of self, but to spend;
Their all for the Stars of Glory,
The Spanish War volunteer men!

On the grim battle fronts advancing,
From the millions their chains to rend;
Raised the stars of freedom over them,
The Spanish War volunteer men!

Time's snows on their heads are falling,
Some stooping and shoulders to bend;
In their hearts valor's fires are burning,
The Spanish War volunteer men!

The Red, White, and Blue unfurling,
With swords unsheathed to defend;
On the seven seas proudly floating;
By the Spanish War volunteer men!

On the outer ramparts, guarding,
No retreat from the seas to wend;
Not a rood of ground to surrender,
By the Spanish War volunteer men!

A vigilant watch they're keeping,
'Neath the Stars and Stripes to the end;
Columbia's true sons forever,
The Spanish War volunteer men.

SHOULD WAR DEBTS BE CANCELED?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an address by Bainbridge Colby at the fifty-second semiannual meeting of the Academy of Political Science, April 13, 1932, at the Hotel Astor in New York City, on the subject "Should War Debts Be Canceled?"

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The war debts can be canceled only by the Government of the United States.

They can be repudiated by the debtor nations; or paid in part and defaulted for the balance; but cancellation can be effected only by the voluntary act of the creditor.

To the question, Shall the war debts be canceled? The United States has given its answer. It is an unmistakable negative, and while the question "Should they be canceled?" is perhaps not finally disposed of by a refusal to cancel, further studies of the ethical, economic, and political aspects of the question lead to a similar and an inescapable negative.

The joint resolution by which the House and Senate ratified the President's action of June, 1931, declaring a year's moratorium with respect to debts owed the United States, contained this significant provision:

"It is hereby expressly declared to be against the policy of Congress that any of the indebtedness of foreign countries to the United States should be in any manner canceled or reduced; and nothing in this joint resolution shall be construed as indicating a contrary policy, or as implying that favorable consideration will be given at any time to a change in the policy hereby declared."

In a quasi-official memorandum released in Paris on January 20 of this year, the American position was again stated. This memorandum, evidently intended as a notification to all concerned, consisted of five declarations:

First. There is no connection between war debts and reparations.

Second. The European powers must take the initiative on reparations.

Third. A demand for a new debts moratorium could not obtain approval in Congress, and the Senate opposes a cancellation or reduction of the debts.

Fourth. The United States would look with displeasure on the formation of a united front of the debtor nations.

Fifth. The existing debt arrangements having been concluded separately, can be eventually revised only by separate accords.

Furthermore, it is announced that the Lausanne conference on reparations, originally called for January 18 and now scheduled to be held in June, will not concern itself with the question of the allied debts to the United States. Great Britain has insisted, and France has agreed, that settlement of the reparations problem for them is a matter which is without relation to their respective debts to the United States.

The subject of debt cancellation—i. e., the annulment or reduction of Europe's war-time debts to the United States—is therefore no longer a live question.

The persistence, however, of the belief, which in many quarters is doubtless sincere, that there is some defect of equity in the American position; that the grievous economic situation of the world is due in substantial degree to the existence of these debts, and that their cancellation would contribute to a restoration of normal world trade, merits attention, although the limits of this discussion admit of no more than brief and general treatment of these viewpoints.

Let us recall what these debts are and how they were incurred.

Congress passed the first Liberty loan act in April, 1917. It provided that the United States Government should sell $5,000,000,000 of Liberty bonds to the public and use $3,000,000,000 of the money thus raised to buy bonds of the allied governments. The principle on which the act was drawn was that our loans to Europe were to be self-supporting and never a burden to the American taxpayers.

It was therefore provided that any foreign bonds taken by our Government in payment should bear the same rate of interest as our Liberty bonds and mature and become subject to retirement at the same time.

The first Liberty loan was followed by a second, third, and fourth.

In none of these transactions did the United States deal with the allied nations collectively. Each loan was an individual matter between this Government and the particular foreign nation involved, and each foreign nation signed demand notes for the amounts loaned to it by the United States.

The armistice was hardly concluded, the peace treaty of Versailles had not been drafted, when the effort began to revise downward the amount of Europe's indebtedness to us.

During the peace negotiations in Paris, the British and French Governments called a conference between the allied nations and the United States to discuss the interallied debts, with a view to pooling them and bringing about either their cancellation or the substitution of Germany as the debtor nation, in place of the allied powers, to whom the loans had been made.

President Wilson refused to participate in any general conference on the subject of these debts. He pointed out that they had been contracted separately and individually by the allied nations and insisted that any arrangement governing their payment should be reached in the same manner.

The idea of substituting Germany as the debtor nation, he rejected, calling attention to the fact that America had neither sought nor would receive reparations from Germany; that it had neither asked nor derived any benefit from the war; that it had not acquired nor did it desire additional territory; and he insisted and always maintained that the debts of the allies had no relation to reparations but rested squarely upon the Allies themselves and no one else. He also stated that the United States would entertain no suggestion of the cancellation of these obligations. To this position he adhered throughout his term as President.

In these discussions Mr. Wilson pointed out that America was the only Nation which had contracted no war debts except to her own people; that cancellation would mean that the Allies would be relieved of a great part of their debt burden, while America would experience no relief at all, as our taxpayers would be obliged to pay into the Treasury the full amount, of which our European debtors were relieved.

There has been no departure from Mr. Wilson's position on the debts by his successors. The right and duty of this country to collect the sums owed to it has been publicly affirmed by ex-President Coolidge; and President Hoover, in proposing a year's moratorium, assured the country that "he did not approve in any remote sense of the cancellation of the debts to us."

Despite all effort to keep our position on this question distinct and free of confusion, the declaration of a moratorium was hailed throughout Europe as an abandonment by America of the position it had so consistently adhered to. European economists and statesmen, with one accord, announced the American debt to be a thing of the past.

But such declarations merely mark the unbroken continuance of the European effort to undermine our position as a creditor by every device calculated to attain that purpose. Every plea that could be invented, every consideration that could be twisted into service have been employed to sustain the continual pressure for cancellation, or at least drastic reduction.

It is undeniably true that, as a people, we still have something of the simplicity of children. We fall ready victims, it has been said, to the illusions of ethical and humanitarian dogma.

The Balfour note, issued in 1922, which maintained that the allied and associated powers were really partners in the cause of freedom, and that the debts incurred were really loans made not for the separate advantage of particular States but for a great purpose common to all, awakened a noticeable response in this country. Even the Columbia faculty of political science was moved to declare that, in its judgment, "the war debts settlements were unsound in principle and that our advances should be regarded as joint contributions to a common cause," thus echoing the Balfour position.

The flaw in the Balfour note was that while it aimed to abolish the economic and financial problems of reparations, and thus to exorcise all the political evils which afflicted the world, it placed the entire cost of so doing upon the American people. Debts were to be abandoned. The allies were to scrap reparations, but the American taxpayer was to liquidate the transaction.

The British thesis was much too naïve. Its formula—abolish reparations, cancel debts, and let America pay—was a trifle more than this country could stand.

While we all wish America to be just and even generous, we are not willing that it should be treated as an easy mark.

The equity of our position has its foundation in the prodigal generosity with which we responded to Europe's cry of distress during the welter of war. Our loans were our answer to Europe's appeals for aid, lest she perish. They enabled the debtor nations to purchase food and munitions, to sustain their armies in the field, and to feed their civilian populations. They were made in the face of threatened military defeat and at a time when internal civil disorders threatened to engulf and destroy the borrowers.

While we have maintained that the repayment of our loans has nothing to do with the collection of reparations, we have, nevertheless, advanced in private loans to Germany the money with which she has paid all that has thus far been paid on account of reparations.

What our allied debtors have received on account of German reparations has been derived from American loans, and these loans are the source of a large proportion of what our allied debtors have paid on account of their borrowings from us.

When the American investor ceased in 1929 to buy German bonds, and the vast stream of American loans to Germany stopped, Germany's payment of reparations stopped also.

The truth of the matter is that Germany has never had any intention of paying reparations. Her persistent policy since the Versailles treaty has been one of indiscriminate sabotage with reference to it. She has resisted all requirements of the treaty, so far as she could, and has sought particularly to evade its military and financial clauses.

With the stoppage of American loans, Germany is confronted for the first time with the problem of actually paying reparations. She finds herself, however, in the favorable position of having involved Great Britain and the United States so heavily in her financial difficulties that all she thinks it necessary to do is to threaten financial suicide, which she counts upon to bring to her aid additional credits, postponements in maturities, and the interested endeavors of her private creditors in both Great Britain and the United States, to save themselves by lightening her public obligations.

It is estimated that the loans to Germany and purchases of German securities by the United States and Great Britain aggregate $4,000,000,000. If bankruptcy should now overtake Germany, she feels that she will have sympathetic and not unpowerful fellow sufferers.

It should be borne in mind, first, that it has never been proved that Germany could not pay large sums abroad on account of reparations, and second, that it has never been established that the debt settlements made by the United States with her wartime allies, which were essentially generous, exceeded the capacity of those nations to pay.

Dismissing the question of Germany's paying power, because it does not pertain to my subject, I think it can hardly be contended that our immediate European debtors have ever drawn substantially upon their capacity to pay us, to say nothing of exceeding it.

It is only necessary to refer to the loans made by France to foreign countries since the war ended. They total 13,277,000,000 francs, not including a loan to Czechoslovakia of 600,000,000 francs made on January 20 of this year, nor a loan of 300,000,000 francs to Finland, nor a loan of 400,000,000 francs to the Polish railroads. France is reported to have loaned Rumania 2,090,000,000 francs, and to Poland, in addition to the railway loan just mentioned, the sum of 2,000,000,000 francs has been advanced. She has loaned 770,000,000 francs to Turkey and 23,000,000 francs to far-off China.

Can the plea of France, that she is unable to repay the money borrowed from us since the close of the war, be expected to move us profoundly, in the light of these facts?

As to the economic consequences of our insistence upon the payment of the war loans, much has been said which is erroneous, insincere, and misleading. As a matter of fact, the troubles through which the world is passing are traceable, in hardly an appreciable degree, to the existence of Europe's war debts to us.

And it should be borne in mind that Europe has paid us nothing on account of these debts since January, 1931. The rapid accentuation of the world's financial distress may be said to have occurred since that date, a period in which nothing has been paid, nothing collected, and nothing demanded on account of the war debts to the United States.

In the last year in which any payment on account of principal and interest was received, only the relatively modest (albeit considerable) sum of $215,000,000 was paid to the United States Treasury on the war debts.

This amounted to but one-half of 1 per cent of the estimated national incomes of the countries which made the payments, and to but 2.7 per cent of their annual budgets. They spend more than that for almost any other purpose that seems agreeable. For armaments alone they spent eight times as much as they are called upon to pay us on war debt account; in other words, $1,800,000,000.

From the standpoint of economics the payments amount to but 1.1 per cent of the total volume of the foreign trade of the debtor countries—an almost negligible percentage, altogether incapable of exercising a disturbing effect, or appreciable influence upon world trade.

Of the arguments urged for a reduction of America's claims, there is one which is capable of differentiation from those with which we have grown familiar, and which may be described as the pleas in avoidance.

I refer to the contention that owing to the fall in the price level of commodities, the obligations of the debtor nations are heavier than those which they assumed.

There is a degree of validity to this contention at the moment. The answer to it, however, is that there are other variables which equally deserve consideration, such as the "capacity to pay" on the part of the debtor nations.

Take France as an illustration. The France of to-day has a very different capacity to pay than the France of five years ago. Then the franc was worth less than 2 cents in our currency. Its Government was hard pressed to meet current bills.

To-day the financial position of France is buttressed by a gold reserve second only to that of the United States and still growing as ours diminishes; while her industrial progress both at home and in her colonial possessions, which were greatly augmented as the result of the war, has made a steady progress, which will be continuing.

Against such inevitable variations is to be reckoned the great concessions made by this country in the funding of the debts, which to-day represent far less than the amount of the obligations as contracted and which the borrowing nations bound themselves to repay.

The last gasp of repudiation is the plea that under modern democratic conditions no government which depends upon the people for its existence and must rely for its continuance in power on reelection by popular vote can undertake to impose upon its people the burden of paying the war debts. It is maintained that the debts are identified in the popular mind with a limitation upon national independence and carry the suggestion of tribute, national inferiority, and persecution.

As one writer puts it, "No democratic government can live which assumes in the eyes of its own people the guise of a mere collecting agency for foreign creditors."

I can only comment that if the good faith of governments is to be swallowed up in the bad faith of peoples, then the world is due for a sad disillusionment. If the pledges of nations, threatened with overthrow, have no value; if the confidence shown by the United States in the engagements of her European allies has no foundation, then what becomes of the hope of trustful cooperation between nations?

The dangers that lurk in conflicting national policies, in oppression of the weak by the strong, in the threat of invasion, take on new gravity if a nation which is unjustly assailed can no more look for help in any quarter of the world for the reason that repudiation has displaced honor in international relationships.

PACT OF PARIS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Senate Joint Resolution 140, relating to violations of the terms of the pact of Paris, and a statement published by the New York Times on April 7, 1932.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 140) providing that it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, to export to any country violating the terms of the pact of Paris arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war, or make any such trade or financial arrangements with the violating country or its nationals as in the judgment of the President may be used to strengthen or maintain the violation.

Whereas the United States is a party to the pact of Paris; and

Whereas according to the terms of that pact any country which is a party to it commits a breach of its obligations with the United States if it employs any other than pacific means for the settlement of its disputes with other nations; and

Whereas the pact of Paris states that "any signatory power which shall hereafter seek to promote its national interest by resort to war should be denied the benefits furnished by this treaty," which benefits consist in the guaranty that other nations will settle their disputes with it only by pacific means: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That it is the declared policy of the United States:

(a) Not to accept the legality of any situation de facto created by breach of the pact of Paris which may impair the treaty rights of the United States or its citizens in any territory affected thereby; (b) nor to recognize any treaty or agreement brought about by means contrary to the covenants of the pact of Paris which would impair the obligations of that pact.

SEC. 2. That in case other nations, not parties to a dispute, have in open conference decided that any nation has committed a breach of the pact of Paris by resort to other than pacific means, and have further decided not to aid or abet the violator by the shipment to it of arms or other supplies of war, or to furnish it financial assistance in its violation; and in case the President determines and by proclamation declares that a breach of the pact of Paris has in fact been committed; it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, and until the President shall, by proclamation, declare that such violation no longer continues, to export to the violating country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war, or make any such trade or financial arrangement with the violating country or its nationals as in the judgment of the President may be used to strengthen or maintain the violation.

SEC. 3. That the President be requested to invite a conference of the governments signatory to the pact of Paris with a view to their agreement upon a protocol or treaty supplementary to that pact which shall definitely define the obligations of the several signatory powers in case the provisions of the pact of Paris be violated.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR CAPPER ON RESOLUTION IN SUPPORT OF THE KELLOGG PACT, PUBLISHED IN THE NEW YORK TIMES, APRIL 7, 1932

On the fifteenth anniversary of the entry of the United States into the World War and the fifth anniversary of M. Briand's famous offer to the people of the United States to cooperate in the elimination of war as an instrument of national policy among civilized nations of the world I have ventured to lay before the Senate a resolution which embodies, in my opinion, the next step to be taken in the alignment of the United States with the movement to organize effectively the obligations among nations upon which the structure of international peace may be firmly based.

First of all, it embodies the ideas which Secretary Stimson set forth in his note of January 7, 1932, but with a slight but important modification of the language of that note, which was a statement of American policy growing out of one specific incident in our relations with Japan. Phrasing it in more general terms of a universal doctrine, I have been careful to insert an additional clause which limits our nonrecognition of treaties brought about by means contrary to the pact of Paris to that kind of treaty which would impair the obligations of the past. It would not, in my opinion, be wise to state the principle of nonrecognition in any wider terms. It would be conceivable, for instance, that a nation which had gone to war in violation of the Kellogg pact might, nevertheless, make a treaty which in its terms was as generous and just as the war itself had been unjust. The United States should not withhold its consent from treaties of this kind simply because the war which created the situation was in violation of the pact of Paris. But any treaty which was of a kind to register victory for a cosignatory, bringing profit to the violator and awakening the spirit of revenge in the defeated power, would by its very nature impair the whole structure of international confidence. It would be contrary to the interests of the United States ever to accept any such settlement. Stated in these terms, the so-called Stimson doctrine is so sound an interpretation of the fundamental principles underlying America's interest in the maintenance of peace the world over that it should, in my opinion, receive the sanction of the Congress of the United States as a notification to the world that the United States is still in earnest in its support not only of international peace but of international justice as well.

The doctrine here laid down is one which has already won world-wide acceptance through the action of the League of Nations. It is peace enforcement without the obligation to join in police action against the aggressor; it is a sanction without involvement, but none the less effective if it afford a medium for the expression that sound public opinion upon which all plans to further international understanding must finally rest.

The second section of the resolution has been drafted to meet the situation which is bound to arise in case of a major violation of the Kellogg pact. It embodies the experience of the last few months and is intended to prevent the United States from either becoming the accomplice of the aggressor by supplying it with the means for its aggression; or, on the other hand, taking the whole responsibility single handed for holding the aggressor in check. Neither of these situations should be permitted to arise; yet both of them are likely to happen unless we secure some measure of international agreement and prepare a program of progressive measures to be taken in case of an extreme violation. Section 2 is therefore a further step in the safeguarding of our own interests as well as a necessary contribution to the community of action in the face of the menace of war.

It should also be remembered that we have been asked to take some such step as this by the heads of other governments with whom we are now assembled in Geneva in the hope of reaching measures of disarmament. If the United States remains a potential arsenal for every violator of the Kellogg pact, then we can hardly hope for any major steps in real disarmament.

Finally, a supplementary resolution calls for a conference to secure additional treaty or protocol to the pact of Paris defining the obligations in case of its violation. It is not my idea that this calls for a definition of all the obligations in every case beforehand, but that there should be some better understanding than exists at present as to the program of progressive measures of nonintercourse or coercion which may be adjudged necessary to deal with a flagrant violation of this pact of peace.

COMMITTEE ON ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a report of the committee on economic sanctions, appointed in September, 1931, by trustees of the Twentieth Century Fund, to consider the use of economic sanctions by the nations of the world in the avoidance of war with special reference to American public policy. A thorough inquiry was made as to both the diplomatic and economic aspects of the subject by qualified students of international law and economics. The committee suggests that the signatories of the pact of Paris agree to a protocol supplementary to the pact, providing for a prompt conference of their representatives in the event that hostilities by one or more of their number break out or be threatened. Such a conference would be charged with the duty of deciding upon the joint institution of measures of nonintercourse against the offending nation or nations.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

The committee on economic sanctions, organized in September, 1931, on the invitation of the trustees of the Twentieth Century Fund, submits the following report on the possible use of measures of nonintercourse by the nations of the world in the avoidance or suppression of hostilities. In so doing the committee makes grateful acknowledgment to the trustees of the Twentieth Century Fund for their initiative in inviting the chairmen to form the committee, for underwriting its expenses, and for furnishing research and other facilities for carrying on its activities.

The pact of Paris, which is sometimes referred to as the Kellogg-Briand treaty, pledges some 60 nations of the world to renounce war as an instrument of national policy. Following its renunciation of war, the pact of Paris expressly stipulates that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may have which may arise among the high contracting parties shall never be sought except by pacific means. This solemn and epoch-marking engagement puts an end to international war forever, provided each one of the Governments signatory thereto keeps its word. It surely is not to be lightly assumed that any signatory power will break its word solemnly given in a matter of such great importance.

So much having been said, however, one crucial question remains, namely, What shall be the attitude and the policy of the other powers signatory to the pact of Paris if one or more of their number, failing to conform to the pledge given in the pact, do begin or threaten hostilities?

The committee on economic sanctions is of opinion that the time has now fully come for the powers signatory to the pact of Paris to declare, in answer to this question, what, under such circumstances, will be their policy.

In the present state of world opinion, it is highly probable that no people whose government is signatory to the pact of Paris will desire the use of their government's military and naval forces in the settlement of international quarrels arising elsewhere in the world. Nevertheless, a clear and definite violation of the pledges given in the pact of Paris may easily lead to another world-wide armed conflict, this time finally and fatally disastrous in its effects.

The committee accordingly suggests that the signatories of the pact of Paris should enter into an appropriate protocol or agreement supplemental to that pact whereby they will engage themselves, in the event of hostilities, actual or threatened, promptly to consult together with a view to determine upon measures of nonintercourse which would be appropriate to prevent the threatened breach of the pact, or if it could not be prevented, to end hostilities and to restore the status existing prior to the breach.

Among the measures of nonintercourse which could be applied would be:

(1) A cessation of any shipment of arms or munitions or other absolute contraband;

(2) Such further economic sanctions and concerted measures, short of the use of force, as may be determined to be appropriate and practical under the circumstances of any given case.

In order to give an international basis for consultation and possible action along the foregoing lines, it is recommended that the Government of the United States, as an initiator of the pact of Paris, call a conference of the signatories of that pact with a view to their adherence to a supplemental protocol or treaty which shall provide for such consultation and action as are here suggested.

The committee submits these proposals in the firm conviction that such an international undertaking as is here urged upon the signatories of the pact of Paris will promptly and powerfully advance the cause of international peace.

RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from the Architectural Iron, Bronze, and Structural Workers' Union of New York, a resolution adopted by New York Typographical Union, No. 6, and a resolution adopted by the Yonkers (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, relating to relief for unemployment.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 20, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Our membership instructed me to state that they have all reason to believe that your unemployment relief and construction bill is to be adopted. We therefore pledge whole-hearted support.

ARCHITECTURAL IRON BRONZE AND STRUCTURAL WORKERS UNION OF NEW YORK,
L. SMETANA, Secretary.

NEW YORK TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION, No. 6,
New York, April 18, 1932.

Hon. R. F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C

HONORABLE SIR: At the regular meeting of New York Typographical Union, No. 6, held Sunday, April 17, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas Congress at its present session failed to enact any laws making provisions for the relief of unemployment; and

"Whereas Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER has introduced a measure which provides for unemployment relief and construction: Therefore be it

"Resolved by New York Typographical Union, No. 6, in regular meeting assembled this 17th day of April, 1932, to indorse the aforementioned legislative measure introduced by Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be spread upon the minutes of this union, and a copy be forwarded to Senator WAGNER, the President of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives."

Very truly yours,

J. J. MCGRATH,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Resolution adopted by the Yonkers (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce at a regular meeting thereof held at the city of Yonkers on the 5th day of April, 1932

Whereas for upwards of 40 years the city of Yonkers has been one of the centers of activity in the sugar-refining industry in this country, where two large refineries have been maintained and operated to the great benefit of this city and its people. For the past two years work in this industry has been suspended through the closing of the two refineries in question, whereby hundreds of working men and women formerly employed in these plants for years are without employment and without the means of supporting themselves and their dependents.

This chamber is informed that this city has suffered a serious loss through the cessation of operations in these refineries reflected by a loss of taxes, a decrease in the distribution of wages among our stores and business houses, and the removal of those formerly employed in the suspended establishments to other sections of this and other States.

This chamber, on inquiry, learns that the sugar refineries referred to have been forced to suspend largely by reason of the quantities of refined sugar of foreign origin which have been imported into this country for the past three or four years, especially in the past two years, during which time, due to an improper adjustment of the tariff on refined sugar, such importations have increased at an alarming rate. The information furnished this chamber, which it regards as reliable, shows the following facts relevant to this matter:

That sugar refining in this country is an industry 200 years old. For over 150 years, or for the entire legislative period of our Government, it has been protected by an adequate tariff from destructive competition from abroad. For the first time this protection is withdrawn and a premium is placed on the importation of foreign refined sugar. Under this law upwards of about 800,000,000 pounds of refined sugar were imported into this country in 1931, growing from practically nothing in 1926 to the total of about 800,000,000 pounds five years later. The American sugar refiner can not compete with the product of foreign origin. This is true because he has to pay four times as much for his labor as his foreign competitor. The lowest paid workingman in a Yonkers refinery received over $4 a day. A man doing the same class of work in Cuba, our largest competitor, is paid from 25 cents to 50 cents a day. Thus, for every $1,000,000 paid for labor in the sugar refineries of other lands the refiner in this country pays $8,000,000.

The employees of the closed refineries in this city represent the best type of American labor. Many of them have been with these companies for years, some for more than 35 years. A very large proportion of them owned their own homes. They embodied in the highest degree working men and women, who, until they were deprived of their employment, were well fed, well clothed, and well housed citizens, taxpayers, and owners of property, who contributed in every way to the welfare and prosperity of this city. These people are a part of an army of 15,000 men and women employed directly in this industry in the United States who were paid from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 annually in wages. This does not include countless other millions paid to workers in allied industries, the products of which form the supplies of the refineries operating in this country, such as coal, the consumption of which reaches almost 1,000,000 tons a year, cotton for bagging which reaches nearly 200,000 bales in the same time, and other commodities too numerous to mention here. The sugar refineries in this country, 21 in number, represent an investment of $250,000,000 with thousands of stockholders therein, and this country pays $500,000,000 a year for the produced refined sugar. If the order of things evidenced by the closing of the two refineries in our city is extended, and the industry is transferred to foreign countries, as it inevitably will be through the destruction of the domestic refineries, the American people will pay a bill of $500,000,000 a year for a commodity indispensable to them, without the labor of the country deriving one dollar of benefit therefrom. The ultimate loss to the United States through the gradual, but none the less certain, transference of the sugar-refining business to other lands is incalculable. Loss in revenue to the Central Government is bound to ensue. Local taxes will decrease. Wages will be lost and instead of one of our best items of food being manufactured here in its final form under sanitary conditions, it will be sent to us from other lands which are not under the strict sanitary supervision prevailing in this country.

When this system or order of things is brought home to us, as it has been by the closing of the two industrial establishments engaged in this business in our city, which have been driven therefrom as the result of competition from other countries, we feel it to be our bounden duty to resist to the full the extension of this pernicious and destructive state of affairs, since what has happened in one industry, may presently confront us in another until the whole prosperity of our city may be affected, if not destroyed.

As the closing of the two refineries in this city concerns the welfare of it to such a large and important degree, this chamber feels called upon to demand governmental action, to the end that this industry be immediately afforded protection from foreign competition through a revision of the present tariff on refined sugar or prompt action by the proper administrative bureaus of the Central Government to accomplish the same result: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this chamber, acting on behalf of the city of Yonkers, that the Congress of the United States enact a law increasing the duty on refined sugar sufficient to protect the American refiners; and pending such legislation that the Federal Tariff Commission, pursuant to the powers conferred upon it by the statute, readjust the present tariff on refined sugar by increasing it to an amount sufficient to enable the sugar refineries of this country to operate in competition with foreign producers, based on the difference in cost of sugar refined in this country and abroad; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND, the Hon. ROBERT H. WAGNER, Senators in Congress from the State of New York, the Hon. JOHN N. GARNER, Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Hon. JOHN W. COLLIER, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, and the Hon. Robert L. O'Brien, chairman of the Federal Tariff Commission.

AN APPEAL FOR HONEST MONEY

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask to have published in the RECORD an address by Clarence Poe, president of the Progressive Farmer-Ruralist Co., on An Appeal for Honest Money.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A short time ago when the National Grange and the American Farm Bureau named representatives of America's organized farmers to appear before a congressional committee in behalf of money stabilization, or "honest money," I was named as one of the speakers.

At the last minute I was prevented from going, but I feel so strongly on this subject that I wish now to urge its overshadowing importance to both American agriculture and American business.

If the average well-informed American citizen could speak to our average Senator or Representative in Washington, I believe he would say something like this:

"The plain people of America are pleased with the seriousness with which you are going about your work.

"You did well in passing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act.

"You did well in passing the Glass-Steagall currency expansion act.

"You did well in dropping the sales tax and substituting higher income and inheritance taxes, etc.

"You are doing well in promoting governmental economy.

"You will render all America a magnificent service—superb—if you pass the proposed plan for guaranteeing bank deposits.

"Yet no one of these things, nor all of them combined, can restore prosperity until you provide for two other things:

"(1) Either adopt such financial policies as will increase commodity prices to average 1920–1930 levels, or so deflate the dollar that our colossal debt burden of public and private debt can be paid off with dollars of the same value that dollars possessed when these debts were created; and

"(2) Provide for a genuinely stable system of money from now on."

Since this issue is now coming definitely before Congress, I wish briefly to review the outstanding facts involved as I see them:

I. HOW DEFLATION HAS DOUBLED FARM DEBTS

Every Congressman and Senator knows how tremendously all forms of debt have increased in the last 15 years—Federal debts, State, county, municipal, and private debts; debts to commercial banks, land banks, mortgage companies, and all financial institutions—and all these debts, public and private, have practically doubled because of the increased value of money. As National Master L. J. Taber of the National Grange has pointed out, if a farmer made a debt so recently as 1930, it now takes 77 per cent more farm products to pay the principal of the debt than then, and Mr. Taber has compiled the following table showing in terms of what the farmer has to sell just how much he now has to pay in the form of farm products (in principal alone besides interest) for each $100 borrowed or for each $100 of debt incurred in any of the years indicated in the table:

Year $100 borrowed:	Present amount in commodity values
1930	$177
1929	202
1928	208
1927	209
1926	196
1925	217
1924	215

Year $100 borrowed—Continued:	Present amount in commodity values
1923	$200
1922	197
1921	180
1920	230
1919	333
1918	308
1917	291
1916	225

There can be no economic recovery that ignores this fundamental situation. As Mr. James C. Stone, of the Federal Farm Board, said recently:

"The fellow who is in debt and whose debt was created when commodity values were much higher than now has only three ways to get out. He can repudiate his debt because he can not hope to pay it when the commodity upon which he based the debt was then selling for four times what it is now. For example, if a cotton grower borrowed money on his land when cotton was 25 cents a pound, it now takes five bales to pay the debt where it took only one when the debt was created—and it is impossible for him to produce five bales where he produced one then. The second way out for the farmer is for the price of the commodity to rise within a reasonable distance of where it was when that debt was created. The third alternative is in some way to provide cheaper money for him to pay his obligation. One of these three things is going to happen. We are going through the repudiation stage now and have been for several years. If that continues, it will be a long-drawn-out process and it will keep business and finances upset. A great many people think that is the natural normal way for it to adjust itself, but personally I do not. One of the other ways should be adopted, and I do not believe it will be necessary for us to go off the gold standard to do it."

"One of these three things is going to happen," as Mr. Stone correctly said—increased commodity prices, cheaper money, or repudiation. There is no other way out, for it is physically impossible to produce and sell enough extra commodities to equal the volume of debt unjustly imposed by our present money system.

II. BUSINESS MEN INTERESTED EQUALLY WITH FARMERS

And not only is it impossible for agriculture to recover without either increased commodity prices or deflated debts, but the same thing is true of all business. From no farm leader, from no spokesman of agrarian opinion, has Congress any warning more emphatic or clear-cut than this voiced by the ablest organ of American business, the Business Week, of New York City, in its issue of February 3, 1932:

"The only remaining road to recovery for ourselves and the world is by concerted and courageous action, through governments and central banks, to raise the commodity price level and reduce the value of gold to the level at which it was when the bulk of the world's public and private debt burdens were contracted. Otherwise universal bankruptcy, default, and repudiation are unavoidable.

"Every means to accomplish this purpose is justified, and every influence the United States can exert in this direction as the most powerful financial force in the world to-day is indispensable. If it can not be done by action of central banks, or collateral agencies like the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in forcing credit expansion through ordinary banking channels, it must come through deliberate devaluation or direct inflation of currency."

III. THE FUNDAMENTAL DISHONESTY AND IMMORALITY OF OUR PRESENT MONEY SYSTEM

If the "universal bankruptcy, default, and repudiation" were necessary as a result of following rigid rules of honesty and fair dealing, that would be one thing. But when all this disaster is the result rather of a fundamentally immoral and dishonest standard of values (or absence of standards) the situation becomes entirely different. When we reflect that all debts must really be paid in commodities, and when we find the financial committee of the League of Nations reporting that whereas in 1928 it took 100 units of commodities to pay a debt of 100 gold units, to-day it requires 170 units of commodities, we must agree that this is not only "the crux of the crisis" but presents a ghastly and flagrant perversion of essential morality. As C. V. Gregory says: "If Congress had passed a law in 1926 requiring every debtor to pay back $1.50 for every $1 he had borrowed, besides interest, we would have had a revolution. Yet that is just what deflation has done. Suppose Congress had passed a law in 1926 doubling the size of the bushel basket or the number of pounds in a bushel, and had told us that in measuring out products to pay our debts we must give the same number of bushels of grain but measure it out in these new and enlarged bushel baskets. By failing to take action to stabilize the value of money Congress has done what amounts to the same thing."

When such conditions prevail and when a man may pay and pay on the principal of a debt and still find himself owing the creditor more in goods and commodity values than at first, then government is simply permitting and promoting robbery under the sanction of law. As Dr. Irving Fisher, of Yale University, is quoted as having said before a congressional committee recently:

"Not only are we having a tragic liquidation of debts through foreclosures, etc., but it is a liquidation that does not liquidate. You may pay $300 on a $1,000 debt, only to find that you have increased your indebtedness to $1,100 in terms of commodities. So in spite of all that America has paid on its debts, there has been no real liquidation since 1929. We are now in debt more than we were then in terms of what we have to pay with. We are told that the national debt has been reduced by 28 per cent, but that is an illusion. The remainder must be paid by taxes paid by the farmer and factory in commodities. Instead of our debt being reduced from twenty-five billions to eighteen billions, it now stands at thirty-five billions in market-basket dollars—ten billions more than it was in 1924. Of America's gross debt we have liquidated fifty billions of two hundred billions indebtedness, but now find ourselves with a debt of two hundred and thirty billions in market-basket dollars. Some think that we are working our way out, but we are working ourselves in."

IV. OUR PRESENT SYSTEM PUNISHES INITIATIVE AND ENTERPRISE, DESTROYS AMERICA'S HOPE

Not only does our present money system unjustly rob all debtors but it penalizes and pauperizes the groups who have made America great, while it rewards and enriches the timid, the unenterprising, the inactive. The men who had faith in America and wished to serve it, the men who from 1915 to 1930 invested in farms and homes and factories and buildings and machinery and equipment—they have been deflated or bankrupted down to $50 or less for each $100 invested. On the other hand, the timid man who put his money in a safety-deposit box can take it out and find it worth $200 in purchasing power for each $100 it formerly possessed. The unprofitable servant who hides his money in a napkin was condemned by the master, but he is the very man whom our money system selects for its richest rewards to-day, while the man of enterprise and courage is punished for his virtues.

And of all enterprising Americans who suffer the farmer suffers most. This is true, because when hard times come and prices drop factories shut down and cut off production, but the farmer keeps right on producing for his fellows in normal volume and finds his prices cut more and more because of the surpluses accumulated in the face of a vanishing market.

V. WHAT CAN CONGRESS DO ABOUT THE SITUATION?

As we have already said, this whole question will be acutely before Congress this month. Several bills looking to permanent remedies will be presented. Farm leaders and others interested in an "honest dollar" are not asking for the abandonment of standards of value, but rather for the establishment of real standards of value. As President Edward A. O'Neal, of the American Farm Bureau, said to a congressional committee:

"In asking that Congress give us an honest dollar we are not asking that we abandon our standard. We want gold to be back of the dollar, but we want it to be back of an honest dollar. We ask that you regulate the value of our money so that money itself will not distort the exchange value of commodities, but will serve as an accurate medium of exchange expressing the true exchange value of two commodities or two services."

If the commodity price level of 1920–1930 can be restored and thereafter steadily maintained wholly by Federal reserve action, good and well. But millions believe that it is going to be necessary to provide that hereafter the quantity of gold in our standard dollar shall be increased or decreased so as to equal the average 1920–1930 purchasing power of a dollar. This could be done by storing gold bullion in the United States Treasury and issuing not coin but certificates against it—just as is now done with our silver certificates.

Farm leaders and others should recognize the danger of asking the Government for fiat, or printing-press money, without intrinsic metallic value behind it. Such an issue might now be justified as an emergency measure, provided provision were made for its retirement as fast as commodity prices reached 1920–1930 levels, but no inflation beyond 1920–1930 levels should be tolerated. We wish to have a genuinely honest dollar—just to creditors as well as to debtors.

VI. A MORAL ISSUE TO STIR AMERICA

And here indeed is a moral issue that should stir America. For this whole problem has its roots deep, very deep, in basic and essential moralities—in sheer fundamental common honesty as between man and man. Certainly every man in America ought to see it who professes to revere a God who hears "the needy when he crieth, the poor also, and him that hath no helper"; every man who professes to serve a God to whom a false balance is an abomination but a just weight His delight and who wrote it into the statutes of Israel 4,000 years ago—

"Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in meteyard, in weight, or in measure. Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin shall ye have * * * not divers weights * * * not divers measures. But thou shalt have a perfect and a just weight; a perfect and just measure shalt thou have."

It would be impossible, it seems, for the genius of man to conceive and bring forth a more gigantic and colossal invention for making "the rich richer and the poor poorer," or for sheer robbery of the debtor classes under the form of law, than is such an unstable measure of value as the dollar. It is a system which makes the law an aid and ally of the robber rather than defender of the robbed. When, for example, a debt is contracted when the dollars loaned represent 10 bales of cotton or 500 bushels of wheat, and the governments and financial systems of the earth make it so that the creditor collects dollars that represent 30 bales of cotton or 1,500 bushels of wheat (and in similar proportions as regards all other commodities), in addition to having all interest payments correspondingly increased—when this happens, has not a robbery been permitted as essentially immoral as the theft of hams from a smokehouse, the burglary of a home, or the holdup of a bank? There may be law, but there is no morality and no honesty in requiring a man to pay in values twice or thrice what he received in principal plus twice or thrice in values what he agreed to pay in interest also.

And here, too, is an amazing contrast. In 1896 our captains, lords, and rulers in business and finance thundered in indignation against a policy that they said would have permitted 100-cent debts to be paid with 50-cent dollars and rallied America in behalf of "honest money" to protect the creditor classes. But to-day, from what high quarters in press or pulpit or rostrum have we heard any nation-summoning alarum in behalf of "honest money" to protect the debtor classes—any soul-stirring protest, tense with moral indignation, against the immorality of requiring debtors to pay with 100-cent dollars the debts they contracted with 70-cent, 50-cent, or even 44-cent dollars? Why the difference?

VII. WE MUST HAVE A PERMANENTLY STABLE SYSTEM OF MONEY FROM NOW ON

It is not enough just to remedy or patch things up to meet the present emergency. Congress will be guilty of an unpardonable crime against America's present and future if it does not provide that permanently from this time on the dollar shall be a stable measure of purchasing power—a real yardstick of value. We have a standard of time that never varies—the hour; a standard of length that never varies—the yard; a standard for liquids that never varies—the gallon; a standard for measuring corn and wheat that never varies—the bushel. And yet our national standard of value—the dollar—in real purchasing power interpreted in terms of what it will buy we permit to be as variable as would be a yardstick sometimes 18, sometimes 24, and sometimes 36 inches long; as variable as would be a bushel measure sometimes 2 pecks, sometimes 3 pecks, sometimes 4 pecks in capacity; as variable as if we had hours sometimes 30, sometimes 45, and sometimes 60 minutes in length.

And in proof of this declaration one has but to look at the following official statistics of the Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, showing the purchasing power of the dollar expressed in terms of wholesale prices since 1915, taking average 1926 prices as 100 or $1:

Year:	Purchasing power of $1
1916	1.170
1917	.851
1918	.762
1919	.722
1920	.648
1921	1.025
1922	1.034
1923	.994
1924	1.019
1925	.955
1926	1.000
1927	1.048
1928	1.024
1929	1.036
1930	1.159
1931 (January)	1.299
1931 (December)	1.406
1932 (March)	1.503

After the tragic experiences America has just been through, all enterprise will lag, all business will halt, all enterprise will be frightened, all development on the farm and in business will be checked if every man must make future plans with no assurance as to whether the dollar at pay time will be worth 50 cents, $1, $1.50, or $2 in commodity values. On the contrary, if, as a result of this depression, Congress will for all future time provide two such measures as are now under consideration, (1) Government guaranty of bank deposits and (2) a stable currency system based on average 1920–1930 commodity prices, then both American agriculture and American business can at once go forward to an assured and permanent prosperity.

THE UNITED STATES SHOULD LEAD THE WAY

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an admirable address delivered by that distinguished American scholar, Nicholas Murray Butler, on the subject, The United States Should Lead the Way, delivered before the Economic Club of Chicago, Ill., on April 15, 1932.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To speak in the presence of this distinguished and exceptionally representative company of men of affairs is both an honor and a great privilege. These you have been good enough to give me and in addition have proposed as my topic, Our Times.

One wonders what new word can possibly be spoken on this subject which for years past has been discussed and debated in every part of the civilized world by outstanding statesmen, scholars, and men of affairs. As a result, the whole world is living in a state of quite unaccustomed and unfamiliar introspection. As objective values have rapidly fallen, subjective values have multiplied with equal rapidity. States of mind are now seen to be more important for the world's welfare, the world's peace, and the world's prosperity, and to have more direct influence upon these than the price of wheat, of cotton, of copper, of oil, the condition of the banks or the earnings of the railways. There have been times in past history when most distinguished individuals and groups have given themselves over to introspection and have thereby enriched the literature, the art, the philosophy, and the science of the world. For the first time, however, in these modern days, when the theory and practice of democracy had apparently been pretty firmly established throughout the whole western world, we find introspection compelling the attention not only of the few but of very many. Men everywhere are turning their intellectual gaze inward, to ask what can be the matter with our customary convictions, our customary habits, our customary practices, our customary feelings, that they have allowed the world to come to the pass in which it now finds itself. This is a very striking phenomenon and must not be passed over without remark, for it offers a valuable clue to an understanding of what is going on. One thing which it means is that men may easily work themselves into so great a state of dissatisfaction with that to which they have been accustomed as to become steadily less critical of proposals for economic and political revolution.

By odd coincidence, a short time ago I came upon the text of what was grandiloquently described as an oration delivered by me on being graduated from the high school of my home town in New Jersey. Its title was, "The Age in which We Live," and this is its opening sentence: "This is indeed a wonderful age." To-night, after all the long and crowded years that have intervened, I can only repeat those words of boyhood: "This is indeed a wonderful age." It is so primarily because it is the theater for the display of the effects of many and varied forces, long in operation, which are now at work under the wholly new intellectual, economic, and political conditions which the twentieth century provides. It is not so long ago that those various organized groups of men which are called nations were widely separated both in time and space; the electric spark has wholly destroyed that separation and brought men, wherever they may be placed on the surface of this earth, close together in almost instant contact. It is not so long ago that foreign trade and exploration were almost interchangeable terms; now the conditions of foreign trade and of domestic trade are practically indistinguishable. It is not so long ago that the man who had visited another country or who had seen another continent than his own was a rarity; now there are millions of human beings traveling over the surface of the earth day by day and making themselves familiar through personal contact with cities and countries and personalities which were once as remote as Jupiter or Saturn. The fundamental fact of our times is that we are living in a new kind of world, a world of independent, if you please, but also of interdependent nations, no one of which can long prosper or gain influence without the cooperation and concurrence of its fellow-nations. Until men generally get this fundamental fact in their heads, they will have no understanding of our times and can make no possible or practical contribution toward the solution of the really appalling problems which confront us on every hand.

It is now beginning to be understood that if, under these conditions of interdependence, modern nations insist upon waging international war on any pretext or for any reason whatsoever, they must be prepared to pay the bill; and also that there is not wealth enough in the world to pay that bill without destroying the world's prosperity for generations. Moreover, we are now learning that nations can fight destructive and costly war with national selfishness, national jealousy, and high tariffs quite as successfully and quite as disastrously as with armies and navies and air forces.

It is just 13 years and 5 months since the military hostilities of the Great War were brought to an end by the armistice, and it is not yet 13 years since the treaties of Versailles, of the Trianon, and of St. Germain were signed which attempted to record and to settle the issues of that war. The military hostilities ended on November 11, 1918, but the intellectual, the emotional, the economic, and the political hostilities are still going on, and these are the fundamental cause of the economic and financial disaster and paralysis which have overtaken the whole world and which justly give us so much concern at this moment here in the United States. This has been said so many times and has been demonstrated so often that one would suppose that by this time everyone would understand. On the contrary, there are large bodies of public opinion in this land and in several other lands which show no capacity whatever to grasp or to understand these facts, and at Washington, as well as at several other capitals, the most incredible nonsense is constantly talked on this subject. To the best of my knowledge and belief, there is no dissent among those who know in any land in respect to this matter, but there appears to be an overwhelming majority of those who do not know, and it is to these that argument and exposition must be directed.

Put bluntly, the specific primary cause of the plight in which our farmers, our manufacturers, our merchants, our railways, and our bankers find themselves is the attempt not only to pay war reparations and so-called intergovernmental war debts, but to pay these across frontiers that are guarded by high and thick tariff walls which do not permit international payments to be made in goods. A quick result has been an unnatural and unwarranted distribution of gold which lies useless and sterilized at one or two financial centers. Gold thereby steadily increases in price measured in goods and services, while this, of course, causes a simultaneous fall in the price of every other known commodity. That is the most succinct statement which I am able to make of what I regard as the basic fact in the present economic situation. We are all calling aloud for a return of prosperity while supporting our governments in precisely those policies which make a return to prosperity impossible.

If international policies had been adopted 10 years ago that not only permitted but encouraged international settlements in terms of goods and services, we should have had perhaps a difficult situation, but certainly one far less tragic than that in which we now find ourselves. When international payments in gold were substantially insisted upon, it did not take long to make it clear that the whole amount of gold in the world was not sufficient to pay more than a fraction of these enormous reparations and so-called intergovernmental debts. Then a new situation developed, to which Winston Churchill has recently called attention and which would be comic were it not so tragic. The nations that found themselves victorious in the great war, so far from being able to collect vast sums in reparations from the nations that were defeated, actually loaned those nations the money with which to pay the amounts that the victorious nations have thus far received. Really one would suppose that we were witnessing opera bouffe in all this instead of facing the stern realities of a world that deludes itself into thinking it is practical.

Deflation has gone on to an extent which is without parallel, and every day the value of what we do and of what we own is falling, not only in those countries which are without a supply of gold, but in those, France and the United States, which have gold in superabundance. It is all this which has shaken public confidence, which has stopped credit, which has enormously reduced traffic on the railways, which has closed down manufacturing establishments, which has left the farmer without a compensating market, and which has thrown out of employment millions upon millions of men and women who are able, willing, and glad to work. Moreover, this process has gone on so long and so far that it has greatly increased the embarrassment of every debtor. The standard of measurement in which his debt was contracted several years ago has been greatly lengthened by the rise in the price of gold, and in payment of his debt he must now be prepared to offer in goods and services at least some 35 per cent, more in value than he borrowed. Is it any wonder that every sort and kind of financial heresy is raising its head when such conditions prevail?

In fact, the disaster which has come upon us all is quite comparable, whether measured in magnitude or in severity, to the disaster of the World War itself. To-day there are more men out of work than there were under arms in the great war, and the direct financial losses which have been incurred since 1918 have already exceeded the direct financial losses of that war. To the United States alone the money cost of the war is put by our best authority at thirty-seven and one-half billion dollars.

The notion so often advanced here in the United States that we are simply passing through one more natural period of depression and panic from which we shall recover as we recovered from others that preceded it, is wholly illusory. These amazing conditions bear no relation whatever, either in origin or in character, to those which we are accustomed to associate with the years 1837, 1857, 1873, 1893, and 1907. Those ingenious persons who are drawing graphs and making tables to show when business will return to normal and when prices will rise, following the precedents of those earlier depressions, are wasting their time. Unless we remove the basic causes of this present depression, there is no assurance of any automatic check to it whatever until there comes about a complete paralysis of all business activity. Here in the United States, as in Great Britain, something has been done to deal with some of the aspects of the crisis that are clearly local and internal. It is quite obvious, however, that as yet nothing of any fundamental character has been undertaken to deal with those basic international aspects which are controlling.

Because the great war turned the United States into the position of a creditor nation, there rests upon our Government a singularly weighty responsibility to take the initiative in dealing with the underlying causes of the present situation. It is of no use to repeat old and outworn formulas which have long since lost any meaning that they may ever have had; it is essential to look facts in the face in a spirit of realism and to deal with these facts in a spirit of human understanding, of human kindliness, and human sympathy.

What is needed, first of all, is a quick, drastic, and permanent reduction or complete abolition of all existing intergovernmental obligations which arose out of the World War. It is merely a tantalizing putting off of the day of reckoning to propose the moratorium, for a moratorium only postpones the day when the real issues must be definitely faced, no matter how grave they may be. This world crisis is essentially a crisis of confidence, and until the present paralyzing uncertainty with respect to the intergovernmental war obligations is ended world confidence will not be and can not be restored. Every government concerned would enrich itself and its people by joining in wiping out those obligations entirely.

Of all the outstanding intergovernmental war obligations, of course, the most onerous is that of Germany to pay reparations. Recent economic studies by disinterested and open-minded men have made it perfectly plain that, whether one likes it or not, Germany simply can not now pay the full charges put upon her under the Young plan, and is quite unlikely to be able to pay any considerable amount for some years to come. Of course, the principal European nations which are Germany's creditors on account of reparations are also debtors to the United States. For various reasons, but chiefly due to the prevailing depression, these nations are not now financially able to pay the United States the amounts due unless they in turn receive financial payments from Germany on account of reparations. It is therefore a purely legalistic and technical position for us to take when we say that there is no relationship between reparation payments and intergovernmental war debts. There is the closest and most definite relationship between them, because it is a relationship not of law but of fact. Our Government, in insisting upon a merely legalistic statement of this situation, has persistently closed its eyes to the facts. It is high time that its eyes were opened. These are the reasons why the initiative must be taken by the United States. In refusing to take that initiative, our Government is simply throwing the weight of its influence on the side of making the present crisis worse and more dangerous.

Moreover, it is quite ludicrous to say, as is said at Washington almost every day, that, if we cancel the so-called intergovernmental war debts, the amounts which we might have received in those payments will have to be made up by the American taxpayer. One would suppose that Washington had never heard of the fact that, because of the situation arising from these so-called intergovernmental war debts, we in America have lost many, many times over, in shrinkage of capital values and in loss of business, the sum total of what we could ever hope to receive from this source. The United States Treasury received in the last fiscal year some $240,000,000 on account of these so-called intergovernmental war-debt payments, but the losses from the collapse of our foreign trade have been ten times that amount and our Federal income tax has fallen off more than five times that amount. We present the unenviable picture of cutting off our national nose to spite our national face.

The language of the special advisory committee on the Young plan, which sat from December 9 to December 23, 1931, can not be improved upon. These are the words of the distinguished and skilled body of economists and men of affairs who constituted that committee: "The adjustment of all intergovernmental debts (reparations and other war debts) to the existing troubled situation of the world—and this adjustment should take place without delay if new disasters are to be avoided—is the only lasting step capable of reestablishing confidence, which is the very condition of economic stability and real peace. We appeal to the governments on whom the responsibility for action rests to permit of no delay in coming to decisions which will bring an amelioration of this grave crisis which weighs so heavily on all alike."

Is it not clear then that the world's most competent economists have done all that they can do to make us understand the situation and its gravity? They clearly put the responsibility for a continuance of the present situation where it belongs, namely, upon the governments, the organized political forces of the world. Under these circumstances, the political party in the United States, or the candidate for high political office, that declares opposition to any plan for the readjustment of the so-called intergovernmental war debts to the existing economic and financial situation, merely declares in favor of prolonging the existing depression, with all the sorrow, with all the suffering, and with all the distress which that means. Surely this is a frightful responsibility for any political party or for any individual candidate to assume!

In the second place, there must be a quick movement for a world-wide revision and reduction of tariff schedules if industry and trade in the United States and elsewhere are to revive. Any one who has seen the very striking model prepared by Sir Clive Morrison-Bell, which shows present-day Europe and its tariff barriers, will see at a glance just why business is at so low an ebb. The world is calling out for a revival of business in theory while in practice it is working hard to prevent that revival. The grotesquely high levels of the world's present tariffs and the very bureaucratic and vexatious methods which attach to their administration have for several years past either impeded, or wholly prevented, the normal flow of products between various countries, have put obstacles to, or wholly prevented, the normal payment of private international debts, and have contributed powerfully as an underlying cause to bring about and prolong the present world depression. It is conceivable that a high tariff may be advantageous now and then for a single country acting alone; but when all countries simultaneously build such barriers to trade there can be but one result—and that is loss of trade, unemployment, and suffering. We in the United States are just now one of the chief offenders in the matter of tariff legislation. The arguments of Alexander Hamilton were, in my judgment, quite conclusive in their day and so were the arguments of Garfield and Blaine and McKinley. Each one of those statesmen, however, definitely looked forward to a time when the tariff legislation which he advocated would have accomplished its purpose and when a larger freedom of trade could wisely and profitably be brought about. The existing tariff in the United States, some of whose import duties are alleged to be even greater than 100 per cent, and many of whose duties are completely prohibitive, not only restricts our imports unduly but restricts in equal degree the normal and legitimate foreign markets for our agricultural and manufacturing exports which would be so valuable to us. A nation can not sell when it will not buy. In addition, our tariff has made it exceedingly difficult and almost impossible for debtors in other lands to pay their obligations to us, and it has thereby penalized our American banks and investors. It would not be difficult to trace a definite connection between our tariff schedules and some of the recent defaults on foreign bonds.

As a leading commercial nation and as the world's largest international creditor, it is the United States which should take the initiative in trying to correct the present disastrous tariff situation. Action by the United States alone, or any one-sided action on our part, might easily do even more harm than good. Since the disease is international in character, the cure must be international in method. What is needed is joint and reciprocal action by all the leading nations working in concert. If the American Government would begin promptly the negotiation of reciprocal commercial treaties with other great industrial nations, treaties drafted with a view to bringing about very substantial reductions of prevailing rates of duty, great gain would result both at home and abroad. Other countries would with certainty eagerly follow the lead of the United States. A marked expansion of world trade would quickly result, and we should receive back many times over the value of any initial sacrifices which we might make, whether these were real or only apparent.

It is also of importance in this connection that we give sympathy and support to the movements going forward in other parts of the world to build up new economic unions for increasing the area of freedom of trade. The plan brought forward by M. Briand three years ago for an economic union of Europe is sound in principle and, I believe, wholly practical. Steps are now being taken which may easily lead to an important economic understanding and cooperation among the six governments of the Balkan Peninsula. Several South American countries are feeling their way toward creating an economic union in that part of the world. Here in the United States we have such an economic union of vast area, over the whole of which freedom of trade prevails and must prevail. It would be greatly to our advantage if these new economic unions should come into existence, for trade would be revived and there would hereafter be fewer public authorities to deal with in our various commercial and international negotiations. Moreover, the mere existence of such economic unions, should they prove successful, would tend to bring them together in larger groups of constantly greater significance and importance. It seems quite certain that the existence of such economic unions would increase political stability as well as economic prosperity.

The vast increase in our foreign trade in the period from 1913 to 1929, amounting as it did to no less than 84.5 per cent, is a splendid and convincing evidence of what should be permanently possible. The recent sharp decline in this trade, more than 50 per cent in two years, emphasizes what has already been said. As trade declined, tariff obstacles were strengthened and multiplied. In our own case, the law enacted in June, 1930, increased the tariff rates then existing on no fewer than 655 articles which enter into our international commerce. This step invited action by Canada, by Mexico, by Argentina, and other Latin-American countries, and more recently by France, by Spain, and by Turkey, to restrict or to penalize imports from the United States. International war of this kind may do almost as much damage, and is just as much an objectionable instrument of national policy, as war waged with armies, navies, and air forces which 60 nations have joined together to renounce through becoming signatory to the pact of Paris.

Any survey of Our Times, however brief, would be incomplete which did not mention and emphasize another economic problem of highest importance. This problem also is pretty nearly world-wide in its incidence and in its effects, but it is one which would exist even were there no problems of the sort which have just now been discussed. This is the condition which has arisen, very sharply and very definitely here in the United States, because of the multiplication of the power of the people to produce without accompanying increase in their capacity to consume. When agricultural and industrial processes were simple and local, such a condition could not arise. The industrial revolution, however, together with man's greatly multiplied power over the forces of nature, his development of mass production both in agriculture and in industry, and the multiplication of agencies of communication and transportation, have flooded the country with those articles which man most needs for the support and comfort of his daily life. Nevertheless, millions of our fellowmen stand helplessly before this flood of plenty and are without the means to acquire for themselves and their families that portion of it which they themselves most need. Is it not plain that somewhere in our economic organization there is grave structural weakness? It is futile to lay emphasis on overproduction when there are literally hosts of men and women anxious to become consumers but without the means with which to do so. Somewhere and somehow there is plainly failure in the distribution of the profits and rewards of industry.

These facts bring us face to face with the most fundamental question which can ever confront organized human society. Shall we retain our historic faith in liberty and move heaven and earth so to act under the protection of liberty and the economic, the social, and the political institutions which it calls into being as to commend those institutions to the faith and support of the general will, or must we turn our backs upon liberty and offer allegiance to one of those various forms of compulsion which are everywhere clamoring to take liberty's place? A disciplined people, with a conscious historic background of development and achievement, will wait a long time before undertaking to overturn the foundations upon which its social, economic, and political order rests; but, on the other hand, millions upon millions of human beings must not be expected indefinitely to find themselves economically outlawed without grasping at almost any alternative in the hope of relief. The only possible chance that either doctrinaire socialism or communism can ever have in the western world will come from our failure to work the institutions of liberty in the spirit of social, economic, and political justice. The time has fully come for us in the United States to put on our thinking caps. We must be prepared to consider some unfamiliar policies as offering possible relief from an impossible situation. Plans of one kind or another are suggested almost daily, but no man has yet shown himself wise enough to tell us just what may prove to be practicable and quickly helpful. Some words recently written in a dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Brandeis, of the United States Supreme Court, should be heard throughout the length and breadth of these United States. "To stay experimentation in things social and economic is a grave responsibility," he wrote. "Denial of the right to experiment may be fraught with serious consequences to the Nation. * * * If we would guide by the light of reason, we must let our minds be bold." Surely this is the doctrine of liberal and open-minded progress!

We dare not content ourselves with denouncing those alternatives to liberty which compulsion has to offer without strengthening liberty against their attacks by proving that it can adapt itself to present-day economic and social conditions without breach of fundamental principle. Unrestricted and law-compelled competition for private gain without regard to social service will not serve the public interest. The exploitation of a people's natural resources solely for individual profit will not do. Sherman laws and Clayton acts are out of date. What we need and must quickly find is a way to get new and controlled means of organized effort so to produce and so to distribute the returns from production as to cause consuming power to grow, to keep pace with that of production. We must seek to find a working plan or plans for better industrial organization and development. To do that we must try experiments and be free to do them without legal obstacles.

Russia has chosen her way for a time at least. We see the Russian people turning their backs in this twentieth century upon all the lessons of the history of civilization and starting once more in an economic Garden of Eden to live over again the history of our race at huge cost and colossal waste of human power and human feeling with entire certainty that when that course has been finished it will end at the same place where the human race now finds itself after thousands of years of effort and experience. We see in other lands, and here and there in our own land, well organized and sometimes powerful groups of those who are ready to renounce and denounce Liberty in any form and to accept the extreme compulsion of communism, not only with resignation but with enthusiasm and even hilarity. Surely, these are odd sights after all that the human race has gone through and after all that history has to teach. Liberty has certainly had a long and troubled history. Those who abuse its opportunities and its privileges sometimes seem almost as numerous as those who would try to prevent liberty's growth and progress. Nevertheless, if the history of civilization has any one lesson to teach which is clear and convincing it is that liberty of thought, of speech, and of action is the foundation on which human nature can build its highest, its finest, and its most lasting accomplishments. But if these results are to follow, liberty must be more than a parade ground for selfish ambition or for the wish and the willingness to trample underfoot one's fellowmen. Liberty exists not for one man but for all men. The one man makes the most of himself, judged by the loftiest and most enduring standards, when he has constantly in mind the needs and the interests of his fellowmen. He must not use liberty to wage war upon his kind, but to cooperate with his kind for the advancement of the good of each and all. Let me repeat once more a sentence which I have spoken in more lands than one: "The free man, socially minded, is the hope of the world."

"THE INSULL DEBACLE"—ARTICLE FROM THE CAPITAL TIMES

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "The Insull Debacle—Its Significance," published in the Capital Times, of Madison, Wis., on April 17, 1932.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE INSULL DEBACLE—ITS SIGNIFICANCE

The Insull debacle should serve to dispel effectively the myth that there is security in bigness. For years there has been a propaganda, inspired by the private utility interests, which has sought to justify the syndicate and holding-company type of utility operation by claiming that it would bring superstability, superefficiency, and supermanagement. It has been contended that the smaller units could not work out the economies that would come through the centralized and consolidated operation of utilities represented by such colossal organizations as the Insull group.

The crash that has come in the gigantic structure of holding companies erected under that former superman, Samuel Insull, should now pretty effectively dispose of the legend which has been built up through the expenditure of millions of dollars of utility funds for propaganda purposes.

The billions of dollars in public-utility securities which have been dumped upon the American people through the pyramiding of capitalization structures since the advent of the holding company will bring hardships to the American people through losses in these securities that in our estimation will give a great impetus to public ownership.

The Capital Times believes that the Insull smash-up has revealed the inherent weakness of the holding-company arrangement. The weakness in the type of structure reared by the Insulls lay in the fact that they were not primarily public-utility operators; that they sought their biggest profits by using the public utilities which they acquired for stock-market and financial manipulations. The Insulls did not expect to make their big profits by selling gas, electric, and telephone service. They made their real profits by setting up water-logged stock and bond structures around these utilities, and then dumping billions of dollars in securities on the public, which were far in excess of the real worth of the properties.

Their only justification for setting up these huge capitalization structures was in their expectancy of future increased earnings. In other words, they have left investors holding the bag because they tried to capitalize the future. The day of reckoning has come. The Insull properties, including some of the finest properties in the country (among them the Wisconsin Power & Light Co.) are now unable to make a return on the huge pyramid of holding-company capitalization which has been superimposed on these properties, and now the whole thing comes tumbling down.

The Insull crash could have been foretold from the tactics which were begun in Wisconsin years ago. In their craze to acquire every available utility in Wisconsin, prices were offered that were all out of line with the actual value of the properties. But the Insull people figured that the purchase price was unimportant—that they could get the purchase price and much more back by increasing utility rates and recapitalizing these properties far in excess of their actual value. The practice pursued in Wisconsin was followed by the Insull interests all over the country. As a result there was projected into the Insull capitalization structure billions of dollars in water on which, in this period of depression, the water-logged Insull properties can not earn a return.

The Insull debacle forcibly shows the advantage of public ownership over private ownership of the Insull type. Under public ownership the indebtedness of the utility is retired as quickly as possible in order that overhead costs can be reduced and the rates lowered. In private utility management of the Insull type the capital obligations are never retired because then their subsidiary financial companies will be shorn of the opportunity to make profits in the sale of utility stocks and bonds. Reputable economists now maintain that borrowed money is one of the big factors in the rate structure.

The Insull affair has conclusively demonstrated that the public needs of the people as represented by electric, gas, and telephone services can not be turned over to companies that are more interested in making speculative profits than they are in rendering public service.

The American people have invested billions of dollars in private utility securities. They bought these securities as a result of high-pressure sales campaigns, misleading propaganda about stock ownership by the public, and lurid propaganda on the stability centering around such supermen as Insull. Millions of dollars of this stock was unloaded on underpaid employees and the sycophant newspapers praised these big utilities for this "employee-ownership plan."

Millions of people have now lost their savings. They are holding the bag. How long are the American people going to turn their public needs over to private, speculative manipulators who are more interested in making huge profits for themselves than they are in protecting the public interests?

ADDRESS OF GOV. ALBERT C. RITCHIE AT NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC RALLY

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I present and ask leave to have published in the RECORD an address delivered by Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, of Maryland, at the national Democratic rally, on Jefferson's birthday, at the Willard Hotel, in this city.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

The American people are at the political crossroads. One way lies the certainty of four more years of the kind of government which was bound to end, and has ended, in disaster. The other way lies the hope of an overtaxed, overgoverned and underemployed people.

Time permits little more than the discussion of some one feature of the political picture. Let me select the repeated efforts of Republican spokesmen and Republican publicity to confuse and mislead the American people.

The latest instance of this arises from the refusal of the Democratic House of Representatives to enact a sales tax as part of the revenue bill necessary to balance the extravagant Republican Budget and by that means forestall an additional Republican deficit of more than $1,000,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933.

They tell us that this shows the Democratic Party to be incapable of that leadership and statesmanship which the momentous questions confronting the country require.

It is time to stand up in meeting and resent and refute this charge as a thing wholly unjustified.

There is no valid reason why the people of this country, because of the sales tax or anything else, should indorse the inefficiency, inaction, and maladministration of the Republican Party or should fail to give a mandate of complete power to the Democratic Party, which has won the right to assume the guidance and direction of an unguided, misdirected, and badly engineered ship of state.

The Federal fiscal situation is that a Republican President and a Republican Congress put this country in the red and then proposed and passed one unbalanced Budget after another, and kept it there.

The 1933 deficit, which they called upon the Democratic House to avoid by additional taxation, is a Republican deficit—a Hoover deficit—pure and simple; and the taxes, whatever their form, which must be levied on the American people as one way of meeting it, are Republican taxes—Hoover taxes—made necessary by Republican mismanagement.

The attempt to shift responsibility for the existing fiscal situation from the Republican administration where it belongs to the Democratic Party where it does not belong has its parallel in the efforts—repeated at intervals and which ought not to prevail—to cancel our foreign debts and shift them from the shoulders of the foreign nations which owe them to the shoulders of the American people who do not.

It is not the duty of Congress to prepare the Budget. It is the President's duty to do that, and it is his duty to submit one which balances. President Hoover has not fulfilled that duty. He has abdicated it for two years and a half.

The crash came in October, 1929. That was an unmistakable signal. Almost anyone in Federal authority could foresee then the danger that decreased revenues and falling values which were causing deficits in business would, if continued, cause deficits in government, too.

Did the President of the United States or anybody in the Republican administration show any signs of realizing that danger and guarding against it? They did not. On the contrary, in December, 1929, they struck 1 per cent from the income tax rates for one year in order to encourage business to expand when the country was suffering from too much expansion already. This decreased Federal revenues about $180,000,000, and it would have been better to have used that sum either for public works, which would alleviate unemployment, or to have put it in surplus as an offset against the onrushing deficit.

This was no mere error of judgment or lack of foresight. Either of these would have been inexcusable at such a time. But it was worse than that. It was part of the President's fixed policy that by some sort of legerdemain business would revive and prosperity return if only the American people could be deluded into believing that good times were hiding just around the corner.

Instead of that, worse times were coming, and they were not in hiding, either. By December, 1930, when the next Budget was submitted, the deficit was growing larger every month. What a sound fiscal policy required was plain. Taxes had to be increased, and expenditures decreased. But the President proposed neither.

As late as September, 1931, with a deficit from the preceding fiscal year (ended July 1, 1931) of $902,716,845, and with the current fiscal year already in the red, the President still insisted that there was no need for increased taxes and made no effort to institute economies.

Not until November, 1931, did the President concede the necessity for tax increase, and his belated call for economy then pretty well worked itself out over a cut of $17,000,000 from the Navy's previous appropriation of $360,000,000.

They talk about leadership and statesmanship. How much did the Republican administration display when the Budget now being considered was submitted in December, 1931? It called for expenditures aggregating $4,112,909,950, and the President estimated revenues at $2,695,960,502, leaving a deficit of $1,416,949,448. Of this deficit, $497,000,000 was for sinking fund requirements and $920,000,000 ($919,949,448) for general purposes, and certain new and increased taxes were proposed to meet this.

Two months later (February 8, 1932), after the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee had been closed, Secretary of the Treasury Ogden L. Mills suddenly appeared before the committee and confessed that his original estimates had gone bad already, and that the deficit for general purposes would be $321,000,000 more than anticipated ($1,241,000 instead of $920,000,000), and that the new or increased taxes proposed would produce $134,000,000 less than anticipated ($786,000,000 instead of $920,000,000), so that the committee had to find ways of raising $455,000,000 more than had been originally estimated.

Neither then nor at any other time did the President make any suggestion of recalling the Budget, so that he might recommend ways and means of meeting this unexpected increase in the deficit of nearly half a billion dollars, and thus discharge his executive responsibility of submitting a Budget which balanced. All he did was one week later (February 15, 1932) send Mr. Mills before the committee to propose raising the additional revenue principally by taxes on gasoline and on the users of gas and electricity, and by making income-tax rates retroactive and increasing postal rates.

With this record it ill becomes the Republican administration to cry lack of leadership about anything. A litigant will not be heard at the bar of equity unless he comes with "clean hands." No lesser standard should be exacted of the organization of a political party when it appears at the bar of the American public. It should come with clean hands. The Republican administration has not done that.

Now for the sales tax. This was but one of the many items of the revenue bill recommended by the Ways and Means Committee. It was designed to raise $600,000,000 of a total of more than $4,112,000,000. The committee substituted it in large part for the tax on gasoline, which belongs to the States, for the discriminatory tax on households and business using gas and electricity and for the proposal to make the new tax rates on income applicable to last year's income as well as this year's, all of which the Republican administration had recommended. Certainly those proposals had little to commend them, and the Democrats on the committee were against them.

When the bill reached the floor of the House, the sales-tax feature was struck out, and thereupon the chorus went up from Republican sources, led by Republicans who within the brief space of a few weeks had managed to be on both sides of the question, and joined in by others who did not seem to think for themselves—the chorus went up that the Democratic Party had failed the country and could not betrusted with the responsibilities of government. I say that chorus went up because the Republican administration has its own ineptitudes and shortcomings to cover up, and tried its usual tactics to do it.

You may approve or you may disapprove of the revenue bill in its present form. Personally, I like some of its provisions and do not like others, and I suppose it is the same way with you.

For instance, I was for the sales tax, not because I believe in it in principle, but because it seemed to me that all things considered it was the best way out of the emergency.

So I was not for the taxes on oil and coal because I thought that if we are to have those imposts they ought to be in a tariff bill and not in a tax bill.

And I am for a tax which would accompany the substitution of State determination and local self-government for national prohibition, and turn into the United States Treasury revenues which at present go to illegitimate sources and would, I believe, relieve the tax-oppressed American citizen from this added oppression of still more taxes when he has more than he can bear already.

But you can never please everybody with everything in or out of a tax bill, and it was that way with the sales-tax item. Not only Democrats in the House but Republicans, too, found widespread opposition to it. Many feel that such a tax bears heaviest on those least able to stand it and that it would prevent the early recovery of the purchasing power of the people.

What right has anyone to criticize the Democratic Party because Democratic Members of the House choose to adopt that view? Far from "running wild," as the Republican publicity would have the country believe, the Democratic House went promptly to work, substituted other taxes, and completed and passed the revenue bill within a few days after the defeat of the sales tax. At least the Democratic House sent to the Senate a Budget which balanced within the Treasury figures available at the time, and that is more than President Hoover sent to the House.

Moreover, the bill is not a law yet. It is now in the Senate, where hearings are being held, and when it passes that body it will doubtless go to a conference committee of the House and Senate, where its final form will be determined. Suppose those who are so quick and so prone to find fault wait for the bill as it finally passes, and I predict they will discover that, if Democratic votes can do it, there will be a balanced Budget, with the credit of the country maintained and unimpaired.

So much for the intake. How about the outgo? If one thing is clearer than another, it is that a government in the red must reduce expenses. Individuals and business have to do that when they are running behind, and government must do it, too. Instead of eternally talking about more and ever more new sources of revenue or more and ever more increases in existing sources of revenue, the Federal Government should give more thought to spending not more, not the same, but less of the savings and earnings of the American people.

Everything that has been done in Congress to accomplish this has been done by Democrats under Democratic leadership. Congressman BYRNS, Democratic chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, proposed (February 15, 1932) as a Democratic measure a select committee to study and report on governmental economies, and the resolution to the same purport of Congressman DOUGLAS, a Democrat, was passed.

In the Senate the distinguished Democratic floor leader, Senator ROBINSON, introduced a resolution for a joint committee of Congress to undertake the task of reorganizing the Government. Senator GEORGE, of Georgia, introduced a resolution to give the President blanket power to make changes in the interest of economy. Senators ROBINSON and MCKELLAR, against strong Republican opposition, won their fight (March 17, 1932) to return the Interior Department budget to it with instructions to cut the total by 10 per cent. Six weeks before Senator HARRISON'S motion to instruct the Appropriations Committee to reduce the total Budget by $300,000,000 was voted down, with Democratic leaders for it.

In the last two weeks, after the Democrats in both House and Senate had done all the pioneer work for reducing governmental expenses, President Hoover came forward to propose a commission on economy, and, failing to get that, he invited the House Economy Committee to the White House to consider with him what can be cut from the Budget estimates he himself submitted.

That ought to get us somewhere at last, and already very substantial reductions are promised. But it has taken a long, long time, and it has required a lot of Democratic persistence, for Mr. Hoover to see that the only way to cut expenses is to cut them.

And why, with financial storm and chaos breaking around his head, has the President not realized that there is no need of waiting for the next Budget to institute economies? The law fixes the limit of appropriations, but the law does not require the departments to spend up to the limit. Yet it never seems to occur to anybody in the Republican administration that this staggering deficit could at least be minimized by the simple process of not spending, except for the essential functions of government.

And how much can we expect from the President's efforts even now, when we find member after member of his own Cabinet—State, Treasury, Commerce, Labor, and Law—advising the Senate Appropriations Committee that they are unable to find ways to retrench in their departments? They were all running well enough 5 years ago, even 10 years ago. Why can't they go back to those expenditures? Except possibly the Department of Commerce, which had not then erected its $17,500,000 monument to bureaucracy. Perhaps they can not be expected to go back very cheerfully, when they read that, with prices on everything going down, the President himself spends a third more to run his own Executive Office than did President Coolidge.

The Democratic Party has been protesting for 12 years against this kind of government. The high ideals that characterized the administrations of Woodrow Wilson were discarded when the Republicans returned to power, and after inaugurating what they called "normalcy," proceeded to pillage and betray the interests and welfare of the country. They succeeded, perhaps on the theory that "prosperity absorbs everything" and "guilt is personal," in regaining power in 1924 and again in 1928, when two great Democrats from New York, John W. Davis and Alfred E. Smith, campaigning on honest platforms of sound economic and political principles, went down to honorable defeat. But they have at last reached the end of the rope. There are no defenses and no pleas available. Their one panacea for all ills of misrule—prosperity—is gone.

Looking back over 12 years we see disarmament conferences which failed to disarm; foreign policies—if, indeed, they can be called policies—weak, ineffective, and incompetent; tariffs which destroyed our foreign trade and encouraged American industry to go abroad and there employ foreign labor at the very moment when American labor is out of a job; treaties to outlaw war which failed to outlaw attacks by one nation upon another; and economic policies which resulted in the most gigantic crash of the whole economic structure ever witnessed by the American people. We have a surplus of wheat when American citizens need food, a surplus of cotton with a deficit of clothes, and more than 8,000,000 men and women anxious to work but compelled to walk the streets in idleness and seek charity in order to survive.

Where is the leadership that should have acted to prevent the catastrophe, and which, when it was upon us, should have been alert to mobilize the resources of the Nation to meet the crisis and decrease its harmful effects? Certainly not in the Republican Party. Its chiefs were busy in 1929 trying to prove that there was no danger. They were still busier in 1930 explaining away the increasing unemployment, the widening depression, and the collapse of industry, and promising that prosperity, momentarily away, was just around the corner. In 1931 and 1932 they have become less vocal in their promises and performances and are reduced to the expedient of seeking flaws in the Democratic Party. Soon after he took office in 1929, the President called a special session of Congress to enact legislation for farm relief and to make "limited changes" in the tariff. The Farm Board was created, but farm relief—real, tangible relief that will restore the farmer to his proper place in the economic scheme—is farther away than ever. The Republican Congress ignored the President's plea for "limited changes" in the tariff. It passed the iniquitous Hoover-Grundy bill, and the President, forgetting his stand for "limited changes," signed the bill and added to the woes of the American people.

Whatever leadership the President or his party leaders may claim has not been exerted in Congress, and particularly not in the Senate, which has refused to follow the Republican leaders for more than seven years. Important legislation was passed over the presidential veto by the Republican Congress on more than one occasion during the Coolidge administration, and appointments to high office made during the past seven years have been rejected again and again by a hostile Senate.

The temper of the American people is shown by the elections of November, 1930. The Democrats were given control of the House and made important gains in membership in the Senate. The events since then have confirmed the wisdom of repudiating the Republican administration. It got into office by false pretenses, and its incapability has now been demonstrated by refutation. The Democratic Party under Woodrow Wilson passed more progressive legislation in a single term than had been enacted in a generation. It successfully brought this country through the greatest war in history. It possesses the principles of Jefferson, Jackson, and Cleveland, and it has the men to put those principles into practice, to furnish the Nation with the leadership and guidance it lacks so greatly and needs so badly.

The Democratic Party can not be injured by defeatist propaganda. It is equipped and it is ready. The Nation is about to turn to it as the only hope. The Democratic Party will respond to the call. It will lead the way back to those principles of Government under which confidence in ourselves and in our destiny will be restored, and a happier day for all the American people will dawn.

SPEECH OF FORMER REPRESENTATIVE MITCHELL

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I present and ask leave to have published in the RECORD a speech delivered by Hon. Alexander Mitchell, of Wisconsin, in the House of Representatives on March 27, 1874, the House then having under consideration legislation to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

CURRENCY AND FREE BANKING

Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the recent action of the House in legalizing the issue of United States legal-tender notes to the extent of $400,000,000, it is none the less necessary that in considering the bill now before the House the monetary question should be discussed in all its bearings, both in reference to what the currency now is and what it ought to be.

While the few observations I am about to make will be to some extent general in their character, yet I trust they will be found to have a direct bearing on the bill under consideration.

The difficulty with which the subject of the finances and the currency is surrounded is only equaled by its importance.

It is true that of late extraordinary progress has been made in the study of political economy and in the elucidation of the principles underlying the production and distribution of a nation's wealth. Yet it is equally true that so subtle, and oftentimes remote, are the different influences to be considered, arising not only from the laws of trade but also from the still more uncertain movements of men, as they may be dictated by reason, interest, or feeling, that there is probably no science where there are so many differences of opinion, and consequently so many erroneous opinions, as in the science of political economy. Especially is this the case with that branch of it which refers to the currency, and which, on account of the events of the last few months, it is expected by the people that this Congress will most carefully consider.

NO LEGISLATION CAN PREVENT PANICS

The opinion which is more or less prevalent in the minds of the people, that it is in the power of Congress to so regulate the circulating medium of the country as forever in the future to prevent a commercial crisis similar to that through which we have passed, may well be set down as a popular delusion. It matters not with what wisdom and care the laws regulating the currency are framed, and the innumerable contingencies which may arise be foreseen and provided for, we can never by any enactments of ours so overrule the irrevocable, inevitable laws of political economy as to enable those who live beyond their incomes "to make both ends meet," or to insure profitable returns to those who invest their means in undertakings which can never pay interest. Such financial disasters have occurred in all commercial nations and under very different circumstances, and they probably will continue to occur while human nature remains as it is. It is also likely that the more commercial a nation is, the more sharp and general will these revulsions be.

The producer of raw material sells it to the manufacturer, the manufacturer to the wholesale dealer, who in turn sells it to the retail dealer, and he to the farmer. There are hundreds and thousands of such chains in the business transactions of this country, and each link of the chain depends on the others. The inability of any one of the links in the chain to meet its liability creates distrust, and when distrust becomes general a panic ensues. Every man wants to get what is due him, being afraid that his debtors may fail; the deposits in the banks being payable on demand are most attainable, and a rush is made for them, to the great injury of the mercantile and manufacturing interests, which have received assistance from the banks. Such panics have occurred from the failure of crops, whereby the farmer has been prevented from paying the retail merchant, who in turn could not pay the jobber, and so on.

Again, overproduction, or the falling off in demand, has rendered the manufacturer unable to dispose of his products, and thereby he has not only failed to pay what he owed to the producer of raw material, but has been under the necessity of reducing the number of his workmen, causing ruin and destitution to thousands. After a number of prosperous years the surplus of capital seeking investiment becomes larger, and in consequence it is with more difficulty that it can be invested so as to bring in the large returns which it produced when there was less capital seeking investment. People then go out of the ordinary channels and seek for increased profits from all kinds of speculative and doubtful schemes. Much capital is thereby soon lost or sunk in enterprises which are not only nonproductive but from which it is impossible to get back the principal which has been put in; much movable, active capital becomes fixed and immovable and of no use whatever in carrying on the business of the country.

We can each judge for himself which, if any, of these causes produced the collapse of last fall. Some have attributed it to the sinking of capital in building unproductive railroads through unsettled portions of the country; others see the cause in the large amount of funds lying idle during summer in our commercial centers, which idle money sought investment in speculations from which it could not be withdrawn without producing a crash.

However different our views may be as to the cause of the recent revulsion, we can not but be unanimous that it is our duty to do all that is legitimately in our power to place the finances of the Nation in such a shape as to discourage the return of such a disaster, and in case of their occurrence to render their duration as short as possible.

WHAT DID NOT CAUSE THE CRISIS

As having an important bearing on the action to be taken by Congress, I can not refrain from giving it as my opinion that our recent financial troubles were not caused by an insufficiency of currency. After the panic was fairly under way and people were withdrawing currency and hoarding it, then the panic was no doubt aggravated by the scarcity of currency brought about by such action, and the desideratum of the hour was some means by which the gap made by the hoarded currency could be filled, some resource whence what had been withdrawn from circulation could be made good.

Had our currency been on a specie basis, and on a par with that of the specie-paying countries of Europe, we could soon have drawn from the clearing house of the world enough to supply the vacuum caused by those who had withdrawn money for the purpose of hoarding it. But the gold which did actually come to us, notwithstanding the fact that our currency was not on a specie basis, was of no use; it could not pass into circulation. It may be questioned if its importation was not, as matters stood, an actual damage to us by causing a flurry in the London money market and leading the Bank of England to raise its rate of interest, and thereby reacting unfavorably on the money market here, and on the values of our exportable commodities.

WE HAVE TOO MUCH CURRENCY

But the very fact that our currency is not at par with gold shows that it is not only not too small in volume, but that it is actually excessive. Our dollar notes are promises to pay a dollar. Our laws define a dollar to be a coin of a certain weight and fineness. Our paper promises, if not excessive and depreciated, should be good for the coin whose name they bear. But that it may be still more apparent that a lack of currency was not the cause of our recent financial troubles, let us compare the amount of our present circulation with that of our own country before the war and with what it is in England at the present time.

The following table will show at a glance the population, wealth, and circulation in the United States in 1850, 1860, and 1870, and will completely set at rest any doubt as to whether our currency is excessive in quantity or not:

Year	Population	Assessed wealth	Circulation	Per head
1850	23,764,706	$7,135,780,228	[1] $150,000,000 [2] 400,000,000	$10.50
1860	31,127,000	12,084,560,000	[1] 200,000,000 [2] 150,000,000	11.30
1870	38,115,641	14,178,986,732	[1] 700,000,000	18.42

[1] Notes. [2] Coin.

From the circulation of 1870, exclusively irredeemable paper, I make no deduction for so-called bank reserves, because those reserves, held against deposits, form a necessary part of the circulation of the Nation, and are doing, in the coffers of the banks, duty as such equally with currency in the pocket of the citizen.

From this it appears that our circulation has been increased out of all due proportion to both our population and wealth.

By extending our research still further we would find that the note circulation of England to-day is actually less than it was in 1819 by $50,000,000, and amounts to only $6.50 per head of the population, the total increase of circulation being an increase of specie.

It is to be remembered, in comparing the circulation per capita of England with that of the United States, that the wealth of England is much greater than that of this country, and that a far greater proportion of it is in personal property, and so entering more largely into commercial transactions. Moreover, England is both the money and mercantile broker of all nations. A large proportion of the foreign trade of the United States is carried on through her.

CIRCULATION SHOULD NOT INCREASE IN THE SAME RATIO WITH WEALTH OR POPULATION

If $11.30 per head of circulation were sufficient for this country in 1860, the same ratio ought to be sufficient now, for the reason that population and wealth increase faster than should circulation. Every year witnesses new modes of economizing circulation. Bills of exchange, checks, deposits, clearing houses, telegraphs, railroads, and many other economizing devices and substitutes continually tend to lessen the work which circulation has to perform. The statistics of England are a most remarkable proof of this.

In 1819 the exports and imports were not twice the amount of note circulation; in 1844 they were about four times as much. In 1872 they were fourteen times as much. In 1844 the note circulation of England was £1 15s. 8d. per head, while in 1872 it was £1 6s. per head, showing that the circulation keeps pace neither with the amount of business nor the increase of population or of wealth.

We no longer look to the volume of circulation to ascertain the increase or decrease of business, but to the transactions of the clearing house. In 1844 the sums passed through the London clearing house were only about forty times the amount of note circulation, while in 1872 they were one hundred and thirty-five times as large. The same is seen in our own country.

In 1837 the circulation of the banks of the United States was $149,000,000; in 1861 it was $202,000,000, being an increase of 35 per cent. By comparing this with the increase of wealth and population from 1840 to 1860, it will be seen that the increase of our population was 82 per cent, and of our wealth 330 per cent, the one being more than twice as great as the increase of circulation, and the other nearly ten times as great, showing by the experience of our own country, as well as that of England, that circulation does not need to keep pace with population or wealth.

We often hear it remarked that before the war the country was flooded with State-bank notes of all kinds; yet the highest amount ever reached was in 1857, when it was $215,000,000, and even that amount caused an excessive expansion of credits which found relief in a financial crash.

I think, in view of all these and many other facts which might be brought forward, that there is no ground for the assertion made by some that the recent monetary revulsion was caused by a lack of circulation.

Any increase that might be made to the currency to gratify the present clamor of some would in the long run make it no more efficient for the carrying on of business. If you add to its quantity, you lessen its value. There would be an apparent increase of prices; it would take more paper promises to buy a given quantity of gold, wheat, lumber, or iron; these commodities would be worth no more, but the currency would be worth less and it would take more currency to represent an equal quantity of them.

If a bushel of wheat be to-day worth $1, and to-morrow you double the volume of paper notes in circulation, the bushel of wheat will bring $2 in such currency; but your doubled depreciated circulation does no more business than half its quantity did before.

A recent writer on political economy put this in the following lucid form:

"Ten persons were at play. For greater ease they had adopted a plan of each taking 10 counters, and against these they had placed a hundred francs under a candlestick, so that each counter corresponded to 10 francs. After a game the winnings were adjusted, and the players drew from the candlestick as many 10 francs as would represent the number of counters. Seeing this, one of them, a great arithmetician, perhaps, but an indifferent reasoner, said, 'Gentlemen, experience invariably teaches me that at the end of the game I find myself a gainer in proportion to the number of my counters; have you not observed the same with regard to yourselves? Thus, what is true of me must be true of each of you, and what is true of each must be true of all. We should, therefore, all of us gain more at the end of the game if we had all more counters. Now, nothing can be easier; we have only to distribute twice the number.'"

This was done; but when the game was finished and they came to adjust the winnings, it was found that the thousand francs under the candlestick had not been miraculously multiplied according to the general expectation. They had to be divided accordingly, and the only result obtained was this: Everyone had doubled the number of counters, but every counter, instead of representing 10 francs, represented only 5.

Now, those who clamor for an increase of note circulation want more counters; but each counter will, if its circulation be doubled, have but half its previous purchasing power.

It would be an easy matter to enlarge the volume of currency so that it would take 10 paper dollars to buy a bushel of wheat or 1 gold dollar, but no sane man will contend that the farmer would be getting any more value for his wheat than he gets to-day.

The reckless issue of vast quantities of paper currency which is irredeemable will soon cause the subversion of all values, and inflict serious injury on every business interest of the country. Every new issue diminishes the value, and the demand for still further issues will continue. Of course, the prices of commodities may not be affected uniformly or immediately; but it is only a matter of time.

Believing as I do that our present paper circulation is abnormal and redundant (facts sufficiently attested by its depreciation), and while I beg to be understood as not advocating any rapid or sudden contraction, I would not be true to my own convictions if I did not emphatically record my opinion that instead of increasing the issue of legal-tender inconvertible notes (a measure, in my judgment, fraught with the greatest danger to the business of the country), the true remedy for the existing state of affairs is to be found in the adoption by Congress of a fixed policy for the gradual withdrawal, at stated periods, of these notes by funding them into bonds or otherwise paying and canceling them. The extent of the reduction that may be necessary in order to make them equivalent to coin is a matter of opinion and estimate; but it is safe to say that if we were to begin at once with small monthly withdrawals during the periods of the year when currency can best be spared, we shall reach the specie point sooner and easier than most people now imagine.

It is, in my judgment, not so important that a long step, as that some step, however small, should be taken in the direction of restoring the currency to the coin standard; and that the country should understand that the policy thus adopted will be inflexibly followed out until the desired result is attained.

It is claimed by some that the increase of population and business will of itself soon bring us into a condition of specie payments; but this I regard as a delusion. A geological period will be insufficient to achieve this result so long as we pursue, as now, a system that effectually banishes the precious metals from among us.

So long as the Government furnishes a forced irredeemable currency there can be no stability or certainty as to its volume or its value, and the pressure now being brought to bear on Congress for further issues of depreciated paper compels me to avow myself a recent and somewhat reluctant convert to the doctrine that the sooner the Government can be wholly divorced from the business of issuing a forced paper circulation the better it will be for our country. The United States notes have effectually blocked the way to the coin standard, and still do so.

THE EVILS OF INFLATED CURRENCY

The history of commerce shows that false theories regarding currency, whereby extraordinary issues of paper money have been imposed on confiding peoples, have produced financial convulsions which have shaken the nations to their foundations, and produced ruin and misery more widespread than have ever been inflicted by famine or war.

The power to issue an irredeemable paper currency has probably never been granted or assumed without sooner or later being abused. It is an old adage that a man thinks all men mortal but himself; so we are apt to think our Nation will be an exception in regard to the abuses arising from an exorbitant issue of paper currency. From recent events I am led to think that our danger is greater than it should be.

I am aware that examples and illustrations drawn from the financial experiences of other countries are deemed by some to be inapplicable to us and therefore undeserving of consideration. For myself I think it is well to utilize the dearly bought experience of others; and to those who think it does not become us to look to other countries I have to say that the laws of trade, of supply and demand, of money and of currency, are as fixed and immutable and of as universal application as are the laws of gravitation.

It may not be unprofitable to briefly notice some of the instances in the past where great evils have resulted from false ideas of the nature and work of currency.

The French Government gave power to issue an inconvertible paper currency to Law's Bank in February, 1720; by the beginning of May they had issued notes of the nominal value of about $6,000,000,000, and 100 livres in paper were worth about 1 in silver.

In 1790 the French Government itself assumed such power and authorized the issues of $80,000,000 of assignats based on the security of the public domains, estimated to be worth $1,500,000,000. In September of the same year further issues to the amount of $160,000,000 were authorized. France was then a perfect paradise for inflationists; the country was on the high road to prosperity; everybody was to have all the money he wanted.

Talleyrand and a few other leaders opposed those issues as certain to cause depreciation; but Mirabeau and others ridiculed the idea of their becoming depreciated; for were they not based on land, and what more secure and solid as a foundation for currency could there be than land? And besides, it was not possible to set afloat more than the business wants of the nation would absorb.

Said Mirabeau:

"It is vain to assimilate assignats secured on the solid basis of these domains to an ordinary paper currency possessing a forced circulation. They represent real property, the most secure of all possessions, the land on which we tread. Why is a metallic circulation solid? Because it is based on subjects of real and durable value, as is the land which is directly or indirectly the source of all wealth. Paper money, we are told, will become superabundant; it will drive the metallic out of circulation. Of what paper do you speak? If of paper without a solid basis, undoubtedly; if of one based on the firm foundation of landed property, never. There can not be a greater error than the terrors so generally prevalent as to the overissue of assignats. It is thus alone you will pay your debts, pay your troops, advance the revolution. Reabsorbed progressively in the purchase of the national domains, this paper money can never become redundant any more than the humidity of the atmosphere can become excessive which descends in rills, finds the river, and is at length lost in the mighty ocean."

We hear at the present time many speeches similar to Mirabeau's, and they appear very plausible; yet we all know how the stern events of the future demolished the fine rhetoric of Mirabeau. Although these assignats bore 4 per cent interest, they had in a twelvemonth lost one-third their value. On the 11th of April, 1793, the severest penalties were decreed against anyone who bought or sold assignats for any sum in specie different from their nominal value, or made any difference between a specie price and a paper price in the purchase or sale of goods. But it is folly to attempt by legislative enactments to overrule the great laws of trade. In four months the assignats had fallen to one-sixth of their nominal value; and in 1796 they had fallen to one-thousandth part of their nominal value, notwithstanding the fact that they were secured by the public lands. The ruin and misery caused by the issue of these assignats you all know. At length, in July, 1796, the great paper fabric was wiped out with one stroke. Immense hoards of specie came forth from their hiding places; the exchanges turned in favor of France, and during all the Napoleonic wars the specie standard was maintained at its full value.

The history of similar experiments in other countries, if such were needed, shows that irredeemable paper money incapable of issue in foreign countries, and redundant at home from overissue, becomes depreciated.

The paper money of the Danish Government exchanged in 1813 at the rate of $1 in silver for $1,600 in paper; in Austria, in 1810, a silver florin was worth 13 in government paper.

At the beginning of the present century the Bank of England was led, to a limited extent, into the same mistake.

In 1797 there was a hue and cry, similar to what we hear at the present time in this country, that the circulation was not sufficient for the business wants of the community and should be increased.

On March 16 in the year 1797 the merchants of London held a meeting and resolved—

"That it is the opinion of this meeting that the accommodation afforded to the trade of the Kingdom by the Bank of England, in discount of bills and notes, has been found very inadequate to the present extended commerce of the country; that it is the opinion of this meeting that without an extension of the circulating medium of the Kingdom by the discount of mercantile bills and notes the general commerce of the country will be exposed to the most serious, immediate, and alarming evils."

Lord King and others of the ablest financiers of England showed the fallacy of this assumption of the merchants, that the amount of currency should be increased with the increased demand for discounts; the bank, however, enlarged its issues, and its paper became depreciated. The depreciation was greatest from 1809 to 1815. In 1814 and 1815 there was a great diminution of bank paper. In that period many country banks became bankrupt or at least stopped payment, and it is estimated by the best authorities that in 1814, 1815, and 1816 the currency was contracted at least $100,000,000. This decrease of the paper currency rendered the resumption of specie payments in 1819 possible.

An expanded depreciated currency can not be made interchangeable with the currency of other nations and so attain that elasticity which is so much demanded.

A currency which is not larger in volume than the minimum wants of trade demand would be on a par with specie, even if it were not convertible into specie, but in that case it would not have that elasticity so necessary in the functions of a circulating medium.

INTEREST NOT REGULATED BY QUANTITY OF CURRENCY

There is an impression in the minds of many, and I have seen it expressed in the reports of more than one public meeting, that the rate of interest depends on the quantity of currency in circulation. Nothing can be more erroneous. The rate of interest chiefly depends on the profits which can be made from the use of money. Of course, there are other elements which affect the rate of interest, such as the character of the security offered; but the great controlling element which regulates the rate of interest on money is the profits which can be made from its employment.

If a man sees where he can, by the use of money, make 20 per cent, he can afford to pay 10 per cent for its use. When many men see where they can use money to advantage, borrowers become many, and the rate of interest rises; but the quantity of currency in circulation has nothing whatever to do with the profits which result from the use of money. The increase of the quantity of circulation may raise the price of commodities, but can never increase the percentage of the profits of its employment.

Of course, if the currency be so increased in quantity as to become almost worthless, men may lend it cheaper to get rid of it, especially if the borrower is likely to have to repay it in a more valuable currency at some future time; but in any normal condition of the circulation its quantity has nothing whatever to do with the rate of interest—at any rate, in the direction to which I have alluded.

The financial history, both of England and of this country, would seem to show that the rate of interest is apt to be highest when the circulation is the largest. An increase of circulation tends to raise prices, and a rise in prices encourages speculation and stimulates borrowing, which tend to raise the rate of interest rather than to lower it.

Those, then, who think that an increase of currency would enable them to borrow money at lower rates are, I believe, greatly mistaken.

NO LIMIT TO THE CURRENCY THAT MAY BE SET AFLOAT

There is another opinion held in some quarters which I believe to be erroneous, namely, that it is impossible to have an overissue of our present irredeemable currency, so long as the business of the country is ready to take it up and use it in the channels of trade; which is as much as to say that it is impossible for our banks to issue too much money so long as they find parties willing to borrow from them. The falsity of this is, I think, plain on the face of it.

Every mercantile transaction is capable of becoming the foundation of a bill of exchange; if, therefore, the issue of bank notes is to continue as long as there is a bill offered for discount, there is not a bale of cloth, a bushel of wheat, or a chest of tea which may not, during its progress through the hands of successive dealers, be represented at every step to its full value by an issue of currency, and it would soon take a wheelbarrow load of notes to buy a barrel of flour.

THE BALANCE-OF-TRADE BUGBEAR

We are sometimes told that we can not get our currency back to an equality with coin till the balance of trade be in our favor, and by that is meant that the customhouse reports must show an excess of exports over imports.

One would suppose that this ghost called the "balance of trade," which was such a terror to our fathers a century ago, had in these latter days of light been forever put down; but it seems to trouble many timid minds yet. If there be a nation in the world which may safely be said to have made money out of its foreign trade and had a balance in its favor, that nation is England. Yet, taking the published statistics of her trade, and the balance-of-trade doctrine would show that she had been losing money at a fearful rate by her commerce; and the wonder is that the nation was not bankrupt long ago, or at least that her foreign trade was not long since abandoned as a losing business.

In a paper of Palgrave, communicated to the Statistical Society of London, I find the exports and imports of Britain for the last five years to have been:

Year	Imports	Exports
1868	£294,000,000	£179,000,000
1869	295,000,000	189,000,000
1870	303,000,000	199,000,000
1871	329,000,000	222,000,000
1872	353,000,000	255,000,000
Total	1,574,000,000	1,044,000,000

From these figures it would appear that during the last five years the imports of Great Britain have exceeded her exports in the enormous sum of £500,000,000, or nearly $2,500,000,000, being more than the amount of our entire national debt.

I think this alone would show the absurdity of the balance-of-trade theory as it is usually applied and be a sufficient answer to those who assert that we can not maintain currency at par with specie till our exports exceed our imports.

The fact that the imports of Great Britain have largely exceeded her exports shows that she has been carrying on a profitable foreign trade and that she brings more value to her shores than she sends away. When foreign commerce is profitable the result must always be such.

If a New York merchant sends a cargo to China worth $100,000, and the ship, after the absence of a year, returns with another cargo, it must net him more than $100,000 or the merchant will make nothing. Suppose it nets him $200,000, and that he has a clear gain of $50,000, then he is so much richer and the country is so much better off; yet on the books of the customhouse that transaction is put down as making a balance of trade of $100,000 against this country. If the vessel had gone down in mid-ocean and he had lost all his investment, the customhouse books would show an export of $100,000, with no corresponding import; and the transaction would be heralded abroad as $100,000 balance in favor of this country. Could anything be more absurd? Yet we find sensible men seriously opposing a return to a specie standard because we are not sending more out of the country than we are drawing into it.

Of the same character with the balance-of-trade bugbear is that sometimes urged to the effect that we can never return to a specie standard so long as we have so much interest to pay abroad. That objection is based on the exploded idea that we can not pay our interest abroad in anything but specie, as if our wheat and corn, our cotton and petroleum, our pork, and lumber will not give us a credit balance in London just as readily as the gold of California. We may rest assured that gold is exported only when the Nation can spare it better than anything else. We are a gold-producing country, and it is proper that we should export the productions of our gold mines as well as the productions of our iron mines or petroleum wells. Moreover, gold is more likely to be drawn from us now than when it is used as currency or the basis of our currency.

I might go into this branch of the subject at much greater length; but I have said all which at present it seems necessary to say.

THE BILL REPORTED FROM THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

This bill embraces several proposed amendments to the national banking law, but its most important provision is that contained in section 2, by which certain existing restrictions on bank-note circulation are to be removed and what has been termed "free banking" authorized.

Now, "free banking" and "antimonopoly" sound well, and as a general proposition are of themselves good things; yet measures of themselves good it may not always be wise to put in operation irrespective of time and circumstances.

Free banking might, no doubt, be safely and properly adopted if the circulating medium of the country were on a specie basis and equivalent to coin; but, in the present abnormal and exceptional situation of the finances, with a currency depreciated and irredeemable, I am compelled to regard such a measure as a dangerous experiment.

It will surely not be the part of wisdom thus to surrender all control over the volume of the currency, and to open the door for new issues of depreciated paper to an indefinite and unknown extent. It is to be hoped that no such rash experiment will be tried. Let us rather shut the door against any addition to the currency until we shall have dealt with, and brought to the true standard value, the circulation we already have.

The provisions of section 3, making it obligatory on the banks to provide for the redemption of their notes, are, I am aware, considered by the friends of free banking to be sufficient to prevent excessive issues; but from this view, entertained by a majority of my honorable colleagues on the Committee on Banking and Currency, I regret to be obliged to dissent.

We have now, or I fear are likely soon to have, say four hundred millions of United States notes, or legal tenders, with which may be redeemed the present circulation of three hundred and fifty-four millions of bank notes; and I hazard nothing in saying that the issues of the banks may be doubled and still the so-called system of redemption be, without difficulty, maintained.

It is a moderate estimate to say that on a basis of four hundred millions of United States notes, nearly double that amount of bank-note circulation may be sustained and redemption be at the same time kept up.

The obligation to redeem, with such a basis, will count for little in the estimation of bankers, and if they do not largely increase their issues, should section 2 become a law, it will be for the reasons that Government bonds can not be obtained at satisfactory prices, or that circulation has ceased to be profitable irrespective of redemption, and not on account of the requirement to redeem.

I will here call attention to the fact that there will be greater profit than heretofore in the issue of bank notes if, hereafter, as provided in section 1 of the bill, no reserve is to be kept on circulation. It is true that I was myself in favor of dispensing with the reserve or circulation as an offset to and compensation for another and no doubt a wise provision of the bill requiring banks to keep the reserve or their other liabilities in their own vaults; but if free banking is to be authorized, I deem it to be my duty to point out that the effect of this provision will be to make circulation more of an object with bankers than it has yet been, and that they will be apt to avail themselves of the opportunity thus presented to increase their note circulation.

The present capital stock of the national banks is about $500,000,000; and their circulation, as before stated, $354,000,000. If section 2 becomes a law, there is no reason why the existing banks on their present capital may not issue $100,000,000 additional circulation; and they will be very likely to do so if they see, as I think they will, profit in it.

If as a basis of the calculation we put Government bonds and coin at the present market price, and the use of money at 7 per cent, the net profit on circulation under this bill will be 2¾ per cent, being about 1 per cent more than it has hitherto been. In this calculation I make no charge for management, because the expenses properly chargeable to circulation of a bank doing, like all national banks, a general business, would be quite infinitesimal. I take into account, however, the 5 per cent in circulation which it is proposed the banks shall lodge with the Secretary of the Treasury.

But in truth there has not been, and can not be, any effective redemption of bank notes in the present condition of the currency, because there is neither object nor motive to prompt it. What does this so-called redemption of bank notes mean, and what does it amount to? It means the swapping of one kind of irredeemable paper for another kind, of no higher value; for the United States note, as a representative of value, is inferior to the bank note, and is superior in one respect only, by the force of arbitrary law, and it amounts to nothing; for the holder of a bank note, after he has taken the trouble to exchange it for a United States note, is no nearer coin value than he was before. It is a misnomer to call this redemption, and the operation is a farce, the performance of which the business community and the public will, as now, regard with utter indifference.

I am aware that as to the New York City banks there are certain brief periods every year when they would prefer to have bank notes replaced by United States notes; but this is to a limited extent, and is felt nowhere out of that city, and the banks there have the remedy in their own hands if they choose to use it.

It is my confident opinion that if section 2 becomes a law, a large addition to the bank-note circulation will take place, and that any system of redemption will be powerless to prevent it; that with whatever gravity the law may provide for going "through the motions" of so-called redemption by exchanging one piece of depreciated paper for another of no higher representative value, nothing effective or controlling on the condition of the currency will result from it. Further inflation and depreciation of the currency must necessarily ensue.

If the friends of this measure are willing to put it beyond question that no further inflation can occur if it is passed, this can easily be done by an amendment to the effect that, as fast as additional bank notes are issued beyond the present authorized limit, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, pari passu, retire and cancel legal-tender notes until the coin standard is reached. With such an amendment the chief objections to the measure would be obviated; and I now give notice that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to section 2 of this purport.

Congress is absolutely powerless to fix the amount of circulating medium the country requires and ought to have. It is simply the right and duty of Congress to carry us back to the coin standard; and, this done, the laws of trade, to which I have before referred, will then govern with unerring accuracy the volume of the circulation both of paper and coin.

The mode of redemption proposed in section 3 is such as I feel sure can not be sanctioned by Congress. It is neither more nor less than to make the Government the redeeming agent of the banks—a position manifestly improper for it to occupy. It was not insituted for any such purpose, and the idea of involving it in daily business transactions with nearly 2,000 banks is a curious proof of the tendency of legislation in these days. I really wonder what the Government will be asked to undertake next.

Although no system of redemption would, in my opinion, prevent, in the existing situation, an increase of the bank-note circulation if free banking is authorized, yet I admit it is, or will, I hope, soon be, an important matter that all banks should be required, in a way they can not disregard, to redeem their notes in New York; and if the law is not now sufficient for this purpose, it can easily be made so. Besides, the New York City banks have always had it in their power to enforce, as they at one time contemplated doing, bank-note redemption there, if they deem it necessary to do so.

I am aware that some delay has occurred in executing the law of January 12, 1870, for the more equitable distribution of the currency, by which law twenty-five millions of circulation were to be withdrawn from certain eastern banks and distributed to Western and Southern States entitled to it, and that in consequence honorable Members from such States may feel under some degree of constraint to vote for this so-called free banking in order to obtain relief. To such I would say that the present Congress will no doubt remove any technical difficulty that has hitherto stood in the way of the prompt execution of the law in question, and thus place twenty-five millions of circulation within the reach of the States west and south now deficient in their apportionment. Besides, it appears by the last annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency, dated 28th of November last, that he expected that all obstacles to the due execution of the law here referred to would be removed in three months from that time. Section 2 of this bill, therefore, is not needed as a measure of present relief to the West and South.

If the West and South have the means to establish more banks, and desire to do so, the opportunity can not, under the existing unequal distribution of bank capital and circulation, be fairly denied them. A bank properly conducted is a convenient and useful institution; it can not, however, make wealth prevail where poverty does now, any more than it can put money in the pockets of those who have nothing wherewith to buy; neither can a bank localize the use of its circulation.

If all the national banks were located in a single State, it does not necessarily follow that the average circulation per capita actually in use by the people of that State would be greater, or even as great, as that in use in other States unblessed by the existence of a single bank of issue.

The proper business of a bank is to facilitate the marketing of the products of the soil; to lend aid to the manufacturer in transforming raw into manufactured material, and to the merchant in distributing the goods so manufactured. If a bank uses its loanable means for purposes other than these, its business is illegitimate, unsafe for itself, and useless to the public.

For these reasons I can not vote for sections 2 and 3 of the bill as they stand. The remaining sections I can willingly support, particularly section 8, wherein the first step is taken toward the retirement of the notes of the Government. It is, indeed, a small step, but it is a step in the right direction; and the retirement of the United States notes therein contemplated is so gradual that I can not see how it can work to the prejudice of any meritorious industry. By this process we shall reach a specie basis long before half of the United States notes are redeemed; and although it is too slow to prevent the inflation of which I have spoken in case section 2 becomes a law, it will, no doubt, tend to check it.

Some such action ought to have been taken long ago, for the gradual withdrawal of United States notes means a gradual return to the coin standard. No people were ever better situated for a return to the currency of the world than we have been.

Gold and silver are as much productions of our soil as are wheat and cotton. Since the war closed over six hundred millions of specie have been drawn from our mines, yet we have miserably failed to utilize this vast product. We must fail to do so no longer.

I regard the return to a specie basis as of the most vital importance to the stability and permanent prosperity of the industrial and commercial interests of our country, and any prosperity that may result from an opposite policy can not but be of the most ephemeral kind.

LET US DO OUR DUTY FEARLESSLY

In conclusion let me reassert the position which I hold on this great and important issue, which is that we should set our faces steadily and persistently toward such a reduction of our currency as will bring it to par with gold; at the same time let us not go into any hasty and rapid contraction. Let the reduction of the volume of our circulating medium be gradual, and it matters not how gradual we make it we must be prepared to find that it is far from agreeable to go through the ordeal.

The man who has been living on stimulants finds that it requires much moral courage and self-denial to return to solid food; so we must be prepared to hear a great outcry to the effect that the business of the country is being ruined; for the decline in prices, which must ensue to some extent, is likely to call out vigorous protests from many quarters.

When once our currency becomes convertible into coin that elasticity which is now so much sought after will also be attained. Whenever our currency becomes superabundant, then will it be cheaper to export gold than anything else, and the surplus coin leaving this country will compel the reduction of the currency to its normal proportions. On the other hand when our currency is too small in quantity, we will draw coin from abroad.

During the panic through which we have just passed, coin was drawn from abroad even when it could not be used as currency. If it could have been so used, relief would have been more speedily obtained.

Our currency, in its present depreciated state, proves a great drawback to the farmer and all others, the price of whose productions is governed by what is exported to foreign markets. The farmer's expenses are regulated under an inflated depreciated currency, while he sells his products in the markets of the old world, where prices are regulated by a currency at par with specie.

Our present inflated currency encourages speculation and extravagance; increases the amount of credits; unduly stimulates importations, causing an adverse state of the exchanges and the exportation of coin; and has a tendency to feed a panic as well as to render it very serious when it occurs.

The currency of the United States was largest in 1837 and 1857, and the result was an overextension of credits, the extension of credits and the inflation of the currency acting and reacting on each other till a very widespread and serious financial crisis brought us back to a sound basis.

As I said, it will require some self-denial and real courage for our people to face a reduction of the currency, but it is much better to meet some small discomfort at present rather than to rush on headlong to certain and very great loss at no remote future.

It would be very agreeable to expand the currency, raise prices, and sail along in our balloon through an exhilarating atmosphere for a few years, but we would sooner or later be brought down to solid ground by a fearful collapse. Such a result is just as sure as it is that the laws of trade and the principles of political science are not to be trifled with and can not be overborne.

Let us be guided in the solution of this question solely by what we consider will be for the ultimate, permanent, and lasting good of this Nation, and not merely seek to do what will please for the time with no regard to the future consequences.

It is not more essential that the atmosphere which we breathe should be pure than it is that the lifeblood of commerce should be wholesome.

I will only add further that the views I have now presented, while they are my own earnest convictions, are also, I believe, in substance the views of a large majority of the people I have the honor to represent on this floor. And I must take leave to deny that the industrious, intelligent people of the Northwest, whether engaged in agricultural, manufacturing, or mercantile pursuits, are generally, or to any great extent, in favor of additional issues of depreciated paper.

SPEAKER JOHN N. GARNER—ADDRESS BY W. G. M'ADOO

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered over the radio, April 11, 1932, by Hon. W. G. McAdoo.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I address my remarks more particularly to registered Democrats, because they alone are permitted to vote in the May primary for delegates to the forthcoming Democratic National Convention in Chicago.

Everyone has a right to support whom he pleases in the primary. The object of our laws is to give each voter the opportunity to exercise a free choice, uninfluenced and unimpeded by political machines or political bosses.

At the primary on May 3 next 48 delegates to the Democratic National Convention are to be chosen. Three delegate tickets are in the field: One for Alfred E. Smith, one for Franklin D. Roosevelt, and one for JOHN N. GARNER, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Here we have two candidates from New York—Mr. Smith and Mr. Roosevelt. Mr. Smith was nominated for President in 1928 and met with disastrous defeat. Mr. Roosevelt was nominated for Vice President in 1920, and he also was overwhelmingly defeated. Mr. GARNER has served in Congress for 29 years. He has never been defeated.

Neither Smith nor Roosevelt has had the wide experience in national affairs that Speaker GARNER has had. The Democratic voters of California will decide, on May 3 next, which of these three men they want for President.

I favor JOHN N. GARNER because he possesses certain outstanding and indispensable requisites for the presidential office. Among them are brains, courage, integrity, dependability, and freedom from all those sordid and selfish influences which have dominated the Government for the past 12 years and have brought appalling disaster to the American people.

I know that GARNER has brains, because I worked intimately with him in Washington during the six years I served as Secretary of the Treasury. The whole world was then on fire. Real men were needed at every post. GARNER was a leading member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, where all revenue and financial measures must originate under our Constitution. He was an outstanding man on that committee. He displayed, uniformly, a comprehensive knowledge of every complex problem, and stood by President Wilson with fidelity and courage.

GARNER has been tested in 29 years of public service in the House of Representatives. Because of his great qualities of mind and heart and leadership he has been elevated to one of the greatest offices in the gift of the people—the Speakership of the House.

He has, preeminently, that virtue in which public men are too frequently deficient—courage. Throughout his long career in the House he has fought indomitably for every measure designed to benefit the masses of the people; and he has consistently battled against every measure which would strengthen the forces of privilege and monopoly. Only recently he gave a dramatic demonstration of the kind of courage men must possess to be leaders of men. He left the Speaker's chair when the House was in chaos over the tax bill—chaos produced by an insurgent movement led by a Republican Congressman from New York—and through the sheer force of his ability and the power of his personality he whipped the rebellion, brought the House into line again, inspired it with the necessity for patriotically sustaining the credit of the United States, and secured the enactment of a tax bill to provide the necessary revenues for the Government.

GARNER has that great quality—a quality which shines with effulgent light in these days of sordid corruption and graft—unblemished integrity. No whisper has ever been heard against his honesty and no one has ever questioned his fidelity to the highest principles and ideals of government.

And he is dependable. You can bank on what he says. He is not a double-crosser or a four-flusher. I use these terms because everybody knows what they mean. What a grand thing it is, in public life, to find men of his character, men upon whose word one may actually depend!

In order to serve the masses of the people and to secure for them a just share of the benefits of our institutions (and God knows they haven't been getting their share for a long time) a President must be free from every sinister influence which may sway his mind in favor of those who want advantage.

JOHN GARNER was brought up on a farm in Texas. He has lived in a wholesome environment. He has been schooled in adversity. By training, education, and experience he has the point of view of the great body of the people as well as first-hand knowledge of their problems and necessities. He has seen this country, through a long course of years, gradually drift into a position where a comparatively small percentage of the people have acquired most of the wealth, while the vast majority—the agricultural and laboring classes in particular—have been steadily and pitilessly reduced to a condition of poverty. This unbalanced condition is the greatest conceivable danger to the future of the Republic. It must be corrected by sound, courageous, and healthful measures. We must make it possible for every deserving man and woman to work and prosper. GARNER is preeminently qualified for this job.

If the Democratic Party is to succeed it is imperative that a candidate shall be chosen who is not identified with the feuds and factions which have torn the party asunder during the past 12 years and have thrown undeserved victory into the lap of the Republicans. The colliding ambitions of the New York candidates have brought them into California and have transferred their fight to our soil, dividing our people and imperiling party victory. GARNER is not mixed up in any of these feuds or factional fights. No man is mentioned for the Presidency who can with greater certainty unite all elements of the party and assure a triumph next November.

The country is in a critical condition. Day by day for more than 800 days we have sunk deeper into the mire, with waning hopes and increasing despair. The country is worse off now than it was a year ago, and worse off than it was six months ago. Every remedy adopted at Washington has failed. Values of securities have shrunk to a point where the solvency of individuals and institutions is brought into question. Bankruptcies and failures continue throughout the land; foreclosures of mortgages are driving debtors every day into poverty. Corruption, incompetence, and extravagance of public bodies are notorious and appalling. Taxes, mounting higher and higher, sap the savings of the people. Tax sales of land are unprecedented and are rapidly converting private property into State ownership. A few days ago the Associated Press reported that in the State of Mississippi alone 39,669 farms, or 16 per cent of the agricultural acreage of the State, went on the auction block under the sheriff's hammer, and that 12 per cent of the city property was forfeited for nonpayment of taxes. This reflects the condition of the cotton and wheat States, where general impoverishment of the farmers has resulted from starvation prices for their crops.

Eight million men are unemployed; impious crime stalks the land with immune steps; graft rules our great cities; and the gaunt shadow of want falls upon every community.

Tammany government in New York is under investigation by the Seabury committee for graft and corruption.

Wall Street in New York is under investigation by the Senate of the United States for stock and bond manipulations and speculation.

Great banking houses in New York have already been investigated by a Senate committee headed by Senator JOHNSON, of California, which developed the astounding fact that billions of dollars of worthless and semiworthless bonds have been sold to hundreds of thousands of confiding and credulous American citizens.

New York's political leadership, New York's financial leadership, and New York's business leadership have been discredited. Is there anyone so bold as to say that big business, big finance, and Wall Street have done a good job of running the country, particularly during the past three years?

We need a change in leadership at Washington. But what is the use of a change if the same old forces are to remain in control? It is not enough to swap Washington for New York. The change must be absolute. We must put the mace of power into the hands of a man like GARNER, who has the Jacksonian courage to drive the crooks and money changers from the temple of government and demonstrate that a strong, clean, and economical administration of national affairs can be secured for the people; that the oppressive tax burden can be reduced; that the Federal power, honestly and bravely used, is greater than all the criminals in the land.

GARNER is a friend of California; he supported and helped to secure the construction of the Boulder Dam; he fought for and obtained in the revenue bill just passed by the House an import tax on foreign crude oil and gasoline which will, if passed by the Senate and approved by the President, benefit the oil industry of California and give paying jobs to thousands of idle oil workers in this State and in the Nation.

GARNER knows the problems of agriculture. He did not learn them in Wall Street or on the sidewalks of any part of New York; he learned them on the farm. He comes from one of the greatest wheat and cotton producing States in the Union, and will know how to secure for the distressed cotton growers of the San Joaquin and Imperial Valleys and for the wheat farmers throughout California prices for their crops which will give them a profit and restore their purchasing power.

With GARNER in the White House agriculture will get profits instead of deficits. When that condition is brought about general prosperity will be restored, because agriculture is the basic producer of wealth. So long as it is starved distress will pervade all classes.

The Democratic Party has the opportunity to save the country. Will it prove equal to it? Upon the decision of the national convention as to candidates and platform depends the answer.

California goes to the Chicago convention with greater power and influence than she has ever had in her history. Her 44 votes may nominate and elect the next President. It is imperative, therefore, that the Democrats of this State shall select a delegation of the highest character and ability. I earnestly hope that every registered Democrat will go to the polls on May 3 and vote for the man whom he thinks can best serve the country in the present crisis.

I think that the unbeaten and unbeatable JOHN N. GARNER is the man we should support. I believe that he can be nominated if California instructs for him.

I have been named as a member of the Garner delegation, and I wish here and now to give my pledge to the Democratic voters of California that if they should do me the honor to send me and my associates to Chicago I shall do everything in my power to promote Democratic cohesion and to discharge the responsibilities they may confer upon me with unselfish devotion to the interests of the people and to the cause of democracy.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], coming over from a previous day, to discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of Senate Resolution 26. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 26) submitted by Mr. BROOKHART, December 9, 1931, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of paragraph 1 of Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate as reads "Committee on Pensions, to consist of 11 Senators" is amended to read as follows:

"Committee on Veterans' Affairs, to consist of 13 Senators, to which shall be referred all legislation and other matters relating to pensions, Government life insurance, and death or disability compensation, hospitalization, and allowances of persons in the military or naval service of the United States and their beneficiaries, and all legislation and other matters relating to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and its branches."

Mr. BROOKHART. I desire to have the Senate proceed with the consideration of my motion to discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of the resolution just read.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Costigan	Jones	Shipstead
Austin	Couzens	Kean	Shortridge
Bailey	Cutting	La Follette	Smith
Bankhead	Dale	Lewis	Smoot
Barbour	Dickinson	Logan	Steiwer
Barkley	Dill	Long	Stephens
Bingham	Fess	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Black	Fletcher	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Blaine	Frazier	Metcalf	Townsend
Borah	Glenn	Moses	Tydings
Bratton	Goldsborough	Neely	Vandenberg
Brookhart	Gore	Norbeck	Wagner
Broussard	Hale	Norris	Walcott
Bulkley	Harrison	Nye	Walsh, Mass.
Bulow	Hastings	Oddie	Waterman
Byrnes	Hatfield	Patterson	Watson
Capper	Hayden	Pittman	Wheeler
Caraway	Hebert	Reed	White
Carey	Howell	Robinson, Ind.
Connally	Hull	Schall
Copeland	Johnson	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be read, so that the Senate may understand the subject under consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk again read the resolution (S. Res. 26).

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, at the present time the Senate has a Committee on Pensions, to which is referred pension matters. It has a Committee on Finance, to which is referred a large part of Veterans' Bureau affairs, though some parts are referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and perhaps some parts to other committees. It is the purpose of the resolution to create a single committee to have charge of veterans' affairs. The Pension Bureau has been transferred to the Bureau of Veterans' Affairs. It is all in one single organization and there is no occasion why its affairs should be divided up among the various committees of the Senate.

The resolution was introduced early in the last session, but I was unable to get action of the Committee on Rules during the entire session. I introduced it again at the beginning of the present session, and I have been unable to get anything but some hearings before the committee throughout this session—no report and no action of the Committee on Rules. At last I have despaired of any other method of getting the resolution before the Senate except to move to discharge the committee from its further consideration. Hence I have entered the motion.

I do not care to take any extended time in discussing the motion. I would like to have the vote of the Senate upon it. I think that the Committee on Finance has no more occasion to handle veterans' affairs than it has to handle the military affairs or naval affairs or any of the other matters relating to veterans. Therefore I think the Committee on Rules should be discharged and the resolution placed before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the recital made by the Senator from Iowa is accurate so far as it goes. He did not state, because he did not know, that a large majority of the Committee on Rules do not favor the creation of a committee such as the Senator from Iowa has in mind. The general practice of the Senate in cases like that is not to report measures but to let the measures slumber in the committee files. The Senator from Iowa is, of course, wholly within his rights in moving to discharge the committee from further consideration of his resolution, and therefore all the proceedings have been orderly.

The opinion of a majority of the Committee on Rules is that the committee is unnecessary. It creates an enlarged committee. It does not add to the standing committees of the Senate, but it concentrates in one body of 13 members the work which, as the Senator from Iowa has pointed out, is being carried on by a diversity of committees in the Senate.

I had hoped that the Senator from Iowa would make the direct accusation that the interests which would be dealt with by the proposed new committee had suffered by reason of the practice which now obtains in the Senate. He has not made any such assertion, and I venture to assert that no real interest has suffered by reason of the fact that the various types of veterans' legislation have been considered by different groups of Senators serving upon different committees.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MOSES. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I wish to ask the Senator if this proposal would interfere with the other proposal now before the Senator's committee, namely, to create a separate veterans' committee?

Mr. MOSES. There are two proposals before the committee, I will say to the Senator, one offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] and the other which is dealt with by the resolution now referred to by the Senator from Iowa. I think essentially they are the same. I understand that there is a good deal of division of opinion among beneficiaries of activities by the proposed new committee, that one considerable group, well organized and capable of exerting great pressure upon legislative bodies, prefers the proposal offered by the Senator from Texas. Another group, equally sincere, not as well organized, certainly not as capable of exerting direct pressure, has supported the proposal offered by the Senator from Iowa. In essence, however, the two proposals are the same.

The proposal is in effect to concentrate in a single committee the consideration of all legislation which affects any veteran's interest, and also the taking over, as proposed by the Senator from Iowa, of some activities which now are not considered in connection with the veterans' affairs, that is to say, the national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers. It is the opinion of many members of the Committee on Rules, it is certainly my opinion, Mr. President, that there can be but one result from the creation of this new committee, and that is to make it much easier to secure legislation which takes money out of the Treasury, legislation which should be carefully scrutinized, legislation which should, of course, be regarded with sympathy, but which committee should have its sense of generosity tempered with a sense of justice. We know perfectly well nowadays that legislation of a certain type, backed by a given group of individuals in the country, when it is presented here goes through under irresistible pressure and the effect of it is to take incalculable sums of money from the Federal Treasury. Even if I believed in this type of committee in general, I would feel that at this moment, when we are doing everything else that takes place in this Chamber to curtail Government expenditures, we should be very slow in setting up an added piece of machinery in the Senate which, as I view it, will chiefly consist in facilitating the flow of money out of the Treasury.

I have heard no serious complaint from any considerable body of veterans that their affairs have not been dealt with sympathetically, even generously. The testimony adduced before the Committee on Rules consisted merely in a recital, which has since proved to have been inaccurate, that the House committee cognate to the one proposed to be set up here had given much more time to the consideration of veterans' measures than the committees of the Senate had given. Upon consulting the record, upon reading the chronology of the bills which were adduced by the witness who testified before the Committee on Rules, it was readily discoverable that that statement could not be substantiated. On the contrary, it was demonstrated that the Senate committees dealing with these subjects had been as painstaking as any committee in the Senate dealing with any subject of major importance.

I am speaking for the majority of the Committee on Rules, who, while they have taken no action formally, have nevertheless pursued the orderly course of dealing with legislation referred to the committee and have let the resolution lie dormant, because under the practice, as I have said, when a committee is not in favor of a proposal it does not report it adversely except by special agreement among its members, but the measure stays upon the committee calendar. There this resolution has stayed. There I continue to contend, Mr. President, it should stay.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, representatives of veterans' organizations appeared before the Committee on Rules and requested that a separate committee be established for the consideration of veterans' legislation. I remember particularly that Hon. John Thomas Taylor, general attorney for the American Legion, submitted an elaborate statement in which he showed in detail how veterans' legislation had suffered seriously by reason of the fact that only a subcommittee of the Committee on Finance, a committee whose attention must necessarily be concentrated on the great business of taxation, is now permitted to consider veterans' legislation in the Senate.

It seems to me the veterans are entitled to the same consideration in the Senate which has been given them in the House. A separate committee has been in operation in the House dealing with veterans' legislation almost from the beginning. I am confident that practically all our ex-service men are behind the proposal that they have a separate committee to consider legislation relating to them in the Senate. In this Congress and in prior Congresses I have introduced a resolution for a committee of this kind. I am glad to cooperate with Senator BROOKHART in behalf of his resolution on the same subject and in support of his motion to-day.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. MOSES. I referred in the course of my remarks on the subject to the testimony which was brought out before the committee, and I referred to the detailed statement which the Senator from Texas has in mind. I looked it up. I discovered that the statement was inaccurate, and that the House committee had not given so much more time than the Senate committee had; that, as a matter of fact, they get a bill to-day and report it to-morrow.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from New Hampshire is referring to but one phase of the argument by Mr. Taylor. The whole burden of Mr. Taylor's statement was to the effect that the veterans desire a separate committee in the Senate and that they feel they have not received the attention which they deserve and which their measures deserve in this body. To the same effect was the statement by Hon. L. S. Ray, vice chairman of the National Legislative Committee, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Mr. MOSES. My feeling is that their measures have received such attention as they deserve, and merely because a body of citizens—I do not care how numerous or how highly organized—want a special committee to deal with their matters does not seem to me to be sufficient reason for the Senate yielding to them.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it is not a question alone of whether the veterans want this committee. It is my feeling that the Senate itself should have a committee to consider all matters relating to veterans' legislation. We will be obliged, whether we wish it or not, very shortly to consider the bonus measure. It ought to be the business of some group in this body to study that question and all others relating to veterans.

I hesitate very much to vote for any measure which seeks to increase the number of committees. Every one of us is overpressed now with committee work. However, as I understand it, this proposal does not add a new committee. This takes a committee already in existence and clothes it with new power. There is an appropriateness in this proposal because, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] pointed out, pensions are now dealt with in the Veterans' Bureau. As I see it, it is wise for us to have the whole subject of veterans' legislation referred to a standing committee and considered there in order that the Senate itself may have the information to enable it to act wisely on matters having to do with veterans' legislation.

Therefore, for my part, even though I am a member of the Committee on Rules and hesitate at any time to take any action which would appear to be in opposition to the opinion of a majority of the committee, I feel that the veterans and the legislation having to do with the veterans are entitled to our consideration. To this end it is desirable to have a committee which will give all veteran proposals due and proper attention.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I do not consider this a proposal to create a new committee; it seems to me it is rather a proposal to change the jurisdiction of existing committees and to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Pension Committee so that it might more readily handle the business that would be allotted to it. I have never been able to understand, anyway, why proposed legislation as to payments to veterans or as to caring for veterans should be referred to a committee whose primary duty is to pass on legislation to raise revenue to run the Government. I think the Senator from Iowa is suggesting a very proper and a very natural classification when he proposes that all legislation relating to World War veterans shall be referred to and considered by the committee which handles legislation relating to veterans of all other wars. So it seems to me the argument here involves not so much the question of a special committee, because it is not a special committee, but the proper jurisdiction of proposed legislation.

The only argument which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] really makes against the proposition is that the Pension Committee will be more ready to report out legislation proposing to take money out of the Treasury than the Finance Committee now is. I do not know on what the Senator bases his opinion, for my experience has been that it is not any easier to get legislation out of the Pension Committee than it is to get it out of the Finance Committee. However, that is not a valid reason, anyway. That is an argument to the effect that certain Senators are on the Finance Committee, and they are more opposed to taking money out of the Treasury than are Senators on the Pension Committee. Such an argument has no real place in the consideration of this question.

The sole question, as I see it, is whether or not the Senate wants to make a natural division of the work of the committees or whether it will keep an artificial arrangement that has developed as a result of the legislation that was enacted in connection with the World War. The natural jurisdiction of the Pension Committee includes all legislation affecting veterans of any and all wars in which this country has been engaged.

I think the motion of the Senator from Iowa is eminently sound; I think it ought to be adopted; and I intend to vote for it because of that fact, and also because of the further fact that the adoption of his motion would not pass the resolution but would only place it on the calendar where the Senate may have an opportunity to act upon it in a proper way.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it seems to me rather a curious procedure that we are now following. Ever since I have been a Member of the Senate, we have been arguing and protesting against the overlapping jurisdictions of different departments, complaining that one branch of a given matter is under the jurisdiction of one department and another branch of it is under another, and there is never a concentration of the entire subject matter under one jurisdiction whether of a department or of one specific committee. I think the proposal that all matters pertaining to veterans of the wars in which America has been engaged shall be referred to the Pension Committee is eminently justified by the very nature of the case. That committee is to pass upon the merits of any proposition that is placed before it; and then when its report is submitted, are to view it from the standpoint of those charged with analyzing the particular situation.

The Finance Committee is constituted to look after the fiscal and financial affairs affecting the Government. I do not see why the Committee on Finance should have jurisdiction over legislation pertaining to the affairs of the veterans of this country any more than it should have jurisdiction over legislation pertaining to the agricultural interests of the country.

I want to take this occasion to say that there seems to be a disposition to resent what are improperly called the importunities of the veterans of the several wars. There is no experience of a citizen that in any way approximates in horror and danger that of one who is called upon actually to defend his country in the presence of imminent death, relinquishing all his business, cutting every human tie, and taking, in the last analysis, the supreme risk involved in all human effort when the preservation of a nation is at stake, namely, the laying of his life on the altar of his country. Though we must use judgment as to measures that come before us looking to the welfare of the defenders of our country, I for one, am willing at any and all times to go to the limit in maintaining in comfort those who have risked everything to insure my comfort and safety by defending their country.

I want to state, Mr. President, that I am heartily in favor of the proposal of the Senator from Iowa. The difference between the proposal of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] and that of the Senator from Iowa is that the Senator from Iowa proposes that the Pension Committee shall have jurisdiction of matters pertaining to the veterans of all wars, while the Senator from Texas proposes that its jurisdiction shall be restricted to the World War veterans. I am in favor of the principle involved in these measures. Therefore I shall very gladly vote for the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Morning business is closed.

DISTRICT STREET-RAILWAY MERGER

Mr. AUSTIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 497, being Senate Joint Resolution 13, to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 13) to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, this joint resolution is for the purpose of carrying into effect the privilege granted by the La Follette Act of the Sixty-eighth Congress permitting the street railways, bus lines, and other public utilities in the District of Columbia to consolidate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Vermont a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JONES. I was not able to be present when the committee acted upon the measure. I inquire if the committee is unanimous in its report?

Mr. AUSTIN. The committee was not unanimous. There were two members of the committee who dissented in respect to one paragraph of the joint resolution as reported, and who suggested three other additional paragraphs. So there have been presented minority views signed by two members of the committee. The majority report represents the views of all the remaining members of the committee, and I have been asked to present the majority views and to move for the passage of the joint resolution with amendments suggested by the committee.

I will make, Mr. President, a brief statement of the purpose of the joint resolution. It will be noticed that many pages of the measure, namely, those from page 2 to page 17, consist of an agreement. The other portions of the joint resolution, which are short, comprise the enacting provisions of it, carrying out the spirit of the La Follette Act, which enables corporations in the District of Columbia to merge in the following way:

> That any or all of the street-railway companies operating in the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to merge or consolidate, either by purchase or lease by one company of the properties, and/or stocks or securities of any of the others, or by the formation of a new corporation to acquire the properties and/or stocks or securities and to succeed to the powers and obligations of each or any of said companies under such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by vote of a majority in amount of the stock of the respective corporations, and as may be approved by the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia: Provided, That no merger of said companies shall be finally consummated until the same is approved by a joint resolution of Congress.

That is not the whole of the paragraph, but I have read so much of it as necessary for a clear understanding of what is before the Senate.

The agreement found between pages 2 and 17 of the joint resolution is an attempt to comply with the first part of the LaFollette measure, and its first condition, namely, "under such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by vote of a majority in amount of the stock of the respective corporations."

Mr. President, it has taken many years to get this joint resolution into the condition in which it is to-day. Of course, both the street-railway companies of the District of Columbia represent many people, many philanthropic institutions, many guardians of orphans and others who are incompetent, many fraternal organizations, as well as individuals and corporations which are engaged in business. So there have been many diverse views regarding the sort of an agreement that should be made between the street railway companies themselves, and then again between such merged corporations and the Public Utilities Commission, the District Commissioners, and the Congress of the United States. So it has taken many years to get through such an agreement.

In order to facilitate the undertaking and to have it put upon a basis which would have regard for the interests of the public and in order that it should not be presented to the Senate impregnated with some selfish purpose or some special privilege on behalf of these public utilities, the measure was inaugurated by an investigation by the Bureau of Efficiency.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] in 1928, as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, called upon the Bureau of Efficiency to investigate and to recommend a method of unification of these competing public utilities in such manner as would eliminate waste, in such manner as would improve the service, in such manner as would prevent duplication, and in such manner as would take out of the streets and therefore out of the way of the traffic of Washington and of all the world passing through Washington twice the number of street cars necessary and needful for the carriage of people. The Bureau of Efficiency was called upon to investigate and to report a measure embodying suggestions which could be submitted to the public utilities for them to vote upon in their stockholders' meetings, wherein were represented all of the diverse interests to which I have already called attention.

That was practically carried out, not only by the Bureau of Efficiency employing several experts; but, as another check upon the possibility of this measure having any selfish objective or trenching upon the rights of the public, an expert to represent the Congress through the District Committee was employed at a compensation of $10,000 to investigate the whole matter and make a survey of the situation in Washington with reference to the service required and the savings that could be effected and transmitted to the public, the improvement of the service, and the holding out of the possibility of future development. All these matters were submitted to Doctor Maltbie, probably one of the most renowned experts in the United States upon this type of public utility, and now the chairman of the public service commission of the great Empire State.

Probably no measure could come before the Senate under the auspices of so independent, so expert, and so reliable a recommendation and backing as does this joint resolution. It represents deliberation. It represents expert examination. The evidence which is before you can be checked and found correct or incorrect, as the case may be, by any Senator; and we proceed to the consideration of this merger not hastily and not ill prepared, but under the best of circumstances.

In explaining this measure, I ought to call to your attention some of the setting of the measure in general.

In the first place, this is not the joint resolution of any public utility. This is not the joint resolution of the Washington Railway & Electric Co., or of the Capital Traction Co., or of the bus company known as the Washington Rapid Transit Co. This is the joint resolution of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, which has presented it and recommended it for passage by the Senate.

We have in this District a National Capital Park and Planning Commission. That commission also has indorsed this merger and recommends the passage of this joint resolution.

Moreover, the District Commissioners—whose relationship to the District of Columbia I apprehend is similar to that of the governor of a State—recommends the passage of this joint resolution and the authorization of this merger. The Bureau of Efficiency, the Washington Chamber of Commerce, the Washington Board of Trade, the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, the Washington Central Labor Union, the Washington Society of Engineers, and the Progressive Citizens' Association of Georgetown, all support this measure.

At the hearings other public associations indorsed the merger, including the Central Business Men's Association and the Northeast Washington Citizens' Association; but I think probably the most effective indorsement of this plan is that of the women, private citizens, trustees, guardians, eleemosynary institutions who own the capital stock of the concerns that are to be merged if this joint resolution should be passed, who have taken the funds of their wards in the case of trustees and guardians and invested them in the securities of these public-utility companies at a time when they were regarded as sound investments, worthy to be employed by trustees, and now find that that which had a value of several hundred dollars per share has a value of only $16 or $17 per share, and a prospect of being wiped out. In other words, there is a certain benefit which should be considered by the Congress of the United States to the great public of Washington who represent the owners of the capital stock of the companies to be merged. The Capital Traction Co., I think, has something like 2,250 different stockholders right in this vicinity, and I think the capital stock of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. is distributed over nearly as large a number of stockholders.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, it is not alone a question of the interest of the many stockholders spoken of by the Senator, but the very life of the institutions is at stake, so that the traveling public and every citizen of Washington have a direct interest in the matter, too. I assume I am right in that.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct. I will say to the Senator from New York that it is my intention to bring out, if possible, in explaining the measure, the fact that the elimination of these many street cars and the duplication of cars upon individual streets would result in a direct benefit to the public, and that the possibility of improvement of service in the use of better cars, regulated with more scientific adjustment to the demand for service here and there throughout the city, would constitute a direct benefit to the traveling public. There is, however, another one which will be recognized as involving the immediate cost to the public utilities of a very large sum of money, which would be a benefit to the traveling public—a cost created by this merger—and that is the transfer between all street cars which is granted under the agreement embodied in this joint resolution.

At the present time transfers can not be had from the cars of one company to the cars of another. Under this joint resolution, if it should pass, there will be free transfers between all street cars. In that connection, let me say that one of the amendments suggested by the dissenting minority relates to transfers; and the minority suggest transfers as between busses and street cars—a matter which I do not care to discuss at this time, and which will be soon enough spoken of after and if the minority ask the Senate to agree to an amendment to direct such transfers.

The Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, which is the agency requesting the introduction and passage of this joint resolution, itself held extensive hearings on the joint resolution, using Doctor Maltbie's draft of legislation as the basis of those hearings. As a result of those hearings these committee amendments were devised, some of them coming from the Public Utilities Commission, some of them from the District Commissioners, and some of them from the so-called people's counsel, an attorney who under the law has certain functions to perform in representing the people of Washington before the Public Utilities Commission, although not before the District committees of Congress.

This joint resolution is necessary because the La Follette Act creates only the general right or privilege to merge; and this joint resolution is the logical, natural, and practical sequel of the La Follette Act. Of course, Congress had an objective in passing the La Follette Act, which was the very merger in which we are now engaged, but which can not be carried out without the passage of such a joint resolution as we have here.

The evidence upon the hearings showed clearly that the people of Washington practically unanimously favor a merger; and the delays that thus far have occurred in bringing about a merger have been the result of differences regarding mere details of that merger; but as an upshot of all of the conflict and consideration of this measure the Senate committee having charge of affairs in the District of Columbia has reported substantially the bill of Doctor Maltbie. That should be borne in mind in considering everything relating to this matter.

If this merger is to be carried into effect, its conditions must be accepted within two years by all of the corporations merged. If they should fail to accept our vote here upon this joint resolution, if it is in the affirmative, the whole matter would drop, and there would be no merger.

The two companies are to vest their railway properties in a new company to be incorporated under the laws of the District, and that charter must be submitted to the Public Utilities Commission and must be approved by that commission before it becomes effective.

I have already called attention to the provisions in this agreement for free transfers between all street cars in the District of Columbia.

There is a provision in the agreement that the corporations will accept and comply with a rate of fare for school children to be fixed by the Public Utilities Commission. It is supposed that such rate will be low, will be extraordinarily small, perhaps. There is another feature which ought to be mentioned in connection with this; that is, the hope that by this merger such savings can be made in various ways that a low fare for all people may be arrived at within a certain zone in the District of Columbia. That is one of the possibilities; it is no part of the agreement between the companies and the Public Utilities Commission, but the passage of this resolution will give ground for hope that such a reduction to all the people here may be obtained.

The Washington Railway & Electric Co. many years ago, I think it was in 1906, by virtue of authority given by Congress in the act of June 5, 1900, entered into a contract with the Potomac Electric Power Co. which, in a general way, arranged for the development of that power company. At that time the relative positions of these two corporations were somewhat different from what they are to-day. The Potomac Electric Power Co. was weak financially; it did not have credit sufficient itself to finance its own development. On the other hand, the Washington Railway & Electric Co. was powerful; it had sufficient credit so that it was able to provide something like $7,000,000 of financing for the Potomac Electric Power Co., which otherwise the power company could not have obtained.

In view of that situation Congress, recognizing apparently, the great public benefit the development of this power company would be, authorized directly and specifically the contract between the Washington Railway & Electric Co. and the Potomac Electric Power Co. which to-day is under consideration in this resolution, and affords one of the points of objection by the minority in their report.

I call attention briefly to only a part of the act of 1900, because I think the RECORD should show the foundation for this contract, which is a very fundamental element in this merger. I read from page 244 of Laws Relating to Street Railway Franchises in the District of Columbia, 1905:

SEC. 3. That the Washington & Great Falls Electric Railway Co.—

The company now called the Washington Railway & Electric Co.—

That the Washington & Great Falls Electric Railway Co. may acquire and hold shares of the capital stock or other securities of any company supplying or under contract to supply electric power in the operation of its railway to it or to any of the corporations whose shares of stock or whose property and franchises it is authorized to acquire under this act; and as a part of any contract for the supply of said power the said Washington & Great Falls Electric Railway Co. may exchange its stock and securities for the stock and securities of any such electric power company—

I wish to have Senators note particularly this language—and may guarantee the securities of any such power company, but in no event shall said railway corporation be authorized to receive a transfer of the property or franchises of such electric power company.

Under that authority an agreement was entered into between the Washington Railway & Electric Co. and the Potomac Electric Power Co. for the furnishing of power to the railway company for its use, and for sale to and use by other railway companies in this vicinity, at a rate specified in the contract, which I can not carry in memory. It provided for payment by way of exchange of utilities and service. The minority wish to have that contract abrogated so far as the rate is concerned, and wish to have the Public Utilities Commission fix a new rate for the whole contract.

That claim has really developed since the consideration of this measure in the last session. Following Doctor Maltbie's suggestion, however, the majority of the committee divided that contract, determining that 63 per cent of power should remain at the present rate and 37 per cent of power should be regulated by the Public Utilities Commission from the start.

Moreover, carrying out the suggestion of the power company and the Public Utilities Commission themselves, that 63 per cent is to terminate in 15 years, and thereafter 100 per cent, namely, all of the power under this contract, shall be regulated by the Public Utilities Commission. In other words, these great concerns, whose stability and soundness is essential to the public, not only the traveling public, who ride the cars and hang on to the straps or sit in the seats, but also those people whose financial protection rests in the security of the capital stock of these corporations, were looked after by the Public Utilities Commission. It should not be forgotten that this division and this arrangement for the gradual letting down from that contract was devised first by Doctor Maltbie, and then carried out by the Public Utilities Commission, upon an agreement entered into by these corporations to waive an everlasting contract and accept in place of it a limited contract, to end in 15 years.

I call attention, in explanation, further to this point, that when it comes to a practical regulation of rates, one must recognize that this proposed amendment, which raises a controversy, is really tilting at windmills; it is not practical; it is really not sensible, for the simple reason that the Public Utilities Commission can so regulate 37 per cent of the product that it can really regulate the whole amount, and get an average rate that is entirely satisfactory.

The members of the minority are practically the only persons I can discover in this record, aside, perhaps, from the people's counsel, who are opposed to carrying out Doctor Maltbie's provision, the provision of the Public Utilities Commission, and the contract between these corporations with respect to this point.

There was a provision in the original arrangement between the District and the Public Utilities Commission that the utilities should pay all the costs incident to the maintenance of policemen on the corners of streets where the railways operate, to regulate traffic, and it has been obvious for years to the public, and to any thinking person, that that was a ridiculous arrangement. In the first place, it injuriously affected discipline in the police department of the District, these officers, so paid by the railway corporations, refusing to obey the commands of their superior officers in the police department, and refusing to do anything except what they claimed they were hired to do with respect to directing traffic on the street corners.

There was a provision as to pavements within the trolley area, that is, the surfacing of the streets between the various tracks, and two feet outside of the rails. That archaic provision has made for trouble and destruction practically throughout the United States, and it is a curious thing to find it still in vogue here in the District of Columbia. For my part, I was surprised to find that this joint resolution did not completely extinguish it. On the contrary, the joint resolution still leaves the burden upon street railway companies in the District of Columbia of paying one-fourth of the cost of the pavements of all newly paved streets—that is, streets to be paved in the future—and the continuation of the cost of pavements in the trolley area with respect to repairs made in streets formerly paved, and an adjustment with reference to the burden which the railways place upon bridges, to be worked out by the Public Utilities Commission and the railways hereafter.

This waiver of support by the railway companies is made in consideration, of course, of the forbearance of extra fares, which the railway has to forbear when it gives free transfers between all railway cars.

I have approached the end of this, Mr. President. The majority report will supplement what I have said.

ALABAMA SENATORIAL CONTEST

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the special order for this hour, which will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 199), reported by Mr. GEORGE and Mr. BRATTON from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

Resolved, That JOHN H. BANKHEAD is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Alabama for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1931, and is entitled to be seated as such.

Mr. BRATTON obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield for that purpose?

Mr. BRATTON. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Costigan	Jones	Shipstead
Austin	Couzens	Kean	Shortridge
Bailey	Cutting	La Follette	Smith
Bankhead	Dale	Lewis	Smoot
Barbour	Dickinson	Logan	Steiwer
Barkley	Dill	Long	Stephens
Bingham	Fess	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Black	Fletcher	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Blaine	Frazier	Metcalf	Townsend
Borah	Glenn	Moses	Tydings
Bratton	Goldsborough	Neely	Vandenberg
Brookhart	Gore	Norbeck	Wagner
Broussard	Hale	Norris	Walcott
Bulkley	Harrison	Nye	Walsh, Mass
Bulow	Hastings	Oddie	Waterman
Byrnes	Hatfield	Patterson	Watson
Capper	Hayden	Pittman	Wheeler
Caraway	Hebert	Reed	White
Carey	Howell	Robinson, Ind.
Connally	Hull	Schall
Copeland	Johnson	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, the controversy to which the resolution refers naturally divides itself into two parts—the primary and the general election. It is alleged on the face of the contest that in the general election the contestee, Mr. Bankhead, received 150,985 votes, and that the contestant, Mr. Heflin, received 100,969 votes, thus giving to the contestee a majority of 50,016 votes on the face of the returns as canvassed in the State of Alabama.

After the contest was filed and in obedience to a resolution of the Senate the Committee on Privileges and Elections impounded the ballots, brought them to Washington and proceeded to recount them. There are 67 counties in Alabama. The committee took charge of the ballots in 64 of those counties. In three of the counties the ballots had been destroyed. On the face of the returns in the 64 counties, deducting the three counties where the ballots had been destroyed, Mr. Bankhead had a total of 144,586 votes, and Mr. Heflin 96,811, a majority of 47,775 for Mr. Bankhead.

The contestant challenges the validity of the primary, contending that he was wrongfully excluded therefrom. Indeed, he strikes at the entire proceedings of the primary. In addition to that he alleges a great array of irregularities and departures from the law relating to the conduct of the general election. I shall first address myself to the primary.

It is charged that the resolution adopted by the Democratic State committee of Alabama prescribing the qualifications of candidates and the qualifications of electors, was void because it departed from the statute, that it violated the statute, that under the statute the same qualifications are prescribed for candidates and voters, whereas the committee created different qualifications. Let us take up that phase of the case first.

Permit me to say in a preliminary way that perhaps the impression has gone abroad that this was an innovation in Alabama; that it was a new thing designed and put into force for the purpose of penalizing some one candidate or some group of candidates. I shall endeavor to show that such is not correct; that the procedure has been followed in Alabama for many years, and that it was not a new scheme, that it was not a new proposal, that it was not an innovation directed at any one candidate or any group of candidates.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Has the Senator touched upon the question of whether or not what they did had any legal effect upon the election? I think what they did in Alabama in the way of cutting a man out of the primary was an outrageous proposition, but the question in my mind is whether or not that should legally affect the results of the election. I do not think any State or any committee ought to have the right to say to any citizen, "You can not become a candidate in the Democratic primary or in the Republican primary." If they had attempted to do that in my State, or any of the Western States, I am sure the people of those States would have very much resented it. What the effect of their having done it would have been upon the result of the election is a thing that is uppermost in my mind.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, the inquiry is a very pertinent one, which I shall discuss later. I shall undertake to show that what they did conformed to the law. Then I shall undertake to establish the proposition that even if it departed from the statute it does not vitiate the general election; that advantage of it must be taken seasonably and in an appropriate way instead of waiting until after the general election.

At page 350 of volume 2 of the hearings Members of the Senate interested in the subject will find a copy of the resolution adopted by the committee. The relevant parts of it read as follows:

First. That a primary election be, and the same is hereby, called to be held at the several polling places in this State, at the hours fixed by law, on the second Tuesday in August, 1930, for the nomination of the Democratic candidates for offices to be filled in the general election next succeeding, and that the candidates of the Democratic Party for all State, district, circuit, Federal, and county offices to be filled in the general election to be held in November, 1930, be nominated in the primary election to be held on the second Tuesday in August, 1930, under the provisions of the statutes of Alabama governing primary elections.

Second. That the following persons shall be entitled to vote in said election, and none others, viz: Qualified white electors of this State who believe in the principles of the Democratic Party, and who agree and bind themselves by participating in said primary to abide by the result of said primary election, and to support the nominees of the Democratic Party therein.

Third. The following persons, and none other, shall be eligible to be candidates for nomination in said primary election, viz:

Qualified white electors who possess the qualifications fixed by law for the respective offices for which they are candidates for nomination: Provided, however, That no person shall become a candidate for any State, district, Federal, or circuit office or have his or her name printed upon the Democratic ballot in the primary election to be held on the 12th day of August, 1930, if such person either voted a Republican presidential ticket in November, 1928, or openly and publicly opposed the election of the nominees of the Democratic Party, or either of them, or who opposed the election of the Democratic electors for President or Vice President in November, 1928. Such proposed candidates shall also be required to pay the assessments fixed by this committee on or before the date limited for paying such assessments and for the filing of declaration of their candidacy.

Fourth. That candidates for nomination for all of said offices, except as herein provided for, shall within such time as may be specified by this committee file with the chairman of the State Democratic executive committee a declaration of candidacy as follows:

"I hereby declare myself to be a candidate for the Democratic nomination in the primary election to be held on the second Tuesday in August, 1930, for the office of ———.

"I hereby certify that I did not vote a Republican presidential ticket in November, 1928, or openly and publicly oppose the election of the nominee of the Democratic Party, or either of them, and that I did not oppose the election of the Democratic electors for President or Vice President in November, 1928.

"I further agree to abide by the result of the primary election in which I am a candidate, and to support the nominee of the Democratic Party in said election.

"I further certify that I am a qualified white elector of the State of Alabama, and possess the qualifications fixed by law for the office for which I am a candidate.

"——— ———.

"Sworn to and subscribed before me, this, the — day of ———, 1930.

"——— ———, Notary Public."

Mr. President, it will be found by reference to volume 3 of the hearings, recently conducted, at page 346, that a resolution identical in effect was adopted by the Democratic State Committee of Alabama in 1922. I read from that resolution as follows:

1. That a primary election for said party be, and the same is hereby, called to be held on August 8, the second Tuesday in August, 1922.

2. That all white voters otherwise qualified under the laws of the State of Alabama to vote shall be permitted to participate in such primary: And provided further, That any voter who participates in such primary thereby obligates and binds himself or herself to support the nominees therein selected.

3. That all candidates for any of the offices or party places to be nominated in said primary shall qualify as such candidate on or before the 1st day of May, 1922, by filing—if a candidate for a State office or a State party office—his or her name with the chairman of this committee, and if a candidate for a county office or county party office, his or her name with the chairman of his or her county Democratic executive committee, designating the office or the place for which he or she is a candidate, and under oath declaring that he or she did not in the presidential election of 1920 support the presidential electors of any party other than the Democratic Party, and a declaration that he or she will be bound by the result of such primary and will support the nominees thereof. Such candidates shall also comply with all the other laws as provided for in the statutes of Alabama.

It will be noted, Mr. President, that in the resolution of 1922 the committee required the same showing on behalf of candidates that it provided in 1930; that is to say, that no one should be eligible as a candidate in the primary who had in the previous presidential election supported the candidate for President or Vice President or presidential electors of any other party. In 1924 a slightly different procedure was adopted by the committee in that the matter of fixing qualifications was referred to a subcommittee. I read from the resolution of 1924, as follows:

Be it resolved, That the State Democratic executive committee of Alabama hereby adopts the following resolution:

"(1) That a primary election for the nomination of candidates of the Democratic Party for all State and county offices to be filled in the general election to be held in November, of 1924, be, and the same hereby is, calledd to be held on the second Tuesday in May, 1924, under the provisions of the statutes of Alabama governing primary elections and the regulations of the Democratic Party.

"(2) That the chairman of said committee be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a subcommittee consisting of himself, and of which he shall be chairman, and four other members of said State committee to provide regulations for the holding, conducting, and canvassing of said primary and of the preferential presidential vote, directed by resolution of this committee, adopted on December 13, 1923, to be held on March 11, 1924."

It may be appropriate to say in that connection that, although the resolution on its face shows that the matter was remitted to a subcommittee, it was stated by Mr. Bankhead before the committee—and, so far as I know, it has never been challenged—that in all the elections since 1910 the same procedure has been followed in Alabama with respect to requiring candidates to give assurance that in the previous presidential election they supported the nominees of their party.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I were to ask him a question?

Mr. BRATTON. Not at all. I should be glad to have the Senator from Idaho do so.

Mr. BORAH. Am I to understand that these resolutions running down from 1910 undertook to fix the qualifications of voters and also of candidates at the primaries?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. And in doing so they left the qualifications of voters the same as fixed by statute?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. But they changed the qualifications of the candidates?

Mr. BRATTON. I am unable to agree to that; I think they conformed to the statute with reference to both. I shall discuss the two pertinent statutes and my interpretation of them in just a few moments.

In 1926, Mr. President, the following resolution was adopted by the Democratic State committee in Alabama:

JANUARY 11, 1926.

Be it resolved, First, that a primary election be, and the same hereby is, called to be held at the several polling places in this State, at the hours fixed by law, on the second Tuesday in August, 1926, for the nomination of Democratic candidates for offices to be filled in the general election next succeeding and that the candidates of the Democratic Party for all State and county offices to be filled in the general election to be held in November, 1926, be nominated in the primary election to be held on the second Tuesday in August, 1926, under the provisions of the statutes of Alabama governing primary elections.

Second. That the following persons shall be entitled to vote in said election, and none others, viz, qualified white electors of this State who believe in the principles of the Democratic Party, and who agree to abide by the result of said election, and to support the nominees of the Democratic Party therein.

Third. The following persons shall be eligible to be candidates for nomination in said primaries, viz, qualified white electors, who possess the qualifications fixed by law for the respective offices for which they are candidates for nomination, who did not in the last preceding election support the nominee or candidate of any party except the Democratic Party, and who agree to abide by the result of said election, and to support the nominees of the Democratic Party therein, and who qualify by filing the declaration herein provided for, and by paying the assessment herein fixed—

And so forth.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I am interested in ascertaining the Senator's opinion as to just how far the political committee in Alabama under their procedure could go in prescribing qualifications. Does the Senator think there is a limit anywhere? For instance, could they say, as was done in the resolution which has been read, that no one should be a candidate unless he had supported the entire Democratic ticket in the preceding presidential election, and whose father before him had likewise supported the Democratic ticket while he was alive, if he was dead? Could they go that far?

Mr. BRATTON. I am not prepared to say that a party committee could go that far, although counsel for the contestant, Mr. Heflin, conceded repeatedly, as I shall show a little later, that the party in Alabama could fix any qualifications it saw fit so far as candidates were concerned. However, I am not prepared to go that far. I think that any reasonable qualification could be required by the committee, and in that connection I think party loyalty would be regarded as a reasonable requirement.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not dispute that; but I am wondering if in the identical case they did not exceed that rule of reasonableness. For instance, as I understand the rule laid down by the committee, if a man had voted the Democratic ticket from President clear down until he got to road supervisor, and happened to vote for a Republican for road supervisor, he would be disqualified from becoming a candidate for the Senate in the primary. Does the Senator think that is reasonable?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I think it is. I will be as candid with the Senator as he is always candid in the Senate. I believe that so far as power is concerned, a political party has the power or right to require such a condition of its candidate; that is my judgment.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. DILL. There is not any limitation of reasonableness on the committee, is there?

Mr. BRATTON. No; there is no limitation of reasonableness; that element must address itself to the individual or the group passing upon it.

Mr. President, I have adverted to the statement made by Senator Bankhead to the effect that this has been the procedure in Alabama since 1910. Let me call the attention of the Senate to what Senator Bankhead said—and it goes unchallenged; no one from Alabama has denied it. Quoting Senator Bankhead at part 1, page 155 of the hearings:

> Since 1910 the records will show that the Democratic State committee has fixed qualifications for candidates different from those of voters. They have prescribed that no one should be a candidate who opposed the Democratic nominees in the preceding election or who did not support the Democratic nominees in the preceding election. That has been the party law in Alabama since 1910, all of which was fought out in the campaign in Alabama before the people, and copies of the resolutions of the State committee from time to time were published in newspapers all over Alabama, and the gentlemen here are familiar with the rules. In fact, it is true that the last time Senator Heflin received his credentials from the people of Alabama he qualified as a candidate under just such a regulation, which fixed a different qualification for candidates and for voters.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator read that again?

Mr. BRATTON. Does the Senator wish the entire statement read?

Mr. LONG. I merely wish to know if Senator Heflin had met these same qualifications in past elections.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; that is the statement.

> In fact, it is true that the last time Senator Heflin received his credentials from the people of Alabama he qualified as a candidate under just such a regulation, which fixed a different qualification for candidates and for voters; and he had to file his statement or affidavit with the committee in order to get his name on the Democratic primary ticket that in the preceding election he supported all of the Democratic nominees. There was no complaint heard then—no.

Permit me to say I recall that Senator Heflin challenged that statement, so far as he was concerned, but otherwise there is nothing in the record to controvert the contention that this course has been followed in Alabama since 1910. I refer to it for the purpose of disabusing anyone of the thought that the system was a new and unique and exceptional one, devised and promoted for the purpose of excluding any particular candidate at the particular election in question.

Mr. President, counsel for contestant conceded a number of times that the State committee in Alabama had full authority to fix qualifications of candidates. I quote from Mr. Wilkinson, one of the attorneys for contestant, in volume 1 at page 106:

> Senator HASTINGS. Now, there is a qualification to that.
> Mr. WILKINSON. Yes, sir.
> Senator HASTINGS (reading):
> "Subject to such political or other qualifications as may be prescribed by the State executive committee or governing body of such political party for its candidate."
> Mr. WILKINSON. Yes, sir.
> Senator HASTINGS. Does not that virtually put it in the hands of the committee?
> Mr. WILKINSON. No, sir. It has this effect, Mr. Chairman, as I construe it, bearing in mind the two separate fields in which we operate now. The party operates on the candidate. The State operates on the voter. As a measure of protection, to keep down abuses and all of the evils that have grown up in connection with our political system, the State says to all political parties in Alabama, "Now, you adopt what qualifications you please for your candidate. If you want to say that nobody but a red-headed man with blue eyes and flat feet can run for United States Senator, that is your privilege. We do not purpose to interfere with the right of a voluntary organization to say what qualifications the person must possess who seeks honors at the hands of the organization." You would be interfering with the right of association if you did that; but the State says, "I confer the privilege of suffrage on the members of your organization, and I have the right to say when and where and under what circumstances they may exercise that State-conferred privilege; and I say to my voters, 'Every one of you has a right to participate in every primary held in this State, provided you possess the same qualifications that the committee prescribes for its candidate.'"

Later Mr. Wilkinson said (p. 118):

> Senator WATSON. Has the committee authority to limit the qualifications beyond the limitations prescribed by statute?
> Mr. WILKINSON. Senator, if the committee had the power to adopt section 2 of the resolution that provides that only a white elector can vote, the primary would fall under the decision in West against Bliley as an illegal proposition. But the committee may say that only a white man can run because the State can not interefere with the qualifications the committee may prescribe for its candidates.

Continuing, on page 119, Mr. Wilkinson said:

> Mr. WILKINSON. That is my contention, and there is reason for that, and good reason for it. If you had a party in Alabama that nominated negroes and said that nobody but a negro could run in its primary, the State would say nobody but a negro could vote for the negro candidate in the primary.
> "We are not going to leave a political party free," says the State of Alabama, "to fix any qualification it wants to fix for its candidates without taking some corresponding action to safeguard the State."

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. Before the Senator passes over that matter, I think it would be very valuable if he would read all of Mr. Wilkinson's statement in answer to Senator WATSON's question on page 118 of part 1.

Mr. BRATTON. Very well, Mr. President, I shall reread the answer in its entirety:

> Mr. WILKINSON. Senator, if the committee had the power to adopt section 2 of the resolution, that provides that only a white elector can vote, the primary would fall under the decision in West against Bliley as an illegal proposition. But the committee may say that only a white man can run, because the State can not interfere with the qualifications the committee may prescribe for its candidates.
> If you read the case of Nixon against Herndon, which went to the Supreme Court of the United States, you will find that a statute was passed in Texas providing that only white folks could vote in their primary elections down there, and the Supreme Court very promptly struck that down and said that was a violation of the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments.
> Texas came back and amended its law, put the power in the hands of the committee to fix the qualifications of candidates. The case went back to the Federal court. Judge Hutchinson in the Federal court in Texas wrote the opinion in Nixon v. Condon (34 Fed. (2d) 464), and he said the State has nothing on earth to do with the qualifications of the candidate. The committee can say that only a white man can run, that only a negro can run, that only a Chinaman can run, if they want to. That is a political question. The question of who can vote is a legal question, and in the exercise of its police power the State may say that only those who possess the same qualifications as the candidate may vote in the nominating procedure of the organization.
> That is the theory on which they reached that result. If you are going to have a Baptist church, you must elect a preacher; if you are going to elect a Baptist preacher, and you say he has to be a Baptist, a deep-water Baptist, then only deep-water Baptists can vote for him.

Continuing:

> Senator HASTINGS. Suppose, just as an extreme illustration, in order to get your point, that the committee had said that this primary is called for the purpose of ascertaining which member of the Bankhead family shall be a candidate for United States Senator. You contend, as I understand, that that was within the power of the committee. Is that correct?
> Mr. WILKINSON. Yes, sir; I think that is true.

Senator HASTINGS. Then you further contend that in that instance the qualified electors would have been limited to the Bankhead family?

Mr. WILKINSON. Yes, sir; I think that is true.

Then, Mr. President, continuing to page 126, Mr. Wilkinson, still speaking, said:

I have conceded, gentlemen, that the committee may fix any qualification for a candidate they want to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, the attorney for Mr. Heflin conceded that the committee could fix any qualifications for a candidate that they saw fit.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. BORAH. What is the contention, then, with reference to that matter?

Mr. BRATTON. The contention is that under the law the qualifications of the candidate and the voter must be the same, and that the resolution in question fixed different qualifications; that, so far as the voter was concerned, it merely required that he believe in the principles of the Democratic Party and bind himself to support the nominees of that primary; that, so far as the candidate was concerned, he must go beyond that and give affirmative assurance that in the preceding election he supported the nominees of the party.

Mr. BORAH. Then the attorneys for Mr. Heflin do not concede that the committee may fix any qualifications for the candidate that they see fit, if they contend, on the other hand, that those qualifications are limited by the qualifications of the voter.

Mr. BRATTON. The effect of the argument is that the committee may fix any qualifications it pleases so far as the candidate is concerned, and that by operation of law the same qualifications automatically attach to the voter.

Mr. BORAH. I see.

Mr. BRATTON. I shall undertake to show two things about that: First, that the contention is not sound; second, that if that is sound, the result of the action of the committee was merely to permit others to vote than those who were entitled to vote; that it simply permitted additional persons to vote; that it did not exclude voters entitled to vote; and that Senator Heflin, having been properly excluded, is in no position to raise the question.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator section 612 there?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes. I shall address myself to it now.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there for one suggestion?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. In addition to what the Senator has suggested, under the law of Alabama, as of all other States, if voters attempt to enter a primary or an election who do not possess the qualifications fixed either by law or by the committee, they can be challenged. So that if it be true that the qualifications of the voters in this case were automatically fixed as the qualifications of the candidate, then if a voter attempted to vote who was restricted by this qualification his vote could have been challenged. In other words, according to that conclusion, it simply restricted the number of individuals who could qualify as voters.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, it is admitted that the committee could fix the qualifications of the candidates and could fix any qualifications it desired. Is that the Senator's contention?

Mr. BLACK. That is the admission of the counsel for Senator Heflin.

Mr. BORAH. And that is the position of the senior Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BLACK. My position is, as I construe the opinion of the Supreme Court of Alabama, that they could fix any reasonable qualifications.

Mr. BORAH. And then, when the qualifications of the candidate are fixed, the contention is that the qualifications of the voters must correspond to the qualifications of the candidate?

Mr. BLACK. That was the contention that they presented to the committee.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will give attention, I desire to call attention now to two statutes.

Section 672 of the code provides:

Any executive committee of a party may fix assessments or other qualifications as it may deem necessary, for persons desiring to become candidates for nomination to office at a primary election; but no assessment shall be made by a committee for any county having by the last or a future census a population of less than 45,000—

And so forth. In other words, by the express authority of that statute any party may fix qualifications—any qualifications—for its candidates. There is the source of the power of the committee in Alabama to fix qualifications. I read the language again, in order that its sweeping scope may be appreciated:

Any executive committee of a party may fix assessments or other qualifications, as it may deem necessary, for persons desiring to become candidates for nomination to office at a primary election.

Section 612 to which the Senator from Idaho adverted must be considered in connection with that statute; it reads as follows:

All persons who are qualified electors under the general election laws of this State shall have the right to participate in such primary elections, subject to such political or other qualifications as may be prescribed by the State executive committee or governing body of such political party for its candidate. The State executive committee may delegate to the several county executive committees the power to prescribe the qualifications of voters in any primary election for the nomination of candidates for offices to be filled by the vote of a single county.

Mr. President, two views arise from the two sections of the statute construed together. Section 672 expressly provides that the committee may fix qualifications for its candidates. Section 612 provides that persons possessing the same qualifications as its candidates shall have the right to vote; but, Mr. President, it does not stop there. If the contention that the voter must possess the same qualifications as the candidate is sound, the legislature would have put a period there and stopped, because that would have completed the legislation on the subject matter. But after saying that the committee may fix the qualifications of candidates, and that voters having the same qualifications should have the right to vote, the legislature did not stop there. It continued to say:

The State executive committee may delegate to the several county executive committees the power to prescribe the qualifications of voters in any primary election for the nomination of candidates for offices to be filled by the vote of a single county.

Mr. President, it is clear to me, and I submit that what the legislature meant was twofold: To confer by legislative mandate the right to vote upon every individual possessing the same qualifications as those fixed by the committee for its candidate; and, in addition to that, it conferred upon a political party the power to permit others to come into its primary. In other words, my construction of that is that the first section of the statute, 612, confers upon a certain class of persons the right to vote; namely, those who possess the same qualifications as the candidates, and then, beyond that, the party could fix the qualifications for other persons in other classes. Still, in other words, Mr. President, just as this concrete case presents, the committee had the power to require of a nominee that he give assurance that he supported the nominees of the party at the previous election; and every person falling within that category had the right to vote under the statute.

The committee could not take it away. It was a right conferred by the sovereign State, but as to others, it was within the power of the committee either to admit them or exclude them as it saw fit. As to one class, the State vested the right to vote; as to the other class, it left the party free either to confer or to withhold it, as the party in its judgment saw fit. So that the moment the committee fixed as a qualification that in order to get his name on the ticket in 1930, a candidate must show that he voted the ticket in 1928, and required that as a requisite causing his name to be on the ticket, the statute automatically conferred the right upon every voter in Alabama who had supported the ticket in 1928 to vote. As to others the State did not confer such power, but left it with the party itself to decide whether they should be admitted or excluded.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. DILL. The Senator gave a number of examples where the State committee had fixed a similar requirement as to candidates in former elections.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Are there any cases where the State committee had made a different requirement for candidates than for the electors in other States, as they did in 1930?

Mr. BRATTON. In other States? I am not able to answer that question. The Senator says in other States?

Mr. DILL. Oh, no; in other elections, whether they made a different qualification for candidates than they did for the electors.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; that has been a rule since 1910.

Mr. DILL. They have made a different requirement for candidates than they have made for electors ever since 1910?

Mr. BRATTON. Since 1910. They have required exactly what they did here, that a voter must be a Democrat and must bind himself to support the nominees of the party. What he did theretofore was not the subject of inquiry. No question was raised about it. But the candidate was required to give assurance that at the preceding election he supported the nominees of his party. That distinction has obtained in Alabama since 1910.

Mr. DILL. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. BRATTON. Certainly.

Mr. DILL. What about the dates of the enactment of section 612 and section 673 by the legislature?

Mr. BRATTON. I am not able to give the Senator that information. But let me say that prior to 1919 the first sentence in section 612 reads thus:

> All persons who are qualified electors under the general election laws of this State shall have the right to participate in such primary elections, subject to such political or other qualifications as may be prescribed by the State executive committee or governing body of such political party.

In 1919 the words "for its candidates." were added.

Mr. DILL. Section 673 was not changed?

Mr. BRATTON. Section 673 was not changed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not a fact that the difference between the qualifications of a candidate and of a voter are set out in our own Federal Constitution? For example, a man must have been a resident of a State for a number of years to be a candidate for the Senate, but he does not have to be a resident that long to be a voter. So it is in our own Federal Constitution, and in the constitutions of practically all the States, where the qualification of a candidate fixed by statute, not by committees, makes certain limitations for the candidate which are not limitations upon the voters who can vote for the candidate. The policy sweeps through our whole election fabric, in practically every State in the country, and in the Constitution of the United States itself.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, this particular question has been decided by the Supreme Court of Alabama. Some disagreement of opinion obtains among members of the committee as to how far the law of Alabama applies. It was conceded, however, by counsel for the contestant on the argument, that the law of Alabama is absolutely controlling. He invited the committee to decide the case under the law of Alabama. I do not argue that the Senate is obligated to follow blindly the law of Alabama. I think it is highly persuasive, but not mandatory. Counsel for the contestant, Mr. Wilkinson, stated to the committee:

> I am asking the committee in this case to adopt the Alabama rule. Why? I think it more fair. Both of these gentlemen involved in this case are citizens of Alabama. It is inconceivable that anybody could claim that either one of them was ignorant of the Alabama rule on the subject. They are conclusively presumed to know the law of Alabama. Now, what is the law of Alabama?

Let us see what the law of Alabama is with respect to the power of the committee to fix different qualifications for its candidate from those fixed for the voter. The identical question was involved, construing this exact statute, in the case of Lett v. Dennis (129 Southern 33). I read the statement of the case, and then address myself to the pertinent parts of the opinion.

Mr. DILL. What was the date of the decision?

Mr. BRATTON. This case was decided May 31, 1930.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, before the Senator reads that, may I ask him another question?

Mr. BRATTON. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it the viewpoint of the attorney for Senator Heflin that in every respect the qualifications of the candidate and the voter must be the same?

Mr. BRATTON. It is the contention of counsel for the contestant that the committee may fix the qualifications of a candidate, and that by operation of law the qualifications of the voter become the same.

Mr. TYDINGS. In all respects?

Mr. BRATTON. In all respects.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was wondering whether that would apply as to age. A person might have to be a certain age to hold a particular office, yet one who had not reached that particular age would be entitled to vote.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose nobody contends that the committee could fix those qualifications.

Mr. BRATTON. I think not.

Mr. NORRIS. The contention, as I understand it, is that these other qualifications, about which the Senator is now speaking, are qualifications fixed by law, it may be the State constitution, the State law, or the Federal Constitution, as indeed that would apply in this particular case.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand the division there, but the point I was trying to arrive at was that that being the general situation of the statutes themselves, if the point of reasonableness brought out by the statute in the court would not be within the committee's province, assuming that it was necessary to make other limitations.

Mr. BRATTON. I take it that no one would contend that because a person is required to be 30 years of age to be a candidate for the office of United States Senator, the committee could exclude all persons under 30 from voting at an election for Senator. No such hypothetical case was presented to the committee, and I apprehend that we would have no disagreement about that.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, am I to understand that the State law gives the committee the right to fix qualifications which might deprive an elector of the right to vote?

Mr. BRATTON. The statute of Alabama simply provides that the party may fix qualifications of candidates, without any limitation. That is section 672. Perhaps I had better read it. It is not quoted in the reports. Let me reread section 672 of the Alabama Code:

> Any executive committee of a party may fix assessments or other qualifications as it may deem necessary for persons desiring to become candidates for nomination to office at a primary election.

Section 612 provides:

> All persons who are qualified electors under the general election laws of this State shall have the right to participate in such primary elections, subject to such political or other qualifications as may be prescribed by the State executive committee or governing body of such political party for its candidates. The State executive committee may delegate to the several county executive committees the power to prescribe the qualifications of voters in any primary election for the nomination of candidates for offices to be filled by the vote of a single county.

So that by section 672 the committee is authorized to fix any qualifications it sees fit to fix.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. For a candidate?

Mr. BRATTON. For a candidate.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Section 612 gives the power to fix qualifications of voters?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Under that broad power, it seems to me it is very possible for such a committee, a private organization, to say who shall and who shall not vote in the State.

Mr. BRATTON. My view of section 612 is that it divides itself into two parts; that after the committee has fixed the qualifications of a candidate, every person possessing those qualifications has the right, under the statute, to vote, and no committee action can take that right away from him. As to persons not possessing those qualifications—that is to say, persons falling in a different class or a different category—it is left to the committee to pass upon the question whether they shall be admitted or excluded from voting in the primary. So that when the committee provided in 1930 that in order to be a candidate a person must show that he supported the ticket in 1928 it automatically followed that every person who voted the ticket in 1928 and possessed the other requirements with respect to age, and so forth, was granted the absolute right to vote in the primary. As to others not meeting the qualifications required of the candidate, the committee had the power either to admit or exclude them from the primary.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, when an elector is challenged does he give answers to questions as to his qualifications?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes; if a person's name is on the qualified list furnished by the probate judge, he is entitled to vote. If his name is not on the qualified list, he is subject to challenge; and if he is challenged, then he makes an affidavit or otherwise meets the challenge and votes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If an elector is challenged and runs the gauntlet of the qualifications, and answers these questions under oath, then he swears that he will support the nominee of the party nominated at the primary.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Suppose he should change his mind after the primary was over; could he vote for anyone else?

Mr. BRATTON. That is a moral question which addresses itself to every voter. In a great many States, as the Senator will recall, there is a pledge at the top of the ballot in some such language as this: "I am a Democrat and pledge myself to support the nominees of this primary." It is believed that of itself constitutes a moral obligation on the part of the voter to support the ticket in the general election. But it has no legal, binding effect. The voter can disregard it. I dare say that in Alabama a man who runs the gauntlet and votes the Democratic ticket in the primary, would have a legal right to violate that obligation and vote some other ticket in the general election. That is exclusively a moral question, addressing itself to the individual.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. He is being questioned under oath as to his qualifications, and one of the qualifications is that he will support the candidate nominated——

Mr. BRATTON. He obligates himself to do so.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And he answers "Yes," under oath.

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Then, having done that, the Senator says he has a legal right or a moral right to disregard that?

Mr. BRATTON. He has a legal right to do so. Not a moral right.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. A legal right?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It seems to me that this leaves the door open for all kinds of opportunity to interfere with the right of franchise of an elector.

Mr. BRATTON. In what way?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It seems to me that the law, if it can do so, delegates to a private organization or committee the right to say who shall and who can and who may vote or not vote.

Mr. BRATTON. In its primaries. Of course, a political party is a political organization. It is conducting the primary for the purpose of nominating its candidates. I should think that a political party should have the right within reasonable limitations to say who should participate in its party activities and in its party primaries. It is my belief that any political party has the right to require of the voter that he assert his loyalty to the party and obligate himself to support the nominee as a prerequisite to voting. Of course, he could disregard the obligation in the general election and vote some other ticket. The obligation is quite similar to the one now imposed upon presidential electors. A man may be elected as a presidential elector on one ticket and he may cast his vote in the Electoral College for the nominee of another party. He is bound only by his sense of moral obligation, and so it is with the voter. He may disregard his moral obligation and repudiate the promise he gave to the party as prerequisite to participating in its affairs. He can do that in the general election. I do think, however, that a party has the right to require any person who steps up to a booth to vote to assert himself to be a member of the party and obligate himself to support the nominees of the primary.

Mr. President, I was about to discuss the case decided by the Supreme Court of Alabama construing this statute, involving the identical question now before the Senate. It is the case of Lett v. Dennis (129 Southern, 33), decided May 31, 1930. The statement of the case is as follows, and shows that the controversy relates to this particular primary:

> The Chilton County Republican executive committee called a primary election to be held "with the State primary election on August 12, 1930." In the call resolution all qualified voters, regardless of past party affiliations and who believe in the principles of the Republican Party and pledge themselves to support the nominees of such party in the primary, were invited to participate. But as to one desiring to become a candidate there was an additional requirement that he state "under oath how he or she voted in the last general election of 1928; that is, whether said proposed candidate supported the Republican ticket or the Democratic ticket or voted a split ticket." This oath was required to be filed with the chairman and kept on file open to inspection as well as published in a newspaper published in said county. M. F. Lett desired to become a candidate in said primary for the office of member of the board of education of Chilton County, and complied with all requirements of said executive committee as to such candidacy save one. He declined to make the oath above outlined. For his declination to conform to this requirement the chairman refused to certify his name as a candidate for said office, and this mandamus proceeding was resorted to for the purpose of compelling such certification.

Then the court discusses the procedure and says that mandamus was a proper course to pursue.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The oath was one that required him to swear that he would support the nominee?

Mr. BRATTON. Oh, no:

> But as to one desiring to become a candidate there was an additional requirement that he state "under oath how he or she voted in the last general election of 1928"—that is, whether said proposed candidate voted the Republican ticket or the Democratic ticket, or voted a split ticket.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the Senator a question as to his idea of that law. Suppose a candidate had taken that oath. Afterwards he was arrested for perjury, for having sworn falsely. Could a prosecution be sustained under the law? Could a conviction or perjury be sustained under that statute?

Mr. BRATTON. For making a false affidavit?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BRATTON. I think so, unless it might be defeated, because the oath was not a mandatory one, with no legal effect; that it was one voluntarily taken in party affairs without any legal status before the law. Unless upon that consideration such an indictment could be attacked, I think a prosecution for false swearing could be supported.

Mr. NORRIS. Then let me ask the Senator another question. That oath or, in the case before us, under the Alabama law, the oath there requires them to state that they will support the nominee or the nominees of the primary. Suppose an elector takes that oath and is permitted, by reason of having taken it, to vote in the primary and afterwards he violates the oath and does not support and does not vote for the candidate. For the sake of argument, admitting that is true, could he be prosecuted for perjury?

Mr. BRATTON. No. One may be indicted for false swearing only respecting present or past facts. If a man should swear that he will do a thing in the future and does not do it, he can not be prosecuted for that. His statement must relate to an existing or past fact. A man might make affidavit that he would support the nominees of the party in the general election and then openly flout that statement and repudiate it and openly vote another ticket, but he could not be prosecuted, because the requirements for a prosecution for perjury or false swearing must relate to and must be predicated upon an existing or past fact.

Mr. NORRIS. Then under the law, as the Senator looks at it—and I agree with him entirely—the effect of the taking of that oath would be practically nothing? It would not mean anything as a practical proposition.

Mr. BRATTON. That would follow. The oath is required only of a candidate. A voter who is challenged makes statements respecting his party loyalty and his promise to vote for the nominees of the primary.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not that under oath?

Mr. BRATTON. No; that is just a statement in response to questions propounded when he is challenged. It is the candidate who makes the written oath promising to support the nominees of the ticket. But I think a candidate could repudiate that oath and could vote another ticket in the general election and yet he could not be prosecuted under a statute for false swearing.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. He would be morally bound. The moral obligation on his part would be a good deal the same as the moral obligation on the part of delegates who are elected in the various States to the Republican National Convention, where they have a primary law pledging them to a certain candidate, and when they get to the convention they vote for another candidate. It is about the same kind of a moral obligation.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, after stating that mandamus was the correct procedure to be adopted in this case, the court continued:

> That a test by a political organization of party affiliation and party fealty is reasonable and proper to be prescribed for those participating in its primary elections for nomination of candidates for office is well nigh universally recognized.
> It is equally well settled that such a test in no manner violates statutory provisions for the secrecy of the ballot, for as has been well said, "It is the secrecy of the ballot which the law protects and not secrecy as to the political party with which the voters intend to act."

Mr. President, I shall not read the decision at length. I skip to this language:

> We therefore conclude that the committee acted well within its authority, as expressly recognized by section 672 of the code, in prescribing the test oath of party loyalty, and that its action is not subject to the criticism that it was arbitrary or unreasonable. Our attention is directed to the very recent case of Love v. Wilcox (28 S. W. (2d) 515, from the Supreme Court of Texas) as having some bearing upon the instant case. We have studied the opinion with much interest and care, but the statute of Texas there considered is so widely variant from that of this State as to render the decision of no value here. As pointed out in the opinion, the Texas statute limited the discretionary power of the party executive committee as to qualifications of participants in the party primary by expressly prohibiting exclusion of anyone because of "former political views or affiliations."
> The opinion proceeds: "The committee's discretionary power is further restricted by the statute directing that a single uniform pledge be required of the primary participants. The effect of the statutes is to decline to give recognition to the lodgment of power in a State executive committee, to be exercised at its discretion." It is to be noted, therefore, that the Texas statute is the very antithesis of the Alabama statute, which fully recognizes and gives force and effect to the discretionary power of the committee in the opening sentence of section 672 of the code: "Any executive committee of a party may fix assessments or other qualifications as it may deem necessary, for persons desiring to become candidates for nomination to office at a primary election." As contrasted with the Texas statute limiting the committee's discretion, our statute leaves the matter entirely with the committee without limitation or restraint in this regard. No further discussion is necessary to demonstrate that the case of Love v. Wilcox, supra, is wholly inapplicable here.

So, Mr. President, the identical question now presented to the Senate, and upon which the minority of the full committee rests its views at least in part, has been decided by the Supreme Court of Alabama distinguishing its statute from the Texas statute, and pointing out that under its statute the committee is free to fix regulations, such questions resting in the discretion of the committee, whereas the statute of Texas denied that power to the committee.

Mr. President, I have canvassed the statute and have undertaken to analyze it and to give the Senate my views with respect to its correct interpretation. Let me repeat, and I shall do so hastily, that under the Alabama law the State committee is authorized to prescribe qualifications for its candidates. The Alabama court in the case of Lett against Dennis holds that the power is without restriction, without limitation, without proscription. It is my view, however, that the qualifications prescribed must be reasonable. I dare say that every presumption in favor of a qualification fixed should be indulged. It should be overturned only in the case of palpably flagrant unreasonableness. I dare say that no one in the Senate will contend that party loyalty, not on the part of the voter, not on the part of the citizen who wants to participate in the primary, but on the part of him who seeks honors at the hands of his party, is not an unreasonable qualification.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Living pretty close to Alabama, I have always understood, and from the record which I have here it seems to be very patent, that they have had considerable legislation against party bolters in both parties. Does not the record show pretty clearly—it seems from the resolutions that it does unless there is something to the contrary—that the contestant, apparently very prominent in the politics of the State, has evidently been benefiting and sheltering under this very provision which has been in the law for at least some years. Is there anything in the record to show that he has done anything except to participate in elections under such condition or has he urged any contest against similar requirements in days past when other candidates were barred?

Mr. BRATTON. The only thing in the record is that, and in response to the statement that this had been the uniform procedure in Alabama since 1910, and that Senator Heflin was nominated under exactly the same sort of a resolution, Senator Heflin said that was not true. Otherwise, the record is silent as to what Senator Heflin has done or has not done with respect to approving or disapproving resolutions of this character. Let me give Senator Heflin credit for saying to the committee that he was not nominated in 1924 under a resolution like this one. That is all there is in the record.

Mr. LONG. The record, however, shows that there was a resolution on the subject when Senator Heflin was nominated in 1924?

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator will remember that in 1924 the full State committee remitted the matter to a subcommittee, and the record does not show what the subcommittee did, or, if it does, I have overlooked it.

The Senator asked what the contestant did, if anything, to cry out against a resolution of this kind. I shall state to him verbatim what was said and all that was said. On page 163, part 1 of the hearings, Senator Heflin said:

> Mr. Bankhead said that I have been nominated in the same kind of a primary as that in which he was nominated. I beg leave to differ with him. If I had been nominated in a primary like that I never could have forgotten it.

Senator Heflin said substantially the same thing just a few days ago.

However, Mr. President, I do not want to be diverted into that channel of argument. I am content to submit that this has been the party policy since 1910; that it is not a new system; that it was not devised to exclude any one individual; that it harmonizes with previous procedure; and that, under the law of Alabama as construed by the Supreme Court of Alabama upon the identical, precise question, the State committee had the right to exact the oath of loyalty required in this particular case. The court held in Lett against Dennis that it was reasonable; and counsel for the contestant himself in the early stages of the proceedings said that the law of Alabama must govern and control, because both parties were familiar with the law, and should be bound by it. Of course, the Senate will follow that unless it is so flagrantly incorrect and unsound as to offend the sense of justice; and I dare say that this case does not present a consideration of that character.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Would it disconcert the Senator's argument to have inserted in the RECORD at this place a few lines from a decision in the House of Representatives on the law of the case?

Mr. BRATTON. Not at all, Mr. President.

Mr. BLACK. I read a quotation from Wright v. Fuller, in House Election Cases, at page 152:

> Having disposed of this preliminary point, the committee proceeded to the examination of the law and testimony involved in this case.
>
> In discharging the last duty the committee considered that although the House of Representatives, by virtue of the fifth section of the first article of the Federal Constitution, are made judges of the election returns and qualifications of its members, yet this power is not plenary but is subordinate to the second and fourth sections of the same article, the first of these sections providing that the electors of the Members shall have the qualifications of the most numerous branch of the State legislature, the fourth section empowering and authorizing the legislature in each State to prescribe the places, times, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, such regulations being subject to alterations made by Congress.
>
> By force of these provisions the House is compelled, when adjudicating in any matter affecting the election returns or qualifications of its Members, to make the law of the respective States from which such Members may be returned its rule of action.

Mr. BRATTON. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator leaves that point, will he permit another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Have the courts of Alabama, or of any other States, passed on the provision of section 612 of the Alabama Code, which, it seems to me, is involved here, requiring the qualifications of voters and of candidates to be the same?

Mr. BRATTON. No, Mr. President; counsel for neither party brought to the committee any authority as to the validity of a statute identical or strikingly similar to the one in Alabama, and our research failed to disclose one.

Now, Mr. President, let us see what the attitude of the contestee, Senator Bankhead, was with respect to excluding Senator Heflin from the primaries.

I quote now from part 1 of the hearings at page 153, Mr. Bankhead, addressing the committee, said:

> While I favor letting Senator Heflin run, I always took the position that the committee had the power to discipline anyone it saw fit and to fix any reasonable qualifications for its standard bearers; that it would be an absurd situation, inherently absurd, to place any political party in a position where, when it was faced with a party contest, a party struggle, it did not have the inherent power to select as its leaders those who not only stood for the principles of the party, but those who, as a matter of practical experience, could go out and appeal to the membership of the party for regularity and party loyalty, as you gentlemen know takes place in all political campaigns.

Again, Mr. Bankhead said:

> Mr. Fite, who was a supporter of Senator Heflin's candidates in the primary, and supporting him at the primary, and who was a member of the State executive committee, and lives in my town, wrote to me after the action of the State executive committee. I had given out a public statement, published in the papers, in favor of letting down the bars, on the grounds that I have just stated frankly—not because the committee did not have the power. Following the action of the State committee Mr. Fite wrote me to know, among other things, if I would join in a request to the State chairman to have the committee reassemble and revoke its action.

In other words, according to the statement made by Senator Bankhead—and it is uncontroverted in the record, until the committee took action—Senator Bankhead had stated publicly, and his statement had gone in the press, that he favored letting down the bars and not requiring affidavits from candidates that they supported the nominees of the party in 1928. After the committee had acted, after his party had acted, Senator Bankhead took the position that he would do nothing to undermine or weaken his party; but until his party spoke, according to the record, he favored removing the restriction and letting the candidates go before the people and submit the question in the political forum. Senator Bankhead's attitude, either before or after the committee acted, can not be the subject of criticism. On the contrary, it was commendable.

Mr. President, so much for the power of the committee in Alabama to do what it did; so much for the construction of the statute; so much for the proposition that such action harmonized with the previous action of the Democratic Party in Alabama.

After the primary was held, after Mr. Bankhead was selected as the nominee of the Democratic Party, neither the contestant nor anyone else took any action to restrain placing his name upon the ticket, to withhold distributing ballots throughout the State bearing his name as such nominee for the United States Senate. On the contrary, the contestant, instead of presenting the matter to the courts in an effort to prevent the consummation of what he now contends was a fraud, went into the political forum, had himself nominated upon another ticket, and submitted his cause to the people of Alabama. After sustaining defeat at the polls he now essays to go behind the election itself to attack the primary; that is to say, the method by which Senator Bankhead was nominated.

The authorities, Mr. President, are well-nigh universal that one feeling aggrieved at the manner in which another was nominated, one charging some irregularity or defect or illegality in the primary proceedings, can not stand idly by until the primary is merged into the general election and thus become functus officio and then undertake to go behind the election and raise questions respecting the validity of the primary.

Those interested in the matter will find in the report of the minority of the subcommittee, now the report of the majority of the full committee, a long résumé of cases discussing that question. I quote first from 20 Corpus Juris, page 132, as follows:

> Objections relating to nominations must be timely made; otherwise they may be regarded as waived. It is too late to make them after the nominee's name has been placed on the ballot and he has been elected to office; his election can not be impeached on the ground that statutory requirements regarding nominations were not complied with in his case, or that his nomination was procured by unlawful means.

In volume 9, Ruling Case Law, page 1122, the rule is declared in this language:

The general rule in determining the effect of irregularities in the conduct of elections on the result thereof is applicable when an attempt is made to contest an election by reason of some irregularity in the nomination of candidates.

It is the duty of courts to uphold the law by sustaining elections thereunder that have resulted in a full and fair expression of the public will, and from the current of authority the following may be stated as the approved rule: All provisions of the election law are mandatory if enforcement is sought before election in a direct proceeding for that purpose; but after election, all should be held directory only, in support of the result, unless of a character to effect an obstruction to the free and intelligent casting of the vote or to the ascertainment of the result, or unless the provisions affect an essential element of the election, or unless it is expressly declared by the statute that the particular act is essential to the validity of an election, or that its omission shall render it void. Voters finding the ticket or the names of candidates on the official ballot are not required to determine whether they are entitled to a place thereon but may safely rely on the action of the officer of the law and on the presumption that they have performed their duty. And so an election in which the voters have fully, fairly, and honestly expressed their will is not invalid because the certificate of nomination of the successful candidate is defective through the omission of some detail. Nor is the title of the successful candidate affected by a subsequent decision holding the law under which the nominations were made invalid.

Other authorities too numerous to discuss at length are cited in the report.

I call attention to a case decided by the House of Representatives involving the identical legal proposition here. I read from a volume entitled "A Historical and Legal Digest of All the Contested Election Cases in the House of Representatives of the United States from the Fifty-seventh to and Including the Sixty-fourth Congresses, 1901 to 1917."

The case to which I refer is MacDonald v. Young, found at page 63 of that volume. I read it because it deals so convincingly with the question now under consideration that I think it will be helpful to those who are sufficiently interested to hear me.

Contestant, whose right name is William J. MacDonald, on the face of the returns received under the name of William J. McDonald 17,975 votes, and under the name of Sheldon William J. McDonald 458 votes, making a total of 18,433.

Contestee received 18,190 votes.

I will skip to the relevant part:

Whether the nomination of Rogers was regular and in conformity with the primary act, or whether the congressional committee was regularly formed, we do not deem fatal to contestant's claim to a seat. It is sufficient to say that the contestant's name was duly certified, as required by the general laws of the State of Michigan, to the election boards of the several counties, and by them printed upon the official ballot for the use of the voters at the November election. This certification took place as early as the 11th day of October, and the certificate was made a matter of public record in each county in the district. No objections were made in any county in the district by Mr. Young, any elector of the district, any officer of any political party, or by any of the election officials to the manner in which Mr. Rogers or Mr. MacDonald had been nominated, until four days prior to the 5th day of November, the date of the general election. The contestee, who was more vitally interested than any other person, by telegram to all of the boards of election commissioners in the district requested that Mr. MacDonald's name remain upon the ballots as they were printed and in his circular invoked the rule of the people. His desires in this regard were respected by the election officials in every voting precinct in the district, with the exception, as shown by evidence, in one voting precinct the election officers pasted blank paper over the name of the contestant, thus depriving him of the Progressive votes in that precinct.

The primary act provides that any candidate, feeling aggrieved, on account of fraud or error by the board of primary election inspectors, or in the count of the votes cast, or returns made by the board, may file a petition to correct any error or fraud complained of, and that the board of election inspectors may correct any fraud practiced, or irregularity in the election. This is a remedial statute; and if the manner of the nomination of Joseph M. Rogers was irregular or fraudulent, its provisions should have been invoked at the proper time. In addition to this, our committee finds that the courts of the State of Michigan had the inherent right and power, if the name of William J. MacDonald was not entitled to be printed upon the ballots for the use of the voters at the general election, to have corrected such irregularity, and that recourse should have been had to the courts if complaint was to be made prior to the existence of the right of suffrage by the electors of the district.

It is not claimed that the nomination of Rogers, his resignation, and the filling of the vacancy with the name of the contestant, or with the formation of the congressional committee who selected the contestant to fill the vacancy caused by Rogers, were fraudulent. It is only contended that it was irregular and not in strict conformity to the primary act of the State of Michigan. By a long line of unquestioned precedents established by the House it is not bound to take cognizance of the manner in which a candidate for Congress is nominated, unless the methods employed are unfair or fraudulent and have resulted in thwarting the will of the electorate. Objections made by the contestee to the manner and form of the nomination of the contestant are highly technical, and if enforced by the House would result in the disfranchisement of not only the 458 votes cast in Ontonagon County but of the 17,975 votes cast in the remainder of the district.

We believe that if the contestee or any elector in the district were dissatisfied with the manner in which contestant's name appeared upon the official ballot such dissatisfaction should have been exemplified prior to the general November election; that it would be exceedingly unfair and inequitable to wait until after the voters had made their choice between the candidates, and, if not then satisfactory, to urge objections. But we believe the nomination of Rogers and the formation of the congressional committee were regular and legal under the provisions of the primary act.

The House held in this case that a candidate or an elector dissatisfied with the way in which a nomination had been effected—that is to say, charging irregularity or illegality—should take advantage of it before the general election; that he could not stand idly by and wait until the election had been held and then complain about the manner of the nomination.

But, Mr. President, under the contestant's theory, the committee had the power to exclude him from the primary. His counsel admitted repeatedly in the record that the committee had unrestricted and unproscribed authority to impose qualifications so far as a candidate was concerned. If so, Mr. President, under his own admission, when the committee passed the resolution it excluded him and eliminated him from further consideration as a candidate. What right has he as a candidate to complain of what his party did with respect to its voters after he had been regularly and legally and lawfully, by his own admission, excluded?

The contestant has no standing as a candidate. He has no standing other than as a voter; and under the authorities cited in the report, and under the decision of the House to which I have adverted, advantage of that must be taken before the general election is held.

Of course, Mr. President, that doctrine rests upon the clear foundation that the public have an interest in an election; that they have a right to rely upon the fact that nominations have been made correctly, and that the names on the ballot are there correctly, and they vote with that assurance under the law.

Now, Mr. President, coming to the general election, it is conceded by the contestant that his adversary had a majority of 50,016 votes. Various attacks are made upon the general election; but they all relate to irregularities, failures to comply with this provision of a statute or that provision of a statute. I shall not discuss them at length. Perhaps I shall discuss them later.

For instance, it is contended that throughout the State there was a failure to use election booths. The law of Alabama requires the use of election booths in towns or cities of more than 3,000 population. It is admitted on all sides that booths were not used in this election.

The attorney for Mr. Bankhead, who appeared to be a man 50 years of age or above, said he was born in the State of Alabama, and had lived there all of his life; that election booths had never been used in the State, and that he had never seen an election booth in use there. It was stated by Judge Wilkinson, representing Mr. Heflin, that he had seen election booths in two or three counties. No one will contend, however, that it had been the practice in prior years to use election booths in Alabama, nor that they were dispensed with in this particular case for any purpose, ulterior or otherwise. It had been the custom not to use them, and that custom was followed here.

It is asserted that the law of Alabama required the election officers to roll the ballots and tie them after they were counted; that in a number of precincts, instead of doing that, they simply folded them. That is conceded. But, Mr. President, the Supreme Court of Alabama has held that the failure to furnish election booths is a mere irregularity, and does not vitiate the election. The Supreme Court of Alabama has held that the failure to roll ballots and seal them as the law requires is a mere irregularity that does not go to the vitality of the election; and so it is throughout the charges of irregularities in this contest. The supreme court has held that virtually every irregularity charged does not invalidate an election.

The recount reduced Mr. Bankhead's majority less than 2,000. It left him a majority of about 48,000. The official returns gave him 50,016. The recount gave him a majority of about 48,000. So far as the general election is concerned, it is contended by those who present the minority views here that irregularities of that character, in that class, and in that category destroy the validity of the election and create a vacancy in the office. Mr. President, practically every irregularity pointed out by the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], who presents the minority views here, has been passed upon by the courts of Alabama, holding that they did not invalidate the election.

We are all familiar with the general rule that election statutes are mandatory or directory; that a statute is not mandatory unless the legislature either expressly declares or evidences an unmistakable intent that it shall be mandatory; that all other statutes are directory and yield to the paramount consideration of ascertaining the public will and expression of the public desire. After all, Mr. President, the will of the voters is the thing of supreme importance, to which the interests of candidates is secondary.

In the early stages of this case it was asserted by counsel for the contestant that they expected to show that in a large number of precincts returns had been substituted, different ballots provided, and that the whole thing was fraudulent. In this connection I shall explain the manner in which an election is conducted in Alabama.

The staff is composed of three inspectors, two clerks, and one returning officer. They are selected by the probate judge, the sheriff, and the clerk of the circuit court. Each party has a right to submit to that board a list of persons from which an inspector and clerk shall be selected. As I recall, that was done in every case, except in two counties; Senator Heflin had representation on the election boards except in two counties. In one county he failed to file a request and in the other county the request came after the election officials had been appointed. Otherwise, if I recall correctly, his request was complied with in every case.

It is provided that the inspectors and clerks shall conduct the election, and the returning officers shall take the returns and deliver them to the sheriff within 48 hours after they are delivered to him. The duties of the returning officer are just what the name implies; that is to say, to take the returns and convey them to the sheriff, he being the custodian under the law.

I digress here to address myself to a matter now coming to mind. The chairman of the subcommittee, who speaks for the minority, suggests in his report, filed to-day, that some of the election officers failed to subscribe to an oath. I think he says that 544 of them failed to subscribe to an oath. The statute does not require them to subscribe to an oath. The language of the statute is that they shall take an oath. Of course, that statute could be fully complied with by the election officers standing before the polls opened and holding up their right hands and taking the oath verbally. The statute does not provide they shall sign an oath. Failure to file a written oath does not indicate a failure to comply with the statute. There is not a thing in the record to indicate that a single one of them failed to take the oath, which could be done verbally.

Returning to the point of digression, as I have said, it was suggested by counsel for the contestant in the early part of the hearings that he would show that in a great number of precincts new returns were substituted, fraudulent returns, forged ballots and books. A copy of the poll list in each county was printed and furnished to each party. It contained a list of the voters, and the number preceding the name of each.

When a voter goes to the polls in Alabama to vote, he is given a number. That number is put on the back of the ballot. His name is entered upon the poll list, and the corresponding number is placed in front of his name. Accordingly, if No. 13 is immediately in front of the name of Jim Jones, his ballot has No. 13 on the back of it. All ballots are identified in that way.

The poll lists in each county were printed last summer and delivered to the parties. I have one of them in my hand.

If the ballot was marked for Bankhead, a slash was placed in front of the name; if the ballot was marked for Heflin, a cross was placed following the name, thus indicating to everybody that ballot No. 13, for instance, cast by Jim Smith, was marked for Bankhead, if that be the case; or that ballot No. 23, cast by John Jones, was marked for Heflin. Those poll lists were placed in the hands of the parties last summer, and with very few exceptions, as I recall, less than two dozen, not a voice was raised, as appears from the record, to show that a vote cast by one is shown now marked for the other.

Not only that, but under the law of Alabama the election officers are required immediately after the returns are canvassed to make a certificate in triplicate, listing the candidates and the total votes cast for each of them. They are required to post one of those certificates at a public place near the polling place. They are required to put one in the ballot box, and they are required to deliver the third to the probate judge.

These ballots have been tabulated, and they conform, without substantial exception, to the certificates prepared and posted by the election officers immediately after they tabulated the returns and ascertained the totals.

It might be asserted, and indeed it was asserted by counsel for the contestant in the argument in the early part of the hearing last July, that they expected to show that new returns had been substituted to conform to the certificates made and posted, that some of the certificates were fabrications, that they were untrue, and that substituted ballots were prepared to conform to the certificates.

The committee, not being satisfied with the tabulation so far as it related to the candidates for United States Senator but desiring to go beyond that, checked the ballots and returns with respect to every other candidate in Alabama. We have in the custody of the committee large tally sheets, perhaps 3 feet square, showing the recount, the tabulation with respect to other officers from top to bottom, from United States Senator to constable, and the ballots in the box brought to Washington and recounted by the committee conformed without any substantial exception to the certificates made by the election officers on the night of the election and posted at the door near the polling place. That refutes any suggestion that fraud occurred in tabulating returns or that returns were fabricated to conform to the certificate.

One other thing. It was suggested that a questionnaire be prepared and sent to absentee voters, asking them, among other things, how they voted for United States Senator. My recollection is that something like 5,000 of those went out, and that about 4,000 of those to whom they were sent responded. I am not speaking with precision respecting the number, but a large number replied to the questionnaire asking each of them how he voted for United States Senator. My memory is that out of that large number, about 4,000, there appeared only about 18 discrepancies, some saying that they voted for Heflin, whereas the ballots show to be marked for Bankhead; some saying that they voted for Bankhead, whereas the ballots now show marked for Heflin. That is an infinitesimally small number compared with the total number of questionnaires to which responses were made; and the discrepancies were both ways.

Mr. President, I shall not trespass further upon the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Did I understand the Senator to say that the returns in those elections were posted at the polling precincts?

Mr. BRATTON. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Then there was no secrecy about it for a number of days?

Mr. BRATTON. Oh, no; the returns were published immediately after the tabulation was completed. The certificate was posted that night. The returns were carried promptly by the Associated Press. Oh, no; there was no secrecy about it. Quite the contrary, it was entirely public. Those certificates, posted and made public in that way, conformed virtually without exception to the ballots brought here and recounted.

Mr. LONG. There was no substantial difference between the early returns, as announced immediately upon the closing of the polls, and the returns as shown by the final count?

Mr. BRATTON. No; there was not. Moreover, the supervisor, Mr. Smith, addressed a letter to what I may call the Heflin chairman in each county, stating to him that the committee had the contest under consideration and sought information, and asking him about the conduct of the election in his county, about the certificates, and about his information, immediately after the polls closed.

A great many replies are attached to the report submitted by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and myself as a minority of the subcommittee, and now the majority report of the full committee. The replies of these country chairmen are all printed. Some say that they did not have watchers at the polls, that they did not appoint them. Some say that they decided it would be best not to have watchers. Some say that they did not keep any data or any certificates. Some say they forwarded them to Heflin headquarters. But the signal, outstanding fact is that not one of them says that the official tabulation in Alabama was incorrect or fraudulent in any respect. Senators may read them from beginning to end and they will fail to find an expression of that kind coming from a Heflin county chairman in Alabama.

On page 72 of the minority report is a long communication from a doctor named Prather. Instead of suggesting fraud in the election, he pointed out that Senator Heflin's defeat was due to his own mistake. The reply is addressed to the supervisor, in response to his request for information. In it the doctor said:

> Now, Tom Heflin made two mistakes; one, he started his campaign too early. The split provoked by the State Democratic executive committee is generally believed to have been conceived by the Alabama Power Co. His followers were not with Alabama Power Co., and Tom lined up with the Power Trust in the Senate on Muscle Shoals. The Bankhead crowd was better organized and many of his (Tom's) cheerers were nonvoters.

There is a great deal more said in this communication, but I shall not take the time of the Senate to read it. It simply points out the situation in Alabama. It was simply one group being better organized and having the party emblem at its masthead and the other being less organized and without the benefit of the party emblem.

Mr. President, every Member of the Senate knows that if there had been any such thing as a substitution of returns, or if there had been any substantial fraud in counting the ballots and in tabulating them, these county chairmen would be heard to cry out and make such charge to the committee, whether they could substantiate it or not. Signal the fact is that not one of them made any such charge.

Mr. President, I conclude by saying that I think the primary was valid in all respects; that it was too late; that it was untimely to wait until after the general election and then raise the question. It should have been raised before the election.

With respect to the general election, a great many irregularities are pointed out. A great many irregularities appear in this record. No one familiar with the facts would contend otherwise. But they are the ordinary irregularities, such as occur in every election held in most any State in the Union. The fact that they were general throughout the State, of similar character, refutes the idea of a statewide conspiracy to perpetrate fraud. They occurred in counties carried by Senator Heflin the same as they did in counties carried by Senator Bankhead. There are 67 counties in Alabama. My memory is that Senator Bankhead carried 57 of them and Senator Heflin 10. But these irregularities, these departures from the statute, occurred in the counties dominated by the Heflin forces the same as they did in the counties dominated by the Bankhead forces.

Mr. President, I shall hasten because the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] desires to present another matter to the Senate, one of importance, and I am anxious to conform to his desires. In addition to the general rule that irregularities do not vitiate an election, I invite attention to the fact that the Legislature of Alabama fixed these requirements, the Legislature of Alabama provided that certain things should be done, and the only reason why they are irregularities is because the legislature said they should be done or not done; but the legislature was not content there. It went further and enacted a sweeping statute dealing with irregularities and providing that they shall not vitiate an election. Indeed, it is the most sweeping statute to which my attention has been directed.

I want to invite the attention of the Senate to such statute, and point out that the contestant in this case has not undertaken to comply with its requirements. If this contest were pending in a court in Alabama the pleadings would have been subject to a demurrer, and the evidence submitted would have required a prompt decision in favor of the contestee.

Section 546 of the Alabama Code provides:

> SEC. 546. When election not annulled: No malconduct, fraud, or corruption on the part of the inspector, clerk, marker, returning officer, board of supervisors, or other person, nor any offers to bribe, bribery, intimidation, or other malconduct which prevented a fair, free, and full exercise of the elective franchise, can annul or set aside any election unless thereby the person declared elected, and whose election is contested, be shown not to have received the highest number of legal votes, nor must any election contested under the provisions of this code be annulled or set aside because of illegal votes given to the person whose election is contested, unless it appears that the number of illegal votes given to such person, if taken from him, would reduce the number of votes given to him below the number of legal votes given to some other person for the same office. Nor must any election be annulled or set aside because of the rejection of legal votes unless it appears that such legal votes, if given to the person intended, would increase the number of his legal votes to or above the number of legal votes received by any other person for the same office.

In other words, under that provision of the code it is not sufficient for the contestant to charge that illegal votes were received or that legal voters were denied the right to vote. It is not sufficient for him to allege that fraud or malconduct transpired in the course of the election. He must allege and prove that if illegal votes cast are eliminated he would have a majority. He must show that except for malconduct on the part of election officers he would have been elected, that their misconduct brought about his defeat. That is the requirement of the statute, and the statute applies to the primary as well as to the general election in Alabama.

In this case, Mr. President, the evidence submitted wholly fails to show that had the irregularities of which complaint is made—and I confess there are many in the record—not transpired he would have been elected. He has wholly failed to show that if the illegal votes cast were deducted and eliminated he would have a majority. No such situation is established by the evidence. Under the code, and the Supreme Court of Alabama has construed it in several cases and has held on each occasion that the statute means exactly what it says, in order to prevail in a contest the contestant must allege and prove that except for these things he would have a majority of the votes cast and be entitled to the office.

Mr. President, the majority of the subcommittee and minority of the full committee gives full faith and credit, indeed emphasis, to every statute in Alabama requiring the folding of ballots, the use of booths, and so forth; but the minority of the full committee fails to give any force whatever to this statute enacted by the same legislature. Of course the legislature had a perfect right to say this shall be done and that shall be done, but a failure to do those things shall have this result. It had as much authority to say one thing as it did another.

So, Mr. President, it is my conviction that the contestant has failed to establish either his right to the seat or that the contestee is not entitled to it. When we view the case from any angle whatever the contestee has a majority of the votes cast in the general election. The only attack which could be made would be upon the validity of the primary. My view is, that regardless of the power of the Senate to review a primary—and that question is not involved here—and conceding for the moment the power of the Senate to review the primary, this primary was legal.

The committee was empowered to do what it did. The failure to raise these questions before the election foreclosed their consideration thereafter. The contestee has a plurality of the votes cast. The contestant has failed to show otherwise.

So, Mr. President, with high regard for both parties, growing out of an acquaintance with Senator Heflin for seven years and with Senator Bankhead for about two years, I have reached the fixed conviction that Senator Bankhead was elected and is entitled to the seat.

DEPOSITIONS IN WORLD WAR VETERANS' CASES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement recently entered into, the Chair lays before the Senate the bill S. 929, which will be proceeded with.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 929) relating to the taking of depositions in cases arising under section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I notice that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] are both absent, although I have notified them of the unanimous-consent agreement which was entered into this morning. In order that there may be no question about it, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Costigan	Jones	Shipstead
Austin	Couzens	Kean	Shortridge
Bailey	Cutting	La Follette	Smith
Bankhead	Dale	Lewis	Smoot
Barbour	Dickinson	Logan	Steiwer
Barkley	Dill	Long	Stephens
Bingham	Fess	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Black	Fletcher	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Blaine	Frazier	Metcalf	Townsend
Borah	Glenn	Moses	Tydings
Bratton	Goldsborough	Neely	Vandenberg
Brookhart	Gore	Norbeck	Wagner
Broussard	Hale	Norris	Walcott
Bulkley	Harrison	Nye	Walsh, Mass.
Bulow	Hastings	Oddie	Waterman
Byrnes	Hatfield	Patterson	Watson
Capper	Hayden	Pittman	Wheeler
Caraway	Hebert	Reed	White
Carey	Howell	Robinson, Ind.
Connally	Hull	Schall
Copeland	Johnson	Sheppard

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the pending bill, being the bill (S. 929) relating to the taking of depositions in cases arising under section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, in substance, provides that in cases between veterans of the World War and the Government arising from suits commenced for the recovery of war-risk insurance, when the Government undertakes to take depositions of absent witnesses who are more that a hundred miles from the place of holding court the Government must first make a showing before the court as to what it expects to show by the absent witnesses. Then if the proper showing be made, and the taking of the depositions is decided to be necessary, the Government must deposit $25 for the payment of an attorney's fee for the plaintiff in the suit.

This bill was introduced and referred to the Judiciary Committee. By that committee it was referred to a subcommittee. That subcommittee, of which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] was chairman, after due consideration, submitted a report to the full committee unanimously recommending the passage of the bill. The bill thereupon was reported to the Senate last February. It was on the calendar, and when reached on the calendar was about to be passed by unanimous consent, the amendment reported by the committee having been agreed to, when the point was raised by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] that the original act, of which the bill was an amendment, was considered and reported to the Senate by the Finance Committee, and, therefore, it was desired that the bill be referred to that committee in order that the records of the committee might be complete.

On a previous occasion, when I moved to discharge the Committee on Finance, I read to the Senate the colloquy which took place at that time, when an agreement was entered into by which if the friends of the bill consented that it should go to that committee it would be reported by a certain day, just a few days beyond. We were given to understand that there was no objection to the bill, but that the committee only desired its records complete, to show that an amendment to a law which it had originally considered and acted on was also referred to that committee. Thereupon the bill was referred to the Finance Committee. It was not, however, reported within the time agreed upon, but no objection was made on that ground. The bill was finally reported, and it was agreed by unanimous consent that it be taken up yesterday, but, of course, as we all know, that was an impossibility.

Mr. President, last February this bill was introduced; it would have been passed about six weeks ago, and now be on the statute books beyond doubt, if it had not been for the delay that has come about in the way I have indicated.

The Senator from Utah has submitted a written report on the bill, consisting almost entirely of a letter from Mr. Hines, Director of Veterans' Administration. I will show the Senate that the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania have not acquainted themselves with what the bill proposes to do, but have rather arbitrarily, I think, sought to get and succeeded in getting the bill referred to the Finance Committee, and then referred it to Mr. Hines, letting Mr. Hines suggest what changes should be made and taking his objections as valid objections to the bill. Let us see what those objections are. Let me call attention to one of them set forth in the letter of Mr. Hines, as follows:

> On the basis of our present load it is estimated some 50,000 depositions will be taken on behalf of the United States, so the expenditure required by the bill would total approximately $2,500,000.

I ask Senators to take their pencils now and multiply 50,000 cases by 25 and see how far this man is off in his mathematics. He is off just $1,250,000; that is all; he has just doubled the amount. If the Finance Committee is going to let Mr. Hines prepare its reports, it should secure the adoption of some measure giving Mr. Hines another assistant, somebody wh· has been through the eighth grade, at least, and who knows the multiplication table. What I have quoted is a sample.

Veterans who may be suing for money under a statute which we passed do not want to be dragged all over the United States in connection with the taking of depositions, as I shall show in a few minutes they are; but objection is made to the bill by Mr. Hines, who says, "Why, it will mean that notice will be given to the defendant of what we are going to show if, in order to get a deposition taken, we have to file an affidavit and state to what the witness is going to testify." Think of it! The great United States of America has a lawsuit with one of its veteran soldiers who is seeking to recover on an insurance policy which his Government gave to him under the law, and the Government, with its unlimited resources, says, "We do not want this procedure adopted for fear the veteran may find out what we are going to try to prove by the witness whose deposition we are going to take." Is that the right attitude for our Government to assume?

It is a case of one veteran against another. Mr. Hines is surrounded by veterans who evidently can not multiply by 25. veterans who are opposing the giving of notice to their fellow veterans for fear that the plaintiff in the case may get some idea as to what the witness is going to testify to. In litigation with its soldiers is our Government going to be so partial or set up such a defense that it is ashamed to lay the cards on the table face up? Is it ashamed to say to the soldier who is suing for recovery upon a policy of insurance what its witnesses are going to testify to? Yet that is solemnly made an objection here by the great Finance Committee of the Senate, although its members probably did not know it, because that is contained in Hines's letter, and Hines's letter constitutes the report.

Both the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania on prior occasions have said, "This bill is going to cost $2,500,000." They got the information from Mr. Hines undoubtedly, because I take it that both the Senators named know the multiplication table sufficiently well to multiply accurately by 25.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator, I think, is mistaken in his statement as to General Hines. The Senator has not read all that General Hines said. I do not want to interrupt the Senator now, but later I will call attention to the fact that the Senator has not correctly based his figures on the cases referred to by General Hines.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I will read from General Hines, then:

The proposed bill provides that in addition to the foregoing the Government shall pay an attorney's fee of $25 for each deposition taken. Under the practice of the administration to take the depositions of its doctors rather than for them to appear in court personally many depositions will be taken in each case.

Mr. SMOOT. Many depositions in each case, not one.

Mr. NORRIS. Who said one?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator did.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I did not. I am reading from Mr. Hines. I am reading it correctly, too, I think. If I am not, I desire to be corrected.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the Senator go on and read the letter.

Mr. NORRIS. I will have to ask the Senator to keep still. I can not go on when somebody is talking in the back corner of my ear.

Under the practice of the administration to take the depositions of its doctors rather than for them to appear in court personally many depositions will be taken in each case—

Mr. SMOOT. "In each case."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Hine's letter continues—and, therefore, to compel the Government to pay a fee of $25 in each case would result in large expenditure being made by the Government. Also, the proposed amendment would add to the amount to be received by the attorneys for a plaintiff.

On the basis of our present load it is estimated some 50,000 depositions will be taken—

Now, let the Senator from Utah read for a while. Mr. Hines says 50,000 depositions—not cases, but depositions, let me repeat. I think I have made myself plain—

50,000 depositions will be taken on behalf of the United States, so the expenditure required by the bill would total approximately $2,500,000.

Multiply 50,000 by 25 and see whether a mathematician is not needed in the office of Veterans' Administration.

Mr. President, I am going to show the Senate, I think, what is happening now under this law as it stands. I am going to show now, not imaginary cases, but actual cases from men who are acquainted with what happens in these cases.

I have here a letter written by Mr. G. E. Price. He is professor of law in the College of Law of the University of Nebraska. He has interested himself in these cases, not for money—most of his work is done free—and the insinuation in this letter of Hines's that it means a whole lot of money for attorneys will vanish into thin air when we realize what is actually happening now in our courts in cases where these veterans are plaintiffs.

Mr. Price says:

I have just received my copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 21, and I am writing you in reference to the debate on S. 929.

That is when we had the bill up before.

It appears to me from reading the debate that many features of the litigation in reference to the war-risk insurance are not understood. The letter of the administrator read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Senator SMOOT does not, in my opinion, correctly reflect the purposes of the bill or the true situation in reference to the veterans' litigation. Therefore I am writing you my observation and reaction on the debate for whatever purpose they may serve.

First, I want to take up the paragraph of the letter of the administrator in reference to the fees, and Senator REED's remarks appearing in the first column on page 6546.

It is stated in the administrator's letter that the attorneys usually receive a fee of $1,380 in each case. I do not know what the practice is in other districts, but I believe that it is practically the same as it is in the district of Nebraska. Here the attorneys are allowed only a percentage upon the amount that is recovered in the first payment—that is to say, a percentage upon the amount for which the judgment of the court is given. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that a court can not enter a judgment for the future payments. So if we are suing upon a $10,000 war-risk insurance policy that matured on the date of the soldier's discharge, say, June 10, 1919, we prove total and permanent disability from the date of his discharge to the date of trial, we recover $57.50 per month for each and every month from June 10, 1919, to the date of trial, and the attorneys are allowed by the district court here usually 10 per cent of that amount, and no more. If the policy was for a full $10,000, then the attorneys would recover as their fee approximately $875, and no more.

Senator REED, in his statement in reference to the administrator's letter, said that "These lawyers at present are getting something like $1,300 per case—a very liberal fee—and it is coming out of the United States Treasury." The Senator is in error in this statement as to the money coming out of the United States Treasury. The amount is deducted from the amount awarded the soldier by the judgment, and it comes out of the soldier's pay and not out of the United States Treasury.

Do not forget that. It is not the Federal Government that is paying the fee. It is paid by the soldier. The Federal Government probably is the cause of the soldier paying it to his attorney. Remember also that in probably ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it is a contingent fee. If the attorney gets no judgment, he does his work for nothing; and, as I shall show later on, it is difficult to get attorneys who have a general practice to take these cases. I have talked over the matter with Mr. Price. That is how he has gotten into this line of work. Other attorneys having general practice come to him—he is an expert on the law—and he usually takes the case and does the work without any fee, in order that he may help the veteran; and the Government does not pay him a cent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. All that the Senator says is true; and, in addition to that, the maximum the court can allow is 10 per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No more than that could be allowed under any circumstances; so that there could be no $1,300 fee allowed.

In the next place, I am sure the Senator will agree with me that many, many, many lawyers throughout the country who take these cases are happy to do the work connected with them, without any fee at all, to assist the veteran.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly. I presume half of the cases are cases of that kind. A lot of attorneys who are busy with their practice try to avoid these cases, too, because, as a matter of fact, they can not afford to take them on contingent fees and put in the time that is necessary to prepare for trial and try the cases.

Again, Mr. Price says:

Now, as to the liberality of the fee in these cases: Casually stated, $875 is a pretty good sum of money, particularly in these times of Mellon prosperity. This amount is not a net fee. I should like to state here parenthetically, Senator, that I am speaking only from my knowledge of conditions here in Nebraska. I do not know the conditions throughout the United States; but I have talked with attorneys from several points in the United States, and from what I learned from those attorneys, particularly those away from the large centers, they find about the same conditions as we do here. I will give you briefly the history of one case in which I was associated, to illustrate the amount of work and expense there is to trying one of these lawsuits.

Senators, listen to this. It is not a fairy tale. It is not an imaginary case. It is a real, actual case that actually happened, given by this man as a sample. Let us see what he says:

The suit was filed on May 29, 1929.

By the way, I want to pause here to say that one of the most highly respected men I ever knew is the man who is writing this letter. He is one of the most conscientious of men. He would not intentionally misstate anything. He would not intentionally do anything or say a word that would wrongfully influence anybody, either here or elsewhere.

Going back again to his letter, Mr. Price continues:

It was to recover the insurance due the soldier's estate from the date of his discharge from the Army to the date of his death, a period of approximately six years, and to recover for his beneficiary the insurance due from the date of his death to the date of trial, a period of approximately seven years. The wife was appointed the administratrix of his estate—

That is the first step. Lawyers know what that means.

The wife was appointed the administratrix of his estate for the purpose of bringing the suit.

In the first place, that is done in the probate court. It is not a difficult thing to do, but every lawyer knows that there is a good deal of work about it. It is necessary to go into court and make the application. It has to be published. It has to come up for hearing. The court then appoints an administrator or an administratrix, as it was in this case, and a bond must be given. Then they go into another court and have to set up all these facts—the insurance policy, the death of the soldier, and the appointment of the wife as administratrix. All of that has to be done before the machinery is started in the Federal court.

In this case, Mr. Price says:

Both his wife and mother claimed to be the beneficiary—the mother because she was designated in the original application for war-risk insurance; the wife because she claimed that she had been designated as beneficiary in the place and stead of the mother after the marriage. As between the mother and wife, it was a friendly contest. Nevertheless, it necessitated three parties plaintiff; first, the wife as administratrix; second, the wife as beneficiary; third, the mother as beneficiary. This necessitated, of course, two sets of attorneys, one to represent the administratrix and wife, and another to represent the mother.

Prior to the trial of this suit, the Government served notice on us to take depositions in Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kans. Another attorney and I went to Kansas City and took this first set of depositions. A little while later we were served with another notice to take another deposition in Kansas City. We went down and took that deposition. A little while later we were served with a notice to take a deposition in St. Joseph—

He does not say so, but he means, of course, St. Joseph, Mo.

And another one in Atchison. We went down and took those depositions. We were then served with notice of the taking of a deposition at St. Paul and another deposition at Los Angeles and another deposition to be taken at Palo Alto. Of course, it was impossible for us to make the trip to St. Paul and to Los Angeles and to Palo Alto, but we engaged attorneys at those places to represent us; and we paid the ones at Palo Alto and at Los Angeles $25 each, and the one at St. Paul $50, for representing us at the taking of the deposition. Our expenses in making the two trips to Kansas City and to St. Joseph and Atchison, not counting our time at all, were over $200.

The case was tried on June 4, 1931, a little more than two years after it had been filed. We were successful in this suit, and the combined judgment for the administratrix and for the beneficiary was $8,879.80. The court allowed an attorney's fee of 10 per cent, or $887.93, for the two sets of attorneys.

The Government appealed this case and the record has just now been filed in the circuit court of appeals. It was necessary, in order to get a proper bill of exceptions before the circuit court of appeals in this instance, to go through the record and to prepare more than a hundred pages of amendments to the Government's bill of exceptions. I don't know just what the cost of this was, but I think in the neighborhood of $65 or $75. We will now have the preparation of the brief on appeal and it will be necessary for one of us to go to St. Paul and to argue this case.

In addition to the time spent in the preparation of this case for trial, we spent actually nine days in court trying this lawsuit. If we are successful in having this judgment of the district court affirmed, we will receive a fee of $887.98, which will be divided equally between the attorneys. In one other case that was tried here we found when we went into court on the policy that instead of its being a $10,000 policy the soldier had only $2,000. At least that is what the records show. The soldier thought he had $10,000 and I believe he was sincere in his belief. If we are successful in that suit—and it will take just as much time as a $10,000 suit—the fee will be approximately $160.

Go back to the other suit that Mr. Price has narrated. Where can you find an attorney of any standing who will take the case for the money that is in it? Remember, he runs the risk at all times of getting nothing, losing his time, losing his expenses, and the money he put up for other attorneys to represent him. If it were not for the fact, as the Senator from Indiana has so well said, that these men are imbued with a patriotic spirit of helping some worthy soldier, or worthy soldier's widow, there would be nothing done, because no lawyer can afford to take such a case simply for the financial return that is involved, with the risk he has to assume.

Mr. Price further said:

One other suit in which I was interested we found to be on a $5,000 policy instead of a $10,000 policy. After collecting the evidence and getting it ready for trial the Government agreed that the judgment might be entered. The fee allowed in this case was $208, which was divided between two attorneys.

In another case which was tried here, the judgment for approximately $6,700 was rendered. The two attorneys in this case received a fee of $670 and no more. In another case which was tried here the judgment was for approximately a little more than $6,000. The court awarded the attorneys a fee of $500 in this case.

Now, as to the trial of these cases, I have tried many lawsuits in my life, and I had rather try two lawsuits of any nature whatever than to try one of these war-risk insurance cases. They are tedious to the extreme, and it necessitates the greatest amount of work that one can imagine in a lawsuit. As I state, I do not know what the experience throughout the United States generally is, but I do honestly and sincerely believe that there is no place in the United States where a lawyer can try more than a half dozen of these suits during the year, so they are not remunerative in any sense of the word. In fact, there are very few competent attorneys who will take these suits. If they take them at all, they do so merely for the sense of duty to secure the rights of the veterans and not because the suits are profitable; as a matter of fact, a competent attorney in a busy office and with the overhead that goes with a competent office could not handle these suits except at a loss.

I give you the above to correct the impression that this is a money-making proposition on the part of the lawyers.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In a case of that kind, after the veteran has finally secured a judgment, after a hard-fought legal battle, he gets only the insurance from the Government for which he has paid.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; he gets nothing else.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Nothing but what he has paid for in the past; and without the services of the lawyer, that particular veteran would never receive the insurance to which he is so justly entitled.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me almost too unreasonable to be true that under this law, administered mostly by the veterans themselves against their own comrades, there can happen what the record shows, and I have an abundance of other cases to cite. The Government attorneys will serve notice of the taking of depositions all over the United States, the plaintiff in the case perhaps a widow, without a dollar, without any money to put up to pay the attorney's fees, unable to raise a dollar, unable to borrow a dollar, without funds, and another veteran, representing the other side, the great Government of the United States, serves a notice on the attorneys from Nebraska to go to Los Angeles to take a deposition, to go to Richmond, Va., to Chicago, to Boston, all over the United States. They know those veterans can not follow them.

When this bill becomes a law—and I really believe it will—the taking of these depositions in most of the cases will absolutely cease, because, as is shown in this letter, if they will make an affidavit that they want to take the deposition of John Jones down at Kansas City, Mo., and state what they claim he will testify to, the other side can at once admit that he will testify to that, if they want to, and save the taking of the deposition. If the plaintiff in the case is notified as to what the facts are they are going to try to prove, he can save the taking of the deposition. Instead of adding to the expense of the Government, this bill, if put upon the statute books, will save literally millions of dollars, not always to the Government, but if not to the Government, then to the soldiers who are now trying to recover, or the widows or orphans of soldiers who are trying to recover upon these insurance policies. The money will be saved. Mr. Price shows in his letter that nine times out of ten, if the attorneys for the United States will comply with the law and disclose what they expect to prove, the parties can easily stipulate what the facts are. But the attorneys for the veterans dare not permit the depositions to be taken without somebody being present. Every lawyer knows why that is.

Mr. Price in his letter calls attention to this fact:

Now, as to the expense of $2,500,000 which the Veterans' Bureau claims will be added to the cost of administration, or cost of government by reason of this bill, I want to say:

Most of the depositions that are taken by the Government are the depositions of doctors who at some time or another usually several years back or shortly after the soldier's discharge have treated the veteran in some hospital or another. The deposition is primarily for the purpose of having the doctor read into the record a report that he made to the bureau, or to the hospital, or made to some place or another, upon the soldier's condition and treatment at the time that he treated him. Of course, however, in taking the deposition the attorney who represents the Government will bring in everything that is possible from this doctor, much of which is entirely incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant, and inadmissible to the case. The reports of the doctor are admissible. This has been settled by the circuit courts of appeals in a number of cases. A recent case of United States v. Smith, 55 Fed. (2) 141, at page 143, the court said:

"It has been held in numerous cases that reports of physical examination made by the Veterans' Bureau may be admitted in evidence in war-risk insurance cases, citing a number of cases."

They do not have to take the depositions; they can put the reports in evidence without taking the depositions. I can not for the life of me conceive how these veterans, drawing salaries from the Government of the United States, can, it seems almost intentionally, go out and make it difficult for their comrades to meet them in a fair, honest contest in a lawsuit to recover war-risk insurance.

Mr. Price says further:

Most of these doctors whose depositions are taken can add nothing to the report which they have already made, but in trying a lawsuit you simply can not take the chance of not being represented at the taking of a deposition, because if your objections to the evidence and to the matter that goes into the deposition are not made at the time of the taking of the deposition you are shut out from making those objections when the deposition is read into court, and one can not in justice to his client permit a deposition to be taken without having a representative there at the time the deposition is taken, at least for the purpose of preserving the record.

Now S. 929 becomes a law; it simply means that the majority of the depositions that are now being taken by the Government will be eliminated, because in their notice to take the deposition and their application to the court the Government will show what they intend to prove by these doctors, and such parts of it as are material to the case will be stipulated, and the Government will save the expense of taking these depositions. I do not know what the average cost of the deposition is, but I believe that I am conservative when I say that the average cost of taking these depositions is at least $20. Now, if there are 50,000 depositions to be taken, it means a saving to the Government of $1,000,000. I have just observed that the administrator states that the cost to the Government of paying the attorney for the plaintiff $25 for the taking of 50,000 depositions is $2,500,000. Unless my knowledge of mathematics is entirely wrong, the taking of 50,000 depositions, at $25 per deposition, would be $1,250,000 instead of $2,500,000. It seems that the bureau has made a mistake of exactly 100 per cent in their calculation. In the eight cases that I have been connected with in the district court here I would have stipulated to every single material fact that was included in the depositions.

Now, the argument might be advanced that, since the matters upon which the depositions are taken are mainly for the purpose of the introduction of the records, and that these are admissible whether a deposition is taken or not, there could be no objection to the Government taking the deposition and the claimant not being represented. I want to give you just one illustration of the value of being represented at the time of taking these depositions. I am now quoting from the transcript of record in the case of United States of America, appellant, v. Olga Kiner, administratrix, etc., et al., appellee. This appears on page 122 of the record and is the cross-examination of the witness at St. Paul whose deposition the Government took for the purpose of introducing into the record his examination and medical report upon this veteran, made somewhere in 1920 or 1921, and after having testified in answer to the questions by the attorney for the Government that the man was not permanently and totally disabled and that he could follow a gainful occupation the attorney who represented us at the taking of the deposition asked this question:

Let us get that situation; let us just see what this witness was testifying to.

After having testified in answer to the questions by the attorney for the Government that the man was not permanently and totally disabled and that he could follow a gainful occupation—

That was his testimony, and that would have been the end of it if there had been nobody there to cross-examine him. Listen to the record. Here is a verbatim copy. This question was asked on cross-examination by the veteran's attorney:

Question. What substantially gainful occupation, or occupations, in your opinion could he follow, and give your reasons, if any, why he could follow them.

Here is the answer from the distinguished expert, the doctor, the Government's witness:

Answer. I would say this man could follow farming. The reason I mention farming is, as a rule, dusty occupations increase shortness of breath, coughing, fast beating of pulse, where a man has bronchitis of any degree, that is why I would say he could follow farming; farming would not increase that.

The trouble is that this doctor is suffering in one way where the bureau here was suffering for the lack of mathematicians, for the lack of people who know the multiplication table. The trouble with this doctor is that he probably never saw a farm. He does not know that farming is one of the most dusty occupations on earth. He said this man was all right, that he was not injured, that he ought to follow farming, because he would have to keep out of the dust.

I would like to see that man out in the State of the Senator from Oregon. I would like to see him following a harrow after a field had been ploughed to put in wheat. You could see a cloud of dust 5 miles away, but you could not see the man, just a cloud of dust. I would like to see him driving a flock of sheep, as I have seen others, in the Walla Walla Valley, one of the richest farming sections in the world, where you could not see the sheep or the man driving them for dust, nothing but dust, a cloud of dust, a dust cloud raised by a wagon drawn by a team of horses, so that you could not see the horses or the wagon on account of the dust.

That is where this expert would put a man who he said would be all right if you kept him out of the dust. He would set him to farming. Take him anywhere and put him on a farm, put him on a straw stack, or behind a straw carrier when they are thrashing, put him out to cultivating corn, put him out to ploughing or to harrowing, and he will be so covered with dust that his own wife would not recognize him at night when he came in to supper. The cross-examination of this doctor, I take it, before a jury of any sense, exploded the whole defense, there was nothing left of it.

The letter from Mr. Price continues:

The letter from the bureau in another paragraph states that it has been held that in addition to the fee provided for in section 500, war-risk insurance act, attorney for the successful party may have his necessary expenses. If this is true, I never heard of it before. At any rate, if this is true, and I suppose it is, unless the bureau has made the same error in this that they did in the mathematical calculation, it would come from the soldier's insurance and is not paid by the Government. It merely decreases the amount that the veteran actually recovers. It, of course, would augment the attorney's fee, when he gets it.

In the letter from the bureau it is stated that where an attorney takes a case on a contingent fee he can easily secure attorneys to represent his client at the taking of the depositions, who will do so for a contingent fee. I do not know what the general experience in this line has been, or is. I doubt very much if, under the present practice, where an attorney is served by the Government with notice of taking a deposition in Chicago, and another one in Kansas City, and another one in Seattle, Wash., and another in Denver, Colo., that the attorney representing the claimant would be able on the few days' notice that he has to secure the services of a competent attorney to represent him at the taking of these depositions with the understanding that he would be paid a fee of $25 in event he was successful in the suit. In fairness to the attorney you would have to tell the attorney that it was a case of war-risk insurance, where the Government was the defendant, and that in all likelihood the case would be appealed if they were successful in securing the verdict, and that there could be no assurance that he would receive the $25 in less than two years. Further, if this procedure as suggested by the bureau would be followed, that is, of securing some one to represent the plaintiff at the place of the taking of the deposition upon a contingent fee of $25, and the Government takes a half dozen depositions, and it is very evident that they intend to take a number of depositions if they estimate the number at 50,000, and the attorney is suing upon a $10,000 policy, and recovers say $9,000, which is the maximum amount that would be recovered in the first payment, and is allowed the 10 per cent fee, or $890, his fee is very materially reduced. It is very plainly indicated in the letter from the bureau, that such an arrangement would come out of the attorney's fees and not a part of the expense which they say the attorney is entitled to in addition to his fee.

The letter from the bureau also states as follows:

"That part of the proposed bill which requires that reasonable opportunity has been afforded the opposite party to be present at the hearing of the application seems unnecessary, since it is not thought that any court would grant such application on an ex parte hearing."

I am unable to exactly understand this part of the letter. If he means that if the law is such that it requires an application to be made to the court for an order permitting the taking of the deposition, that it is unnecessary to also write into the law that proper notice must be given so that the opposite party may be present at the hearing, it seems to be mere quibbling. If he means by his statement that at the present time depositions are taken on an order of the court by application, they are not correctly stating the law.

The provision for taking depositions is provided for in title 28, section 639 of the United States Code. It is provided that depositions may be taken upon notice—that is, the party desiring to take the deposition merely gives the opposite side notice that he will take the deposition, and no application is made to the court at all. I do not understand this paragraph of the letter at all.

With reference to another paragraph of the letter, in which it states:

"That part of the proposed bill that requires an affidavit setting forth the fact intended to be established by such deposition is objectionable because it compels the Government to disclose in advance of the trial a part of its defense. In other words, it amounts to fishing."

That is a quotation from the letter of the Veterans' Administration. That is a part of the report made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]—afraid to let the veteran know what the Government expects to prove by some witness. In the first place, he does know. He knows what the issues are. He knows what would be material. He is afraid something would be put in the answers if he is not there to object, something that is not material, or something like the cross-examination that I read a moment ago that would absolutely overthrow the weight of the testimony or the opinion of the specialist.

The letter then continues:

I can not see the force or the logic of this paragraph of the letter. For this reason, if A, who is the attorney for the Government, serves notice on B, who is the attorney for the veteran, that he proposes to take the deposition of C, who lives in the city of D, such deposition to be taken on the 10th of the month, and the notice was served, say, on the 5th, which is usually the time that they give you to take the deposition, we will assume that B attends on the 10th and takes the deposition of C. He certainly then knows just what the Government has intended to prove by C. Suppose B can not attend the taking of the deposition of C at the city of D on the 10th of the month, and A takes the deposition on the 10th. Under the requirements of the United States Code, the deposition is sent under seal by the officer before whom it is taken to the clerk of the district court, where the deposition is to be used. After the deposition is received by the clerk, it may be opened and inspected by either side. So, B knows as soon as the deposition arrives at the clerk's office just what the Government intended to prove by C. Now, suppose S. 929 was a law. A would come into court with an application to take the deposition of C; in that application he would set up by affidavit the essential facts which he intended to prove by C. B would appear with A before the court; and if they could agree upon those facts and stipulate to them, the Government certainly has not been injured. The only difference between the two cases is that B knows before he leaves the city to take the deposition of C what the Government expects to prove by C, instead of ascertaining when they arrive at the city of D just what they expect to prove by C. I can not see that it is in any way at all to the detriment or to the disadvantage of the Government to lay before the court in the proper manner the facts which they expect to prove from these witnesses.

Now, if the witness to be examined is a doctor, upon the receipt of A's notice to take the deposition, B can most reasonably conclude that it is for the purpose of introducing into evidence an examination or a medical report on the claimant that was made by Doctor C at some time or another when he had the soldier under his observation. If A is required to set out in his application to the court for an order to take this deposition, he is not revealing to B any information that B is not entitled to, because the circuit court of appeals of the sixth circuit on November 11, 1931, in Third National Bank & Trust Co. v. the United States (53 Fed. (2d) 599) at page 600 said:

"The first error assigned relates to the overruling of plaintiff's motion for a rule directing the defendant to produce the records of the Veterans' Bureau pertaining to Stewart for inspection by plaintiff's counsel in advance of trial. The question is not important in this case, but, as it has been made in other cases in this jurisdiction, we deem it advisable to state what we think is the proper rule with reference to such motion."

The court then discussed this particular case and the provisions of section 456, title 38, of the United States Code, and on page 601 said:

"What we hold is that when suit has been filed and the record is in the possession of counsel for the Government, it is within the power of the court to compel its production for examination in advance of trial. If in such case the record is not in possession of counsel for the Government but is in the files of the bureau, it would work no hardship on the bureau to furnish the record to its counsel in order that it might be inspected by counsel for claimant. This would extend to the claimant an opportunity, which in many cases could not otherwise be had, to obtain the data necessary to a proper preparation of his case. We conclude, therefore, that plaintiff's motion should have been sustained, and the defendant required to produce the record for inspection by plaintiff's counsel."

I do not possibly see how it could be interpreted that S. 929 is fishing. Nor can I see how it is to the disadvantage or to the detriment of the Government to give the information that would be required by S. 929. The claimant is not receiving any information in advance of trial that he would not otherwise receive. If he attended that taking of the deposition, he certainly would be informed what the Government proved by the witness. If the witness is one whose evidence is already in the file, the attorney for the claimant has had the right to inspect that file in advance of trial under the decisions of the Third National Bank & Trust Co. v. The United States, and if the attorney has not had the file produced for his inspection by an order of the court, then it is his own fault.

My belief is that instead of being an additional expense to the Government, that S. 929, if it becomes a law will result in a considerable saving to the Government, for the reason that it will decrease the number of depositions that are to be taken by the Government, because most of the material matter, in fact practically all of the material matter of the depositions, especially of the doctors, can and will be stipulated to. Of course, there will be depositions to be taken to prove material things, such as for example, that the plaintiff has been working for a period of time, in such case it will be necessary to take the deposition of a witness, no question about that, but these suits present a situation somewhat different from the average lawsuit where a claimant is suing an insurance company. It is necessary to go back over a long period of years. Congress has extended the time of the filing of these suits presumably for the reason that there was a very chaotic condition existing after the men were discharged from the Army. A large majority of them did not know their rights under the war-risk insurance policies; they made no application for the benefits of the war-risk insurance policy. Then some of the soldiers for purely patriotic reasons made no claim upon the Government, either for insurance or for compensation. The right to sue upon these insurance policies at the present time is a right that has been given to these veterans by Congress. In giving the veterans this right Congress must have had in mind the conditions that existed after the discharge, and must have had in mind that the veterans had claims which the veterans were entitled to have adjudicated. The adjudications depended not upon a present condition where witnesses were available in the immediate community but conditions that have extended over a long period of years. When the veteran presents his case for adjudication he is met with the resources of this great Government seeking to defeat his claim. It is not a question of expediency on the part of the Government as it would be if the contest were against an insurance company. An insurance company would weigh the cost of the defense against the probable chances of success in defeating it, and in many instances would reach a compromise with the person. This is not the case with the Government, the Government will spend in defeating one lawsuit an amount greater than it would take to pay the lawsuit, and many of these cases, Senator, are not $10,000 cases at all, a large number of them are $5,000 cases, and there are several cases here in Lincoln where the amount involved is only $1,000 and $2,000. Now, since Congress has been liberal encugh to extend the time within which to bring these lawsuits, and in view of the fact that the Government has employed a large number of attorneys to defeat these suits, or rather to protect the interests of the Government, it seems that it is only fair to make provisions by law by which a large number of the depositions may be entirely eliminated, and in the proper cases to enable the claimant to properly present his case.

In conclusion it seems to me from reading the debate upon this bill that there is a misunderstanding as to the profit that there is in these cases, and a very serious misunderstanding as to the exact operations of S. 929. I am interested in the matter only for the purpose of seeing the veteran get what I honestly believe that he is entitled to. These men went into the Army during the World War at the command of the Government. Most of them did not have any idea at all of what the war was about or why. They bought this insurance and they paid for it. Congress has given them the right to have their claim under these insurance policies adjudicated. I believe that it is only fair to make provisions that they may properly present the case.

Cordially yours,

G. E. PRICE.

P. S.—Since dictating the above I have received your letter of March 22 asking for my analysis of the debate. I believe the above correctly represents my view of the debate. I want to add just a few matters in explanation of some of the things that I mentioned in my letter.

On page 5, where I estimated the average cost to the Government of taking the depositions to be $20. I had in mind only the stenographic charges; this does not take into consideration the cost to the Government of the attorneys taking the deposition.

The letter from the bureau stating that the fees were $1,380 assume a $10,000 policy and 10 per cent upon the entire 240 payments. This may be the rule in some of the district courts; however, even this figure is not a fair correct representation of the attorneys' fees. For example, in a suit upon a full $10,000 policy, if the immediate recovery was, say, $7,500, the attorneys would receive 10 per cent of this amount from the bureau, or $750. If the 10 per cent goes to the future payments, they would then receive $5.75 per month until the remaining $6,300 is paid; or, in other words, it would require a period of 10 years before the remaining $630 of the fee was paid.

The veterans in these cases recover only the actual face value of the policy—that is, $57.50 per month, or the pro rata amount of that. They do not recover any of the costs of the suit, such as filing fees and witnesses' fees. It is, of course, necessary in practically all of these cases to have some doctors as witnesses. The Supreme Court has held that a court can not add the costs to the judgment.

With reference to the doctors' reports being admissible in evidence, which I have referred to on page 8, the circuit court of appeals in a number of cases—and it is accepted as settled law—have held that these reports are admissible as official reports, and it does not require the evidence of the doctor who made the reports in order that they may be admitted. They may be taken from the file and properly identified as being part of the official records in the case of John Jones, and are then admitted. There is no need whatever to take a deposition in order to admit these records.

The letter from the bureau very strongly confirms what I have contended, that the Government intends to take a lot of depositions and put the claimants to a considerable expense. The letter stating that there are more than 50,000 depositions to be taken convinces me that the bureau is planning a great deal of work that is costing the Government a considerable sum of money which is entirely unnecessary, because all of the medical reports can be admitted by taking them right out of the file in the court room, properly identifying them, and admitting them as official reports. I can see no reason whatever for the Government taking all of these depositions, unless it is for the purpose of furnishing employment for some one.

You are no doubt familiar with the scheme of arrangement of the Veterans' Bureau, and that they have recently added a division termed the insurance legal division, or some name similar to that, which is under the charge of Mr. William Wolff Smith, and the attorneys of that division do nothing except devote their time to the defending of the war-risk insurance suits. I find no fault whatever for these attorneys to be extremely zealous in their efforts to protect the interests of the Government; and if in doing so in their judgment it is necessary to take the depositions of doctors for the purpose of introducing the reports of those doctors into evidence, rather than to introduce them directly from the files, as the courts have held they can be, then certainly they should not resist the giving of assistance to the claimants who are poor persons in order that they may have proper representation at the taking of the depositions.

I am certain that instead of adding to the Government expenses that S. 929 will very materially decrease the cost to the Government by eliminating the taking of a lot of unnecessary depositions to identify records that the courts have held require no further identification than that they are of the official records of the soldier.

G. E. P.

I have believed all the time, as I said, that when the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Utah really understood what will be the operation of the bill, they would withdraw all objection to it. No one knows better than the Senator from Pennsylvania what it means to take one of these cases through the courts on a contingent basis. He realizes, and probably it has been called to his attention many times, that busy attorneys can not afford to take these cases and that perhaps more than half of them are taken as acts of charity on the part of the lawyers who want to help the veterans whom they believe to be worthy.

I have another letter written to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], but he placed that in the RECORD at a prior session. It calls attention to just what happens in these lawsuits.

I have another letter from an attorney in Indiana who has tried a good many of these cases. In this letter he said:

I have read with considerable interest, in the March 21 number of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, of your attempt to discharge the Finance Committee in consideration of bill (S. 929). * * * We recently had a case in this district where the Government served notice on us on March 1, 1932, to take a set of depositions at Indianapolis on March 4, at 10 a. m., and at the same time served a notice on us to take another deposition at Cincinnati, on the same date at the same hour.

The committee has recommended several amendments. Some of them I can not understand. They strike out some language in the bill and then reinsert the same language further on. I have no objection to some of the amendments. I do object to the amendment proposing to strike out "$25" and insert "$15." The Senator from Pennsylvania will notice that it does not mean that $25 will necessarily have to be paid, but that only so much of it as may be necessary in the discretion of the court shall be available to the plaintiff. The bill provides that any part of such sum not required therefor shall be returned to the United States. The committee, by an amendment, proposes to strike out that language and reinsert identically the same language in another place. I do not understand just why that is done.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I had nothing to do with the preparation of the report. I am the last person in the world to undertake to explain it or defend it. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has been called away by an engagement from which he could not ask to be excused, and I think it would be best to let it go over until morning.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection, if the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has none.

Mr. JONES. What is the request?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that this matter go over until to-morrow. I have no objection, but I do not want to interfere with the appropriation bill of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I would like to see the Senator's bill disposed of this evening or as soon as possible.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I had hoped that we could dispose of it to-night. I entertain the view that whatever arrangement we enter into, the contest over the seat of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] will have the right of way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair would hold that to be a matter of high privilege and could be taken up at any time.

Mr. REED. I believe we can dispose of the matter to-night. Let us have the amendments stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendments of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 2, line 13, after the word "unless" to insert the words "if the court so orders in exceptional cases."

Mr. NORRIS. I have agreed not to object to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 2, line 15, to strike out "$25" and insert "$15."

Mr. NORRIS. I am opposed to that amendment.

Mr. REED. I am not going to insist on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 2, line 16, after the word "necessary," to insert "in the discretion of the court."

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 2, line 18, to strike out "deposition. Any part of such sum not required therefor shall be returned to the United States" and insert "deposition: Provided, That any part of such sum not required therefor shall be returned to the United States: Provided further, That whenever a judgment or decree shall be rendered against the Government in an action brought pursuant to this section, the amount expended under the provisions of this paragraph shall be deducted from the fees allowed the attorneys under section 500 of this act and returned to the United States."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am not inclined to insist on that amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that the amendment be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended is amended by inserting after the third paragraph thereof the following new paragraph:

"In any suit, action, or proceeding brought under the provisions of this section no deposition shall be taken at a greater distance from the place of trial than 100 miles without permission of the court being first had upon proper application and cause shown. No such permission shall be granted unless (1) the application is accompanied by an affidavit setting forth the fact intended to be established by such deposition, and (2) reasonable opportunity has been afforded the opposite party to be present at the hearing upon such application. Where the claimant is suing as a poor person pursuant to the act entitled 'An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court,' approved July 20, 1892, as amended, no such permission shall be granted upon application by the United States unless, if the court so orders in exceptional cases, there is deposited with the clerk of the trial court the sum of $25, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the discretion of the court, shall be available to the claimant for obtaining representation at the taking of such deposition. Any part of such sum not required therefor shall be returned to the United States. Reasonable notice of the name of the witness and the time and place of the taking of the deposition shall be given in writing to the claimant."

ALABAMA SENATORIAL CONTEST

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, while perhaps it is unnecessary as a parliamentary matter to make the request I am about to submit, I ask the unanimous-consent request that whenever we shall have disposed of routine morning business to-morrow, we proceed to the further consideration of the Alabama senatorial contest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

CLAIM OF MR. STELIO VASSILIADIS, FORMER VICE CONSUL OF SPAIN AT KIEV, RUSSIA (S. DOC. NO. 85)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I inclose herewith a report which the Acting Secretary of State has addressed to me in regard to a claim of Mr. Stelio Vassiliadis, former Vice Consul of Spain at Kiev, Russia, for expenditures made by him at that post from March 1, 1918, to the end of February, 1920, in representing the interests of the United States at that post in the absence of the American consul, Mr. Douglas Jenkins, who was obliged to depart on account of war conditions.

I recommend that an appropriation in the amount suggested by the Acting Secretary of State be authorized in order to reimburse Mr. Vassiliadis for the expenditures made by him during the above-mentioned period.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 21, 1932.

(Inclosures: Report of the Acting Secretary of State with inclosures.)

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BEERS

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is my sad duty to announce the death this afternoon of Representative EDWARD M. BEERS, of the eighteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania. I send to the desk the following resolutions and ask for their immediate consideration.

The resolutions (S. Res. 205) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. EDWARD M. BEERS, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of 10 Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Under the second resolution the President pro tempore appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], and the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER].

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 22, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 21, 1932

SECRETARIES IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

John K. Caldwell, of Kentucky, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1 and a consul general;

William C. Burdett, of Tennessee, now a Foreign Service officer of class 4 and a consul general; and Perry N. Jester, of Virginia, now a Foreign Service officer, unclassified, and a vice consul of career, to be also secretaries in the Diplomatic Service of the United States of America.

PROMOTION IN THE REGULAR ARMY

VETERINARY CORPS

To be first lieutenant

Second Lieut. Arvo Theodore Thompson, Veterinary Corps, from April 8, 1932.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 21, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Eternal God, who wert and art and evermore shall be, in Thine only begotten Son, we behold Thy heart throbbing from heaven to earth; we would listen to Thee in stillness of soul. Once more let us feel the sense of Thy sweet grace. Under all circumstances let forgiveness take the place of retaliation, sacrifice the place of indulgence, and union the place of rivalry. O may these virtues be the sovereign antidotes to the pains and the stings of life. In the promise and the power of a new day fill us with the love of country and with the enthusiasm of justice. O God, convince us with emphasis that supreme good fortune comes to those who lose themselves in some good, generous task; may we surrender ourselves to the interest and to the dignity of our labors. Our Father, lead the way. In the name of the Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, April 19, 1932, and Wednesday, April 20, 1932, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On April 15, 1932:

H. R. 483. An act to amend the act of March 2, 1897, authorizing the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River;

H. R. 8379. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Arrow Rock, Mo.;

H. R. 4515. An act extending the limit of time within which Parramore Post No. 57, American Legion, may construct its memorial building, and correcting street location.

On April 16, 1932:

H. R. 4390. An act for the relief of Melissa Isabel Fairchild; and

H. R. 132. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to erect one marker for the graves of 15 Confederate soldiers killed in action and buried in the La Fayette Cemetery at La Fayette, Ga., in lieu of separate markers as now authorized by law.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the testimony before the Ways and Means Committee this morning of General Dawes, president of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Reserving the right to object, will not this be printed in the hearings?

Mr. TREADWAY. It will be printed in the hearings, of course, but the circulation of the hearings is very limited. The statement is a very strong analysis, and it seems to me that the membership of the House should have the benefit of the testimony given by a man of such great authority as General Dawes, and have it before the membership of the House for consideration.

I would say further, Mr. Speaker, that I have consulted with the acting chairman of the committee as to whether he would approve of this, and he did.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, owing to the fact that the Members of the House will have access to the printed hearings, I will object.

MILITARY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the chairman of the committee, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs may be privileged to sit during the session of the House to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

GILBERT N. HAUGEN

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that certain members of the Agriculture Committee may have 15 minutes, out of order, to pay their respects to the ex-chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. HAUGEN, as this is his seventy-third birthday. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. I ask that the time be divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM].

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, if the United States ever adopts another national holiday, it should be April 21, the birthday of GILBERT NELSON HAUGEN, than whom no one has done more for agriculture, and it should be called agriculture day. [Applause.]

The blending of the heroic spirit of the vikings with the noble characteristics of our own American people must inevitably produce just such a splendid outstanding example of a real man as GILBERT NELSON HAUGEN, whose birthday we to-day celebrate.

No man has served so long continuously in the House of Representatives as has Chairman HAUGEN, as we affectionately call him. With the completion of the present term it will have been a continuous service of 34 years.

Chairman HAUGEN began his political career under those outstanding leaders, Allison and Henderson. He was a "dark horse" in the convention which first nominated him. The politicians are said to have remarked at that time, "Let the Norwegian come down for a time until the skies clear, then we shall send somebody else." But the people learned his worth and they have continued ever since to send him back. They know that he truly represents the people and not the "trick politicians."

The mere announcement of his presence in a community or that he is to speak to his constituents is all that is necessary to bring crowds of loyal friends and admirers to his support.

For 10 years I have been intimately associated with him as a member of the most important committee in the House of Representatives, namely, the Agriculture Committee. My room has been close to his, and not only I but members of my family have enjoyed almost daily contacts with him. He has been a guest in my home at my farm in New York State and has addressed my farmer friends and constituents in my home town upon matters of vital interest to them; needless to say, winning their admiration and respect. In short, I know Chairman HAUGEN well, both socially and politically; I know of his long hours of labor at his desk; I know of his unceasing toil in the cause of agriculture, by night and by day, giving himself unsparingly to that great cause. [Applause.]

Iowa may well boast of the contributions to the Nation's welfare of her sons and daughters, among them James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture from March 5, 1897, to March 4, 1913; Henry Cantwell Wallace, who, with his family, has written his name in literature as well as in constructive law in the agricultural cause; and E. T. Meredith, who has done his bit as well. Yet, surpassing them all is the sturdy, active figure of Chairman HAUGEN, as he is known to the Nation, but "Silver top with heart of gold," as he is known affectionately by the members of the great Agriculture Committee, over which he has presided and to which he was assigned in his first term in Congress.

It is worth while to stop for a moment on this, his birthday, to pay our tribute to a man who has served with such singleness of purpose and who has made such a contribution to agriculture, not alone within the United States but in the far-off possessions that are our responsibility.

Chairman HAUGEN, in the words of your viking ancestors, the House of Representatives on this your birthday says, "Skaal!" God bless you and prosper you and give you many more years amongst us, for we need the benefits of your wisdom, we need your company in these troublous times, and we need your leadership in the great cause of agriculture. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I think the House of Representatives is the greatest legislative body in the world. To have the privilege of serving as one of the directors here in the business of the greatest Nation in the world is a great honor, but to have served continuously for more years than any other man who was ever selected from anywhere under the flag is, indeed, a proud distinction. [Applause.] I do not believe that anyone could be chosen for anything like that period of time in any district in America unless he has honesty, integrity, and ability. A district may temporarily make a mistake, but the voters of the district would not make a mistake in the character of a man for 34 years in succession.

For a number of years it has been my privilege to serve under Mr. HAUGEN as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. Of course, he is a loyal party man and believes in the principles and policies of the party to which he belongs; yet I do not believe you will find any Member who has ever served under him during the period that he has served as chairman, whether he be Democratic or Republican, who will not say that he is fair, that he is just, that he is loyal to his committee, to the Congress, and to the American people. [Applause.] I do not believe he ever harmed anybody, and I know he never wronged anybody. He has the admiration and respect of all those who have served with him, and especially of those who have had the privilege of serving with him on the committee. It is, therefore, with pleasure that I add my words of appreciation to those of others who are to-day uttering a tribute to the former chairman of the Agriculture Committee. I join with them in wishing for him many, many happy returns of the day. [Applause.]

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, it is a personal privilege to add a few words to the splendid tributes that have just been paid to this fine associate and colleague of ours, the Hon. GILBERT N. HAUGEN. The few words that I shall speak will be in recognition not only of the splendid capacities and abilities which he has demonstrated for so many years as the head of this great committee in the House of Representatives but also of the fact that during that long period of time there has never been any question in the mind of anyone as to the attitude of GILBERT N. HAUGEN on any of the legislative propositions that particularly concern agriculture. He has been a firm friend, an earnest advocate, and an able champion of the various policies proposed through all these years for the benefit of agriculture. I think it is probably true that in the history of agriculture his name is attached to more measures having for their purpose the advancement and improvement of agriculture than can be claimed by any other single individual, and for that we do him honor this morning.

There is an additional tribute I want to voice that has not been noted by those preceding me. It has been my fortune to be in the congressional district represented so ably by our distinguished colleague. I think I have visited every county in that district. I assure the Members of the Congress, his associates here, that the same high regard, the same appreciation of all the excellent personal and public qualities that he possesses are likewise everywhere known and fully appreciated by his home folks. Wherever I went, in every community, I heard him spoken of with the same affectionate regard as we delight to speak of him here. I am pleased to bring this message in appreciation of the very unusual record made by our distinguished colleague, and join those who have preceded me in the wish, which I am sure voices the sentiment of every Member of this body, that he may be spared for many years to bring us all good cheer and be to us a continuing example of what ability, steadfast loyalty, and splendid integrity will earn for a man in the way of recognition among his fellow members in the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, with the many pressing questions confronting us in our efforts to wisely solve the complex situation in which we find our country to-day, in order to restore normal prosperity to every worthy and legitimate industry, I shall not detain the House at length. Yet I desire to avail myself of this opportunity to express my appreciation of the compliments paid me and of the many kindnesses and courtesies extended to me by the members of the committees with whom I have had the privilege to serve, as well as by the membership of the House. It is indeed an honor to be privileged to serve in this body composed of 435 men and women of honor, dignity, and integrity, pursuing their duty with fidelity and rectitude of purpose, dominated as they are by noble and lofty ideals and a firm determination to do justice to all, to maintain the dignified and honorable position which we hold as a nation in the world, and to promote the welfare and happiness of the people of our beloved Nation, with its grand and glorious Government and its splendid and magnificent institutions.

I am grateful beyond the power of words to express. I thank you one and all. [Applause, the Members rising.]

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 53]

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and two Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11452) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11452, the Navy Department appropriation bill, with Mr. FULLER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

May I say, in view of the fact that I desire to make a rather connected statement, I should prefer, during the time I am making the statement, not to be interrupted.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRITTEN. There seems to be some disagreement as to the time for general debate and the time still remaining for general debate. Because the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is out of the city, I was hopeful that to-day might be used in general debate and that the bill would not be read for amendment until to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has fixed two and one-half hours for general debate, and that can not be changed.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I submit that is not a parliamentary inquiry and I demand the regular order.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to propound a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRITTEN. When will the two and one-half hours general debate on this bill cease?

The CHAIRMAN. In two and one-half hours. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRITTEN. What became of the two and one-half hours day before yesterday?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

A TREATY NAVY—WHAT IT WILL COST TO BUILD AND WHAT IT WILL COST TO MAINTAIN

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, in his presentation address upon the naval appropriation bill in this Chamber day before yesterday, the chairman of the committee, Mr. AYRES, made so careful and complete an analysis of the provisions of the measure, and of the Naval Establishment of the United States that it would seem to be out of place for me to attempt to cover the same ground.

Many of the items in the bill as the House will proceed with its consideration under the 5-minute rule will require consideration and I shall reserve comment until that time that I may care to make upon them.

Upon different occasions when I have addressed the House of Representatives upon the Naval Establishment I have indicated my conviction that the size of our Navy should have direct relation to our national needs. Our national needs depend upon various factors that include the military and naval power of other nations. Separated as we are by great stretches of sea from the other most populous nations of the world, the land military strength of nations is to us of lesser importance than naval strength.

It is my sound conviction that unbridled sea or land power leads to suspicion and fear among world peoples and is provocative of international differences and war.

It was Lincoln who said that no man was ever good enough to be the master of another human being. It may be said with equal verity that no nation was ever good enough to be the master or the overlord of any other nation or of the world.

Not only does unbridled military or naval strength upon the part of one nation inspire competitive expansion in similar lines in other nations but it builds up certain groups that come to feel that military and naval establishments exist for their benefit; groups that draw upon these establishments until they reach the point where they appear to believe that these institutions exist for their special well-being, that there may be offices to fill, careers to attain, ships or munitions to fabricate, yards to be supplied with work, and profits to be made. The fact that interests such as these are always at the forefront in insisting upon greater and still greater naval and military establishments should be sufficient evidence to substantiate my point. Patriotism is not stronger among people who have personal axes to grind by following a certain course than is patriotism among our people generally. The citizens of the Republic love their country. They are willing to sacrifice in all ways, including life itself, that our country and our country's institutions may live. They, too, are interested in the problem of maintaining adequate military and naval establishments, but they are not willing, under the guise of national need, to make lavish appropriations to serve private ends.

Of course, I am prompt to recognize unselfishness and loyal devotion to country and to our institutions upon the part of many individuals and many organizations who talk of naval preparedness and think of it in terms that, in my judgment, go beyond the bounds of reasonable national needs. I respect and I honor all such citizens of the Republic.

During the years that have followed the World War, impressed as have been thoughtful people by the futility of that tragic event of history and believing that, through international understandings, causes for war may be eliminated largely, and mounting expenses of armaments and the wicked waste of human lives in unproductive military and naval careers may be reduced, world powers have held conference after conference, sounding out ways that it is hoped may lead toward world peace. Always these conferences have reached the conclusions that I have outlined, touching the futility of unbounded naval and military establishments.

Most practical of all the conferences were the Washington Naval Limitation Conference of 1921–22 and the London Conference of 1930. These conferences resulted in treaties fixing the number of craft and the maximum and individual tonnage and gun limitations in all types of military ships to which the three foremost sea powers of the world have agreed—that is, the United States, Great Britain, and Japan—and to which France and Italy have subscribed in part. Remembering the objects sought by these conferences, it is perfectly clear that the treaties resulting therefrom were intended to be limitations and not mandates to build. They were intended to be stabilizing influences that would permit nations to modify and shape their own individual naval programs according to national needs with the distinct understanding and assurance that the other nations that had subscribed to the treaties would not exceed the bounds fixed by the terms of the treaties.

Should national needs require that the United States build her Navy up to the limitations fixed in the treaties and maintain her Navy at such figure, the people of the United States are quite ready to make whatever sacrifices may be required to meet this national obligation.

It is my sincere and definite conviction that to-day there are no national needs that require any such program; that moderation upon the part of the United States will encourage moderation upon the part of other nations that are parties to the treaty; that world conditions at this time are such that the people of the United States may proceed with moderation and through this course omit the expenditure of many hundreds of millions of dollars upon their Naval Establishment and particularly at a time when the people of our country are going through the valley of economic depression and when they should be spared to the extent possible every burden that must not necessarily be imposed.

The Navy of the United States at the time of the Washington and London conferences was not built up to the maximum strength measured by tonnage or gun power in all of the categories of ships permitted under the treaties. The same is true of the navies of the other signatory powers.

Consider first what it would cost the United States to build up to the tonnage and power fixed by these treaties. The London treaty rounds out the negotiations undertaken in the Washington conference. Whereas the Washington conference fixed maximum tonnage limitations only in capital ships and aircraft carriers, the London treaty fixes limitation in cruisers, destroyers, and submarines. It provided a program of construction that may be carried forward in the various types of craft up to December 31, 1936.

COST TO BUILD UP TO TREATY AUTHORIZATION

I am going to ask the House to consider what the cost would be to the United States to build up to the authorization of the treaties and up to the time limit within which this work may be done.

The total tonnage limitations imposed upon the United States, Great Britain, and Japan are as follows:

	Tons
The United States[1]	1,123,700
Great Britain	1,151,450
Japan	717,170

This tonnage includes for each of the powers, battleships, aircraft carriers, cruisers, destroyers, and submarines.

In battleships the United States is permitted 462,400 tons; in aircraft carriers 135,000 tons; in cruisers, all kinds, 323,500 tons; in destroyers 150,000 tons; in submarines 52,700 tons.

The several nations are built up to their tonnage limitations in battleships. Modernization, however, of these craft within certain bounds is permitted and for the purpose of modernization the Congress has already authorized the expenditure of $30,000,000.

AIRCRAFT CARRIERS

Under the treaty the United States is permitted 135,000 tons of aircraft carriers. We have three carriers to-day, with a total tonnage of 76,286 tons, of which the Langley is an experimental ship and may be replaced. The amount of aircraft-carrier tonnage that may be built under the treaty is thus 69,000 tons. There is now being built one carrier, the Ranger, of 13,800 tons, where the limit of cost has been fixed at $19,000,000. The remaining 55,200 tons of aircraft carriers, the department estimates, will cost from $1,500 to $1,700 per ton, depending upon the size of the ship. Since we do not know how many carriers would be preferred of the small type and how many of the larger type, I suggest that for ready calculation we take the average cost per ton of $1,600 as our cost measure; thus for the remaining 55,200 tons of aircraft carriers the construction cost would be $88,320,000. Add to this $19,000,000 for the Ranger and it will appear that the total cost to the United States of authorized aircraft construction will be $107,320,000.

CRUISER TONNAGE

The treaty provides for two types of cruisers, cruisers carrying guns of more than 6.1-inch caliber and spoken of as 10,000-ton, 8-inch cruisers, and cruisers of 6.1-inch guns or less. Of the former, the 10,000-ton cruiser, the United States was allowed 180,000 tons (A), of which on April 22, 1930 (the date of the signing of the treaty), she had on hand 20,000 tons (two cruisers) plus 110,000 tons (11 cruisers) building; and an additional 50,000 tons authorized. Of the cruisers carrying 6.1-inch guns, the United States was allowed 143,500 tons, of which she had on hand April 22, 1930, 70,500 tons (B).

(Tonnage A and B are interchangeable with British tonnage in these types.)

It thus appears that under the treaty the United States may lay down 123,000 tons additional of both large—50,000 tons—and small—73,000 tons—cruisers. Three of the larger cruisers, however, may not be completed until 1936, 1937, and 1938, respectively. Furthermore, the treaty provides that one-fourth—80,875 tons—of the total cruiser tonnage—323,500 tons—may be equipped with landing decks for aircraft. Estimates for cruiser construction are less than they were last year by possibly 10 per cent.

Translated into money cost, the carrying to completion of cruisers under the treaty allowance means an expenditure of roundly $269,000,000.

DESTROYERS

The destroyer life under the treaty is fixed at 16 years, thus the entire destroyer tonnage of the United States may be replaced—150,000 tons. This year the estimated cost per ton is somewhat above $2,500, a figure considerably less than the estimates that were made one year ago by the Navy Department. At this figure the building cost of 150,000 tons would be $375,000,000.

SUBMARINES

Of submarines, the United States was allowed 52,700 tons, of which, through replacement under the treaty, she may build 29,750 tons. Allowing for work that had been done up to April 22, 1930, upon the submarines V–5, V–6, and V–7—7,010 tons—the balance chargeable to these three craft is $6,540,800. There would be 22,740 tons of additional new craft to be built. This, figured at $4,000 a ton, would cost $90,960,000. The total new submarine investment would thus be $97,500,800.

AUXILIARIES, MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS

In figuring the cost of construction of certain ships money was omitted for outfits for some of the earlier craft that have been completed since the London conference or that are under construction. This item will approximate $5,877,000.

Were we to go forward with a program for completion of a treaty navy by December 31, 1936 we should need to expand our shore establishments. Definite figures are not available, but I believe that an initial investment of $20,000,000 would be required to which would be added annual increments aggregating $30,000,000 more or a total of $50,000,000. Upon the completion of craft that would be placed in commission, at once a very definite toll would commence to be levied for repair and upkeep of hull, machinery, equipage, ordnance, and aircraft. This item may be estimated at approximately $12,421,000.

For fuel and oil for the additional craft there probably would be required not less than $5,000,000. There would also need to be additional officers and men. These would be added progressively and to meet the cost for this item appropriations would be required that would approximate $47,280,940. To the foregoing an indefinite item would need to be added for auxiliary craft, officers and men ashore, civilian personnel, housing accommodations, and aircraft expansion that would probably demand not less than $10,000,000.

The grand total that would be required to bring the Navy Establishment of the United States up to the tonnage, gun power, and operation status permitted by the Washington and London treaties during the period between April 22, 1930, which was the date the London treaty was signed by the conferees, and December 31, 1936, would thus be approximately $1,009,000,000. Toward this program we have made appropriations up to July 1, 1932, of about $100,000,000, which would leave $909,000,000 to be appropriated during the next four and one-half years, or at the rate of slightly more than $200,000,000 a year.

What I have said touching expenses of bringing the Navy of the United States up to the authorization permitted in the London treaty is upon the basis of completion within the time permitted by the treaty.

Bills have been introduced and are pending in the Congress providing for a program in general along this line. Another bill has been introduced and is pending before the Naval Affairs Committee of the House that goes part way. It is known as the Vinson bill. It is widely discussed as a bill to carry out the provisions of the London treaty. Its estimated cost is about $700,000,000. It falls short, however, of providing for carrying out the provisions of the London treaty in respect to tonnage and in respect to time. It makes a spread of construction over a period of 10 years instead of a period limited by December 31, 1936.

[1] Alternately British cruiser types and tonnage may be substituted.

ANNUAL COST OF MAINTAINING TREATY NAVY

Suppose, however, we were to assume that either within the time fixed by the London treaty, December 31, 1936, or within a period of several years thereafter the United States were to find herself built up to the terms permitted by the Washington and London treaties, may we consider what this annual cost would be? I am assuming that if we were to build to the terms of the treaties we would permit our Navy to stabilize along those lines in craft, officers and men, and shore establishments necessary to carry forward such a program.

REPLACEMENT

One of the major factors to consider would be the replacement of the various ships of the different types of the Navy. For sound economic reasons any replacement program should be worked out upon the basis of an even load so that appropriations would not fluctuate from year to year and so that building programs in the various Government and private navy yards would remain steady from the standpoint of highest efficiency of the welfare of men employed and of the attitude of other countries toward the United States which might be disturbed by a sudden modification of building programs that might seem to be of menacing character. With this thought may we consider a possible replacement program.

That the Members of the House may have a graphic picture of the program, I shall insert in my remarks at this point a table prepared by me that will show the different types of craft with latest estimates touching life of craft and unit replacement cost.

Table showing types of craft, estimated life, and replacement cost of a treaty navy (United States)

Life of ship, years	Type	Tons	Units, replacement costs	Total replacement cost	Amount replacement cost
30	Battleships	462,400	15 battleships, at $35,000,000.	$525,000,000	$17,500,000
20	Aircraft carriers	135,000	Average $1,600 per ton.	216,000,000	10,800,000

Last year I prepared a study of the replacement cost of a treaty navy upon figures that were available at that time, and with which the present analysis is only slightly at variance.

In the table a year ago I gave the estimated life of the battleship as 20 years. This is in accordance with the Washington treaty, though the Chief of Naval Operations, in his testimony before our committee a few weeks ago, stated that, in his judgment, we could probably use 30 years on account of improvements and modernization that we have made. If we are to maintain battleships, and all nations could agree upon an arbitrary age limit of 30 years, the annual replacement cost could be reduced.

One year ago I estimated the replacement cost of aircraft carriers at $1,500 a ton. The present estimated cost is from $1,500 to $1,700 per ton, and I have taken the mean average of $1,600 per ton as possibly fair in lieu of $1,500 that I used one year ago.

One year ago I estimated the cruiser life at 16 years; but as most of our cruisers, however, will have been built under the terms of the London treaty, a life of 20 years has been applied.

The annual replacement cost will be somewhat less as to destroyers. The replacement unit cost per ton a year ago was $2,800. It is now believed that this figure may be reduced to $2,500.

For auxiliary craft, I have increased the allowances considerably above the figures of one year ago upon the basis of more recent estimates by the Navy Department.

It thus appears that the annual replacement cost of the Naval Establishment of the United States upon the basis of the London treaty would be $115,449,884 annually. The Chief of Naval Operations, Admiral Pratt, believes that this figure can be brought down to $100,000,000 annually, and so I shall use that figure. Replacement cost, however is only one of the factors; the larger factor is maintenance.

OPERATION COSTS

The Chief of Naval Operations prepared for our committee a table that it was estimated would show the operation and maintenance cost of a treaty navy. This item includes pay for officers and men, fuel and supplies, overhaul and repairs, the maintenance of shore stations, and all those sundry items that necessarily enter into the cost of upkeep of any great establishment.

1. The figures shown under plans A, B, and C indicate the cost to maintain and operate the treaty navy, when built, and are exclusive of the cost for new or replacement construction.

2. Under plan A the selected operating strength is maintained in full commission. The remaining combatant ships are maintained in reserve commission and provision is made for rotating all combatant ships in full commission. Navy-yard overhauls are accomplished during the time in reserve commission.

3. Under plan B the selected operating strength is maintained by placing additional combatant ships in full commission in order to provide for navy-yard overhauls. The remaining combatant ships are placed out of commission.

4. Plan C shows the cost to maintain and operate the full treaty navy.

5. Under each plan Column I shows the cost for an allowance or personnel the same as that assigned ships in 1932. Column II shows the cost for an allowance of personnel equal to 90 per cent of complement and Column III shows the cost for an allowance of personnel equal to the complement. In each column the allowance of personnel for vessels in reserve and reduced commission is constant.

6. Officers and enlisted men required to maintain and operate the treaty navy under the three plans of reference (A) are as follows:

PLAN A

	1932 allowances I	90 per cent II	100 per cent III
Line	6,415	6,415	6,415
Staff	2,088	2,088	2,088
Warrant	1,610	1,610	1,610

PLAN B

	1932 allowances I	90 per cent II	100 per cent III
Line	6,524	6,524	6,524
Staff	2,086	2,086	2,086
Warrant	1,512	1,512	1,512
Enlisted	92,559	94,509	104,388

PLAN C

Line	8,719	8,719	8,719
Staff	2,441	2,441	2,441
Warrant	1,923	1,923	1,923
Enlisted	119,869	122,030	135,492

It will be noted from the table that alternate plans have been proposed. The three plans A, B, and C call for a completed Navy from the standpoint of craft built. Plans A and B, however, contemplate holding in reserve a limited number of craft of the different types under what has been called a rotating plan of operation. Plan C calls for the maintenance of all ships in commission.

It will be noted that the minimum plan for maintaining a full treaty navy with the rotation of vessels in full and reserve commission and with the minimum allowance of personnel is $356,794,036 and maintenance of the treaty navy fully manned is $438,980,990. If then we were to add the replacement cost of maintaining a treaty navy, $100,000,000, to the operating cost, we would have as the minimum maintenance cost $456,794,036 per annum, and under plan C a possible cost of $538,980,990.

Probably also it should be said that in figuring the replacement cost under present plans account is not taken in considerable degree of such items as reserve parts, spare planes, and ammunition. As Admiral Pratt told the committee, the ships would be "bare to the bone, with armament, machinery and hull, plus a complete crew, and plus complete equipment, but with no spares, no extra planes, and so forth."

I have given the House the picture of the cost of bringing our Navy up to the terms of the London treaty and approximately what it will cost for annual maintenance to sustain such a Navy because it is fair that the people of the United States be advised as to what they are doing when they engage in any project.

It is my judgment, as Members of the House know, that there is no occasion for building up to the treaty navy or for maintaining such a navy; particularly do I emphasize the thought that now is not the time to inaugurate any such program.

There is no world condition that in my judgment threatens the United States in such manner as to justify such a course.

There is being held at this time a conference in Geneva which is representative of all the great powers, looking to the reduction of the military and naval burdens of the world. Any program upon the part of the United States looking to the expansion of our naval or military establishments would be disturbing to the conference.

Under the terms of the London treaty another conference will be held for the purpose of determining whether or not reductions may be made in naval establishments.

Under the terms of the Versailles treaty the nations of the world are committed to the policy of reduction of naval and military establishments.

Great agencies are at work through the League of Nations and through the Paris peace pact seeking ways by which free understandings may be reached among nations that will permit the carrying out of the declared purposes of the Versailles treaty.

Finally from an immediately practical standpoint the nations of the world will be in better shape to reduce their naval establishments if they do not find themselves built to the limit when the next naval armaments conference may convene.

Were they built to the limit then any reduction would mean the scrapping of new ships; it would mean the demolition of yards and plants; it would mean the decommissioning of officers and the elimination of men, and all of these factors would produce a terrific campaign against reduction by propagandists, who, we may assume, while acting in good faith, would be blinded by self-interest of individuals, or communities, or particular states, or nations.

The way toward peace includes moderation to the last degree possible consistent with national defense and the finest teamwork upon the part of world powers touching limitations upon all activities that threaten or disturb the peace of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Have we been spending any such amount as this in the past?

Mr. FRENCH. We have been spending about three-quarters of that amount.

Mr. WHITE. Then is it a correct inference to draw that this conference has resulted in a demand for a greater Navy rather than a smaller one?

Mr. FRENCH. It would be a correct inference if we were to consider the treaties as mandates to build up, but I do not regard the treaties as mandates.

Mr. WHITE. What are the other powers doing?

Mr. FRENCH. Great Britain is moderate in her program. Japan feels that conditions are such in the Orient that she must for the present at least carry on rather a full program of building.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself two additional minutes.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. HORR. What is it that causes Japan on the Pacific coast to feel that a substantial navy is necessary? Is there any danger of war?

Mr. FRENCH. Of course, the gentleman is familiar with the situation in the Orient.

Mr. HORR. And on the Pacific coast?

Mr. FRENCH. Undoubtedly it is because of that situation that Japan has felt justified in carrying forward her program.

Mr. HORR. The gentleman himself comes from the Pacific coast. Does he not know that the Pacific coast to-day feels the need of the protection of the entire Navy?

Mr. FRENCH. Of course the Pacific coast is loyal to our Navy and feels the need of a Navy, but for the most part the propaganda that is coming to me from the Pacific coast for an ever-expanding Navy is not from the people generally in country, village, and cities on account of fear of imminent danger, but for the most part from people in areas and communities, such as the gentleman's own, that are interested in shipbuilding and for that reason seem to see all kinds of dangers unless building programs be carried on. It is the same in all shipbuilding areas; national defense seems only secured by keeping large pay rolls on construction work.

Mr. HORR. I take it then that the gentleman would like to see those pay rolls destroyed?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, the gentleman represents one of our finest navy yards, but may I say I should like to see every navy yard limited only to the fabrication of materials necessary to the maintenance of the national defense of the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER] such time as he may desire to use.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have requested this time for the purpose of calling the attention of the members of the committee, especially those of you representing Southern States, to a speech I made about a week ago, wherein I called your attention to the intention of the Secretary of the Treasury, of putting into execution the antidumping act by placing a duty on the importation of sulphate of ammonia. I am going to request the Clerk to read a short letter which I received from Mr. Eble, Commissioner of Customs, for your information, with the hope that you will join with me in attending these hearings for the purpose of protesting the levying of additional taxes on the already overburdened taxpayers of the South.

Without objection, the Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CUSTOMS,
Washington, April 19, 1932.

Hon. H. P. FULMER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FULMER: Please refer to previous correspondence relating to the case now pending before the Treasury Department in connection with the alleged dumping of ammonium sulphate from various foreign countries.

This is to notify you that a hearing will be accorded those opposed to the issuance of a finding of dumping, in the office of the Under Secretary of the Treasury on Friday, April 22, at 10 a. m.

You and others who are opposed to the issuance of a finding of dumping against ammonium sulphate are invited to attend the hearing to present your views and any evidence you may care to submit in support thereof.

Very truly yours,

F. X. A. EBLE, Commissioner.

Mr. FULMER. Perhaps this will be your only opportunity to enter a protest against this very unfair proposal on the part of the Treasurer of the United States, who is simply carrying out a request on the part of the manufacturers of sulphate of ammonia in the United States. Sulphate of ammonia is a by-product of the steel industry which contains about 25 per cent ammonia. The farmers of the South are using this fertilizer instead of nitrate of soda, because it is so much cheaper and contains about 7 per cent more ammonia than nitrate of soda. It appears to me that the administration in power, as well as the Congress, is representing during this session what is known as a "merry-go-round."

Some time ago we voted $200,000,000 to be loaned to farmers for the purpose of buying fertilizer and conducting their farming operations. Now, the Government proposes to add a $5 tax per ton on sulphate of ammonia and take at least that much of these funds back from the farmer. I am sure you will agree with me that it will be impossible to rehabilitate agriculture by such unfair methods as proposed in this instance.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Committee on Military Affairs has just completed its work in connection with the leasing of the Muscle Shoals plant, and I am interested in the question of ammonium sulphate. Do I understand there is an embargo or threatened embargo on Chilean nitrates to be imported into this country which would result in causing the farmers to pay more for their natural fertilizers?

Mr. FULMER. In answer to the gentleman's question, I will state that this proposed tax is to be placed on sulphate of ammonia and not nitrate of soda. I will state also that the nitrate of soda agencies in this country have been able to control the importation of Chilean nitrate, thereby being able to fix and control the price, which has been very unreasonable. In the case of sulphate of ammonia 12 or 15 months ago, the agencies handling sulphate of ammonia manufactured in this country tried to form a combination with Germany and other importers in line with the nitrate of soda combination so as to be able to accomplish the same thing; but Germany, who is the largest importer of sulphate of ammonia, would not stand hitched. In order to give you some idea as to the difference in price of nitrate of soda, which is controlled by this trust, and that of sulphate of ammonia during this spring, will state that nitrate of soda has been selling for about $35 per ton, while sulphate of ammonia, with 7 per cent more ammonia, is selling for about $22 per ton. This move to tax sulphate of ammonia is simply another scheme whereby they will be able to add the amount of tax with a profit, which would be in line with the nitrate combination. I am going to give you some figures showing the tonnage of imports, exports, and production of sulphate of ammonia in this country.

Ammonium sulphate: Imports entered for consumption in the United States

Calendar year	Quantity	Value
1918	2,993	$425,881
1924	6,000	342,000
1930	34,964	1,207,623

Ammonium sulphate: Domestic exports from the United States

Calendar year	Quantity	Value	Value per ton
	Long tons
1923	153,677	$11,117,726.00	$72.33
1926	174,084	9,456,154.00	54.26
1929	144,761		43.49
1931 (8 months)	56,927	1,919,147.00	33.71

Production sulphate ammonium in United States

Calendar year:	Quantity
1929	664,426
1930	599,071

For further information in connection with the production of 1929 and 1930 I quote the following paragraph received from the Department of Commerce:

Ammonium sulphate is obtained in the United States chiefly as a by-product in the distillation of coal. The Bureau of Mines report, Coke and By-Products Tables, 1930, shows production of 599,071 long tons in 1930. This compares with 664,426 long tons in 1929, the decrease being accounted for by reduced activities in the steel industry. A copy of the 1930 report of the Bureau of Mines is inclosed. In addition to the output reported by coke-oven operators there is a relatively small production by retort coal-gas plants and chemical manufacturers. In the absence of accurate official statistics the estimated output from these sources is placed at 6,000 to 7,000 tons.

You will note from the information given by the Department of Commerce that the decrease in tonnage for the year 1930 in comparison with 1929 was brought about on account of reduced activities in the steel industry. The following figures will give you the tonnage of imports, exports, and the production in the United States:

Importation sulphate of ammonia

	Long tons
First 2 months of 1931	18,662
First 2 months of 1932	39,419

Exportation sulphate of ammonia

	Long tons
First 2 months of 1931	24,542
First 2 months of 1932	9,962

It would seem that the production during the first two months of 1932 compared with the first two months of 1931 is 32 per cent decrease in the United States.

Tonnage of coal changed in by-products ovens

	Tons
First 2 months 1931	8,600,000
First 2 months 1932	5,900,000

Suppose ton of coal produced 23.4 pounds of ammonia.

Sulphate of ammonia

	Short tons
First 2 months 1931	100,786
First 2 months 1932	69,492

Reduction of 30 per cent.

I am also going to quote you the prices on this product for the years 1918, 1923, 1926, 1929, and for the month of August, 1931:

Ammonium sulphate, average wholesale price

[F. A. S., spot, per ton, New York]

Calendar year:	Value per ton
1918	$133.40
1923	70.56
1926	52.56
1929	44.20
August, 1931	20.00

I am inserting herewith some correspondence with the Treasury Department on this subject which may be of interest:

ORANGEBURG, S. C., August 19, 1931.

Mr. OGDEN MILLS,
Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MILLS: I have a constituent requesting me to ascertain if your department or the department that deals with such matters has been requested any time in the recent past to put into effect the antidumping act against the importation of sulphate of ammonia. It is my understanding that the production of sulphate of ammonia in the United States has been increased very rapidly in the last few years. My constituent understands that because of this those who manufacture or handle sulphate of ammonia have been making an effort to shut off the importation of this product.

Thanking you for past favors and for your prompt attention to this matter, I am

Sincerely yours,

H. P. FULMER,
Member of Congress.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, August 28, 1931.

Hon. H. P. FULMER,
Orangeburg, S. C.

MY DEAR MR. FULMER: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of August 19, 1931, addressed to the Under Secretary of the Treasury and referred to me for reply regarding sulphate of ammonia.

The Bureau of Customs is now conducting an investigation for the purpose of establishing whether foreign ammonium sulphate is being dumped in the United States. The investigation is being made upon the complaint of American producers of the commodity in question.

Inclosed is a copy of the antidumping act, 1921, from which it will be observed that where merchandise is imported into the United States at prices less than its foreign market value, with accompanying injury to the American industry, the Secretary of the Treasury is required to issue a finding of dumping. Upon the issuance of a finding of dumping the merchandise affected thereby, including that upon which appraisements have been withheld, is subject to the special dumping duties provided by section 202 of the antidumping act. There is no provision in the antidumping act authorizing an embargo against merchandise which is affected by dumping.

Very truly yours,

S. LOWMAN,
Assistant Secretary.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 7, 1932.

Mr. SEYMOUR LOWMAN,
Assistant Secretary Department of Treasury,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LOWMAN: I shall appreciate it very much if you will give me any information you have in connection with your investigation on the request of manufacturers of sulphate of ammonia, wherein they requested your department to put into execution the antidumping act by placing a duty on the importation of foreign sulphate of ammonia. As stated to you previously, I want to vigorously protest the placing of a duty on this product at this time which would be an added expense to millions of farmers who are waging a strenuous fight for their existence under the depressed condition now existing.

If it is the intention of your department, after having made an investigation, to put into execution the antidumping act, I want to ask that I be given a chance to be heard in opposition to same.

Sincerely yours,

H. P. FULMER, M. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 12, 1932.

Hon. H. P. FULMER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FULMER: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of January 7, 1932, requesting information as to the status of the investigation now pending in this department with reference to the alleged dumping of foreign sulphate of ammonia.

The investigation in this case has now reached the stage where it is believed that it will be concluded in the near future, and at this time I wish to reassure you that if it appears that it may be necessary to invoke the provisions of the antidumping act against the commodity in question, I shall be glad to see to it that you are given an opportunity to be heard.

Very truly yours,

S. LOWMAN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE].

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to discuss for a few minutes what is known as the Government corner-card-printed stamped envelope bill (H. R. 8576) introduced by myself sometime ago, and I shall discuss it, first, from the standpoint of stopping the Government engaging in private enterprise in competition with the citizens; second, I want to discuss the bill from the standpoint that the Government has no right under present law to any profit from this undertaking; and, third, that the profit claimed by those who are opposed to this legislation is not what it is said to be and is not even half as much as it is said to be.

If there is any one question engaging the attention of the public mind at this time, along with the many troublesome problems that are before the country, I think the membership of the House will agree with me that the most important one, as evidenced by the mail that comes to our desks day after day, is that the people of this country are sick and tired and disgusted with Government interference with private business and enterprise. [Applause.]

Some day the people of this country are going to take such action as to show that they are tired and disgusted with any legislative body time and time again proclaiming that it is against Government interference with private enterprise and that it is against bureaucracy in government, and then stopping with making the statement without doing something about it.

I call your attention to the law on this subject and shall quote you the statute, and I hope each Member here will take time to ponder over this matter. The law is found in section 354, at page 1258 of the United States Code, and reads as follows:

SEC. 354. Stamped envelopes.—The Postmaster General shall provide suitable letter and newspaper envelopes with such watermarks or other guards against counterfeits as he may deem expedient, and with postage stamps with such device and of such suitable denominations as he may direct—and such envelopes shall be sold as near as may be at the cost of procuring them.

And note this—

The testimony of the Assistant Postmaster General was that we are bound by two statutes, one that we sell them at not less than cost and a later statute which requires that we "sell them as near as may be at the cost of procuring them."

I have just quoted you the statute which provides that they shall be sold as nearly as may be at the cost of procuring them.

In the last fiscal year, according to the testimony of witnesses from the Post Office Department, and according to the minority report on this bill, the special-request envelopes printed in the year 1931 amount to 1,650,329,667. The total receipts from sales, exclusive of the postage, were $4,089,220.36. The total cost of manufacture was $1,905,-609.53. This left an excess of $2,183,610.83, but this was before the cost of distribution was taken out. The total computed cost of distribution was $1,294,396.14, which left in revenue, not $2,000,000, as is claimed by some men who are opposed to this legislation—not $2,000,000 in the Treasury coming from this source—but $889,214.69. So instead of the Government losing two millions, under no circumstance is it over $889,214.69, and, in my opinion, not near that, as the Post Office Department in making its estimate, and it is only an estimate, of distribution cost, certainly did not lean toward the taxpayer.

Again, referring to the statute, the Government now has by this process, assuming that the estimate of cost of distribution is proper, $889,214.69, which is something like 25 per cent of the amount paid in the first place for the fiscal year 1931.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McMILLAN. With respect to the cost of distribution which the gentleman has just stated, can the gentleman give us any reason why that cost is apparently so high, as indicated by the gentleman's figures?

Mr. ROMJUE. I may say to the gentleman that the estimate of the cost of transportation and distribution is merely a matter of guesswork, because there is no way of telling it exactly or anywhere near exactly. As I stated on a former occasion, you might just as well say $2,500,000 or $1,500,000 and be just about as accurate in one statement as the other, or, to illustrate, you might just as well state how much of his salary a Member of Congress earns in walking between the House Office Building and the Capitol during a session, as there is no way to get a correct estimate. There is no way of making anything like an exact computation of it.

According to the Post Office Department's own figures and according to the claim of my friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN], who lives in a town where there is the one printing plant that gets all of this Government stamp envelope printing work, the total receipts are just as I have given them to you; and taking again the Post Office Department's own figures as to the cost of distribution and handling these special request envelopes for the postal employees and other expenses incident to transportation, we find the computed cost of distribution is $1,294,396.14.

I maintain that under this provision of law, as I said a moment ago, there is no legal right or authority to charge the people who secure these corner-card-printed envelopes through the Government any sum in excess of the actual cost of the envelopes, plus the actual cost of printing and the transportation and handling charges. Therefore the Government instead of having a revenue of $2,000,000 has only $889,214.69 for the fiscal year 1931 as net revenue according to their own figures when examined—and on account of the inability to make accurate distribution cost and the large expense to postal employees in handing this work, I assert the net revenue is not even that high.

In recommending the passage of this bill by the House the report of the committee makes clear the desirability of restricting competition of the Post Office Department with private industry.

My bill was approved by the various State and National associations of newspaper publishers, representing 11,000 papers; approved by the American Federation of Labor and its nation-wide membership; by the International Typographical Union, with about 80,000 union workers in private plants; by the United Typothetæ of America, the master-printers group; the National Paper Trades; and hundreds of organizations completely removed from the printing and publishing industry—but committed to the principle—and it seems to me that the time is at hand when Congressmen must meet the test of checking the growing encroachments of the Government's competition in private business.

This bill provides the means by which Congress may serve notice on all advocates of bureaucracy that a halt has been called.

The changes contemplated by this bill are in line with the declarations of the two major political parties that private industry should be given a chance to operate without the deadening hand of the Federal Government as a direct competitor.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There has been an earnest effort here that I know of for 15 years to try to pass legislation to stop the Government from competing with private printing plants in printing envelopes.

Just what is it that keeps us from passing this legislation? What is the influence that dominates Congress and refuses to take the Government out of this business? I am for the bill, the gentleman is for it, and others of us are for it. Why is it we can not get the bill favorably reported and up before the House and pass it?

Mr. ROMJUE. This legislation has been uppermost with the rank and file of country newspapers for many years. They have persisted in their advocacy of these legislative proposals and remained steadfast in their determination to have Congress translate promises into action. Now more than ever before in economic history, do the small-town publishers and printers need relief from unfair and unjust competition which is imposed by the Federal Government through the Post Office Department.

I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the International Paper Co., which operates as the International Envelope Co. at Dayton, Ohio, now has this Government printing contract. The following statement appearing in the Paper Trade Journal October 4, 1928, makes an explanation that might be interesting to the gentleman from Texas:

> The International Envelope Corporation, a subsidiary of the International Paper Co., has been awarded the contract for supplying the United States Post Office Department with 12,800,000,000 stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers for the 4-year period commencing January 1, 1929. The International Envelope Corporation was the lowest bidder, with a bid of $13,209,793, which was $105,000 below the bid of the present supplier.
>
> The paper will be supplied by the International Paper Co. and the envelopes will be made by the International Envelope Corporation, in which it is understood the Standard Envelope Manufacturing Co., of Cleveland, has an interest.
> This contract is another step by the International Paper Co. toward diversification of products. The company has grown from a $100,000,000 company in 1924, when its principal product was newsprint, to the proposed $550,000,000 company which will come into existence when the new holding company, International Paper & Power Co., is formed and takes over the additional New England Power Association stock. More than half of the new company's assets will be public-utility properties and the balance well diversified, including plants producing newsprint, writing-book papers, envelopes, sulphite pulp for rayon, sanitary napkins, wrapping paper, bags, cement sacks, wall board, mulch paper, and many other products.

It will be observed that the holding company for the Government envelope contractor was one of the largest corporations in the country in 1928. The report of the Federal Trade Commission on utility corporations (Senate Doc. 92, pts. 31–32) shows the enormous growth of the International Paper & Power Co. as of April 15, 1931. There were 35 companies directly owned by the International Paper & Power Co. and 36 indirectly owned. As one of the largest public utilities, the International Paper & Power Co. has been engaged with other power interests in fighting for the identical principle which we seek to recognize under the terms of my bill. They do not want the Government to compete with the public utilities in the sale of power to the public. Knowing the determination of the small-town printers and publishers to have the principle recognized, these public-utility firms found a sympathetic ear when they appealed to the newspapers for editorial support of this all-important principle.

Mr. A. R. Graustein is president of the International Paper & Power Co. and also president of its subsidiary, the International Envelope Corporation. The International Envelope Corporation is a direct beneficiary of the Post Office Department's competition with the printers and publishers. Mr. Graustein is also a member of the public policy committee of the National Electric Light Association, which is the propaganda group for the organized public utilities of the country. Just how Mr. Graustein and his associates reconcile their support of the Dayton opposition to this printing bill with their appeal to the publishers to prevent governmental control and competition with the power interests is something that defies satisfactory explanation.

I will concede that the Post Office Department is a powerful political force. Like all Government departments, they insist in maintaining all the functions which they have been allotted or usurped and will, no doubt, go to extremes to defeat this bill in the House and Senate. It is my honest conviction that this Congress has not yet allowed powerfully intrenched Government bureaus to dictate its legislative policies. I do not expect the House to permit the all-powerful Post Office Department, with its mighty patronage system, to make us rubber stamps and indifferent to the wishes of the taxpayers in our districts. Let us take definite action immediately and have these principles translated into a law that will keep the Federal Government in its rightful place—out of competition with private industry.

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell the gentleman where the opposition is. These big business interests in the large cities that want to buy Government envelopes from the Government at a lesser cost than private industry can furnish them constitute the opposition that stands in our way.

Mr. ROMJUE. The gentleman from Texas is entirely right. It is the power of big business against the interest of the people of this country, and, as I said in the beginning, some day the people of this country are going to determine that they will have legislation that they want to have, if it comes to removing the President and putting a new body in here. They are coming to that.

Now, my friends, this legislation should be paramount. The rank and file of the newspapers for years have persisted in advocating this measure, and they and the people generally throughout this country indorse the principle involved. They want the Government out of private business.

Some one has said something about economy. My friend from Ohio in a speech the other day took upon himself the task of criticizing President Hoover. I do not agree with Mr. Hoover on many things. But the fact is that the tentative omnibus economy bill proposed by the President includes this bill as one feature of the program. The Democratic Economy Committee also has reported a bill on the same point, indorsing this bill. So far as I am concerned, I do not care a cent about whether it is my bill, whether it takes my name or not, but I want to see the principle of this matter enacted into law at this session. I do not care whether it goes through under the economy bill proposed or under a proposal by the Democratic Economy Committee, or whether my bill comes through, the legislation ought to pass.

Now, on the point of economy. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] said he was for the bill. Every man in the House, with a very few exceptions, that I have talked with has said that the principle is right and that the legislation ought to be enacted.

Now, all this talk at this session about economy—the Government has no right to keep this $889,214.69 profit, if there is any such profit, which I greatly doubt. But if so, the Government itself is acting in violation of the plain statute heretofore referred to.

At first glance the Postmaster General's letter to the House Post Office Committee is confusing. A casual reading would indicate that the Government is making $2,000,000 in selling envelopes and printing. A closer examination reveals that this is the "apportioned cost involved in the sale and distribution" after the contractor has been paid for the finished product at Dayton. It is clear that when you allot $2,000,000 to pay for the collection of orders, the forwarding of these orders in triplicate by the postmasters, and then routing the printed envelopes through a complicated delivery system, and finally collecting, there is little, if anything, left for a profit. In fact, the Postmaster General studiously avoids mentioning any profit, preferring to leave the inference that allocated revenue is synonymous with profit. In fixing prices the Post Office Department is never bothered by the troublesome cost factors that are found in private industry.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. I yield.

Mr. GILBERT. Is there any more reason why the Government should enter into the business of printing than it should any other business?

Mr. ROMJUE. No reason in the world. I have in my pocket a long list of the different businesses that the Government has entered into. A man wrote to me calling my attention to it, a business man, and the business men of this country are gathering together throughout the country, having their meetings in protest against the Government engaging in competition with private enterprises.

This gentleman wrote to me about the matter and said he would be glad to furnish information, and he gave me eighty-odd private businesses into which the Government is poking its nose.

Now, as to economy. What are we doing to the people of this country? We are levying taxes against them without limit. We have levied on the people in this Post Office Department $150,000,000—$135,000,000 of it is in increase of postage to 3 cents. Now, I am not criticizing my friend from Ohio—but I say the Government has no statutory right to make a profit off of these people, and then turn around and tax the people $150,000,000 more, to be gathered through the Postal Service.

Those who oppose this bill say, "We can not afford to turn it back in these depressed times, but at the same time we can reach out and take $150,000,000 from the people through the same department that holds back this $889,000." Mr. Chairman, economy does not consist alone in taxing the public, economy does not consist alone in taking money away from the people, lawfully or unlawfully, and holding it; but economy consists in the least possible expenditure that meets the needs of the country, and I say to you that it is a false philosophy that wants to reach out through this department and take $150,000,000 more of revenue and then withhold this $889,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will find in every district in the United States many useless Government agents. I wish the gentleman would help the Congress cut them off of the pay roll and send them back home and take the Government out of our districts. There are Government agents everywhere. Every hardware merchant in the gentleman's district is receiving to-day a long questionnaire from some Government bureau to fill out. Your druggists all receive them. Every business man is receiving them. All those statistics are gathered at great expense and come here and are carefully arranged and then printed, but nobody ever reads them. They are absolutely worthless. It is an expense that ought to be stopped, and I hope the gentleman will stop it.

Mr. ROMJUE. I shall be glad to join with the gentleman from Texas in support of his suggestion, and particularly at this time, and also will join him to stop imposing extra and unnecessary taxes upon the people of the country.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield to me long enough to ask the gentleman from Texas, who speaks of taking agents away, whether he would also include taking away prohibition-enforcement agents?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, law enforcers have to be there. As long as criminals violate the law, we must have courts, and prosecutors, and enforcement agents.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and inserting therein two or three not lengthy articles and communications touching this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROMJUE. Yes.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. In addition to exclusive printing concerns, practically every county weekly or small-town daily paper has in connection a commercial printing establishment, or job-work department, as we say. Does my colleague feel that the Federal Government should compete, as it does, in the printed-envelope field, while asking the editor and publisher to run, without pay, all sorts of Government notices from those announcing civil service examinations to terms for emergency seed loans? Is not it a fact that in every great emergency the Federal Government has turned to the patriotic and public-spirited press to assist in putting over its program and that never has the response been disappointing? In view of all of this, does not it seem strange that legislation, such as the Romjue bill, should be required to compel the Government to get out and stay out of the business of printing and peddling envelopes?

Mr. ROMJUE. I would say to the gentleman that there are thousands of printing employees all over this country who are out of work to-day, and the Government is standing by here and taking that work away from them and turning it over to one gigantic corporation to attend to.

My colleague from Missouri [Mr. NELSON] has aptly pointed out the service rendered the Government by the rural newspapers and the newspaper fraternity generally. These men have always given unstintingly of the time and space to activities of the Federal Government, and I repeat that it is unfair to them to have the Government engage in direct competition by taking away their customers for printing.

The most deplorable part of the Government competition with the printers is the suspicion that it creates in the minds of the citizens. The local printer must pay for labor, paper, ink, and other items that figure so conspicuously in the cost of producing other commodities in the community. There have been attempts to have the Government engage in other forms of merchandising, such as groceries and shoes, and it is amazing the number of business enterprises the Government is now in. As long as the Postal Department continues to compete with printers, then the favored few will remain as Government customers.

LESS THAN ONE-HALF OF 1 PER CENT

The only legitimate claim made by the Post Office Department in justification of its conduct of this business is that it affords an accommodation to some 500,000 people—less than one-half of 1 per cent of the people. Does any Member of either branch of Congress believe that a Federal department is justified in doing a favor for a particular group of people when by so doing it works an injustice to others, and when the 99½ per cent help bear the tax burden without benefit except for the less than one-half of 1 per cent?

If 240 citizens of a community were assembled and the charge was made that 1 person in the group received a special favor from the Federal Government of which the others must eventually defray the cost through taxation, there would be a loud and vehement protest at the discrimination. Yet that is precisely what occurs when you consider the cost and extent of the Government's competition with the printers in the printing of corner cards on stamped envelopes in terms of percentage.

LABOR BENEFITS

Arguments have been advanced by those opposed to this legislation that the smaller printers and publishers would not derive a benefit. Evidence was presented to the House Post Office Committee showing conclusively that the smaller printers were satisfied that the restriction of Government competition would divert business to their shops. The Post Office Department stated that 83 per cent of the printing orders are for small quantities of from 500 to 2,000 envelopes. Representatives of the home-town printers stated that this business would naturally come to them because small orders would be unprofitable for mail-order printing plants in the large cities to handle. A survey of freight costs for envelopes shows that the freight rates on envelopes would keep out the mail-order competition from the smaller towns. Transportation costs are such that it would be manifestly impossible for anyone to monopolize this business without the resources of the Federal Government. The labor unions have petitioned Congress for the early enactment of this bill as a means of alleviating unemployment among their members in the thousands of print shops scattered throughout the United States.

It was stated that the present practice hurts the country printer in many ways aside from merely taking away from 60 per cent to 90 per cent of his envelope-printing business. It takes his best customers, the cash customers, for Uncle Sam will not do a credit business, and exacts either complete prepayment or a substantial deposit which will protect from all danger of loss. The small printer is left the less desirable, while the Government takes the cream of the printing business.

An official statement was filed by the International Typographical Union at the hearings before the House Post Office Committee showing that the wages paid the average worker at the Government envelope plant were far below the prevailing wages in the private printing industry. The American Federation of Labor has stated that this legislation, if enacted into law, would put hundreds of allied printing craftsmen back into the ranks as wage earners, especially when private enterprise is no longer oppressed by Government competition. The revival of employment in the private print shops in every congressional district is important and can only be achieved through the definite recognition by this Congress of the vital principle involved—the Government should not compete with its citizens.

The Government envelope contractor at Dayton, Ohio, by reason of the fact that the Post Office Department serves as a sales and marketing agency, has an extremely valuable monopoly. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, on the evening of April 12 the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT] delivered an address at the prosperity mass meeting held under the auspices of the National Portal Committee in Carnegie Hall, New York City. This address was sent over the National Broadcasting Co.'s national network. The purpose of the meeting was not only to acknowledge our debt of gratitude to George Washington and to pay homage to his distinguished life and deeds, but to reassert the imperishable spirit of America.

The broadcast has met with a response from various parts of the Nation in the form of letters and telegrams which indicate that Mr. LEAVITT's address should be preserved, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

PROSPERITY PREPAREDNESS

It is a matter of great pride to me that I bring to you the greeting of the President of the United States and his appreciation that your committee has arranged this prosperity mass meeting as a call to the American people to defeat depression by going forward. He said to me that it is fitting that such a meeting is held in the name of George Washington, who in adversity gathered within himself those forces of the spirit which strengthened and prepared him for victory.

Certainly there could be no more worthy purpose than that which has drawn us together. It is summarized in the opening sentences of the call as, first, to acknowledge our debt of gratitude to George Washington; and, second, to make articulate the voice of America to the end that courage shall supplant timidity.

I am honored to speak on such an occasion and upon such a subject. We of Montana are schooled to the forward and optimistic view of things. From every State we are gathered there and engaged in the building of a great, new State. The past of the entire Nation is our heritage. The present is a field for achievement. The future encompasses our dreams. Had you asked me to speak of pessimism and despair it would have been impossible for me to respond.

But, after all, while in my pride I use my own State as an illustration, I do so only because I can thus best bear personal witness to the existence of that spirit of forward-looking confidence and courage which is our common heritage. It is a spirit which exists not in any one State alone but in every State and in every community of the Union. It is the proud purpose of this meeting to arouse again those courageous and determined forces of the American spirit which Washington called forth, and to marshal them once more into the active service of our country. Thus in this bicentennial year of his birth, Washington shall again command and lead his people.

In no other way can we so fully honor Washington. No mortal man in all history has so continually and vitally lived on in the succeeding generations of his countrymen. He still influences and leads in domestic and foreign policy. He sways men and women. He puts his imprint on the plastic minds of little children.

I enlarge on that thought to demonstrate the immeasurable values which are sure to flow from the national observance of Washington's bicentennial. I choose two men whom Washington inspired, to illustrate what this may accomplish among our people.

Daniel Webster's father stood guard before Washington's headquarters on the night following the treason of Benedict Arnold, and Washington said to him, "Captain Webster, I believe I can trust you." Those words were the richest heritage of the son of that patriot father. Impressed by them as a child, they remained the inspiration of his manhood. Washington had said over and over again that an indissoluble union is essential to the well-being, even to the existence, of the United States. Webster, in his inspired tribute on the occasion of Washington's first centennial in 1832, as this is the second, made of that sentiment a flaming watchword. When he rose in the Senate to make his immortal reply to Hayne, by proclaiming liberty and union to be one and inseparable, he seemed to hear Washington saying to him, "Webster, I believe I can trust you."

What this inculcating of Washington's life and teachings into the minds of the American people gives promise of is again strikingly shown in a study of Abraham Lincoln. Among the few books Lincoln read as a boy was the Life of Washington, by Parson

Weems. Waste no time quibbling over details of that biography. In the essentials it set forth the devotion of Washington to his country, the steadfastness of his purpose, the unfaltering quality of his courage. It depicted his devotion to the forming of the Union as encompassing the entire security of liberty. The impression on Lincoln was indelible. Washington became and remained the lode star of his political horizon. The great speeches of Webster fell upon a mind prepared. Lincoln extended his gaunt hand and took up the torch. He gained clarity of vision from the illumination of Washington. That which Washington had proclaimed to be the very security of liberty, Lincoln made permanent.

Even as such men drew inspiration and clarity of purpose from Washington, and therefore better served their country, so will the millions who in this bicentennial year come to know him better grow in patriotic stature.

I find assurance of that promise in many things. I have no doubt that much of the steadiness of thought and conduct of the American people in these trying days is due to the turning of the Nation's thought in this bicentennial year to the steadfast character of Washington. I see assurance of it also in a letter from a little isolated school. It was one of the many thanking me for a portrait of Washington prepared by the Bicentennial Commission under act of Congress, and so distributed that the children in every American schoolroom may in the forming of their thoughts and characters daily contemplate the Father of their Country. That letter contains this sentence:

"We feel as if he were really in the room with us."

It came from the few children of the little prairie school at Mizpah in Montana. Deeply moved by its significance, I turned to my Bible to learn the meaning of the word "Mizpah" as it is used in Holy Writ. I found that Mizpah is a watchtower.

Everywhere, because America is teaching Washington in this bicentennial year, not only men and women grow in courage and understanding, but children are ascending the watchtowers of the Republic.

A Washington-minded America is soundly equipped for any and every situation which may arise.

We come now to the second stated purpose of this gathering, that in the name of Washington we shall make articulate the voice of America, to the end that courage shall supplant timidity, that industry shall take the place of idleness, that faith and hope may spring anew from the wellsprings of our hearts and souls. We are here to sound the advance. We call upon our people to replace fear with courage, timidity with resolution, and to evidence a living and active faith in ourselves, in each other, and in the destiny of America.

You ask me upon what ground we should now be optimistic and have the confidence to advance, and I answer you first in the words of Washington himself: "Accident may put a decisive blunderer in the right, but eternal defeat and miscarriage must attend the man of the best parts if cursed with indecision."

Washington's was a faith which upheld him and in doing so upheld his country. His was a courage which not only endured, but which went forward. Our own moment to advance has come; let our faith be as steady and our courage as valiant. So I answer you further in the words of Washington, when he said:

"While we do not underrate difficulties on one hand, we should not overrate them on the other, nor discourage ourselves from a very important undertaking by obstacles, which are to be surmounted."

Despite the failure of business to respond as rapidly as had been hoped to the legislative remedies applied to counteract depression, there are certain unmistakable signs which justify an optimistic outlook. Cheerful indications of general recovery have been the sharp decline in bank failures and the marked decrease in hoarding. These facts reflect the general restoration of public confidence.

Two important pieces of legislation enacted by Congress have contributed to these gratifying results. On January 22 the act which created the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was signed. It is vested with broad powers to assist banks and other financial institutions as well as railroads and agriculture. This was followed in February by the Glass-Steagall bill, under the terms of which the rediscount privileges of member banks of the Federal reserve system were broadened. By it the system's gold stores were fortified.

The actual benefits of the latter measure, while undoubtedly a decisive factor, can not as yet be stated. The first quarterly report of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, however, contains interesting data. In the short space of time between its organization in February and the closing of its books with March, the corporation has authorized 974 loans in the aggregate of over $238,000,000. That includes $2,173,000 to aid in the reorganization or liquidation of closed banks.

In October, 1931, the high-water mark in bank failures was attained; 522 banks suspended with total deposits of $471,380,000. Failures in November and December brought the number for the last quarter of 1931 to the astounding total of 1,055, with aggregate deposits of $816,087,000.

The first quarter of this year tells a different story. During the first six weeks before the organization of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the initiation of the benefits of the Glass-Steagall bill, 609 banks closed their doors. The last six weeks (February 15 to April 1) showed only 84. This averages but 14 suspensions a week now as compared to the weekly average of over 100 then.

The decrease in bank failures has resulted in an increase in public confidence. That in turn has been reflected in a gradual but definite return to circulation of hoarded money. Currency hoarding in this country sufficient to attract attention began in the fall of 1930. This tendency increased, reaching its peak in February of this year, when the hoarded money was estimated in the neighborhood of $1,500,000,000. Latest statistics indicate a decrease of about $200,000,000 during the past two months. There is every reason to feel assured that with a continuation of the general improvement now evident in the banking situation money will gradually flow back into its normal channels of trade in increasing abundance, thereby further releasing the stream of credit which is the very lifeblood of business and which in itself is a vital factor in the ultimate return of general prosperity.

In addition to this, I bring you the assurance of Congress that the National Budget will be balanced and the expenditures of the Government reduced. That is recognized as essential to the maintenance of national credit, and the hand of the Government is set to do it.

It is true that the direct benefits of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and of the Glass-Steagall bill have not been as quickly apparent to individual people as many of us hoped. Neither do they complete the program of reconstruction legislation. There is still vital need to stop the decline in commodity values. Heroic but sound steps must be taken to check this fall of prices, that money may come out of hiding still more rapidly and be invested with greater confidence, thus starting industry and restoring employment and purchasing power. But it is fair to say in behalf of Congress that these two measures were passed in a spirit of nonpartisan cooperation, and that this same cooperation must be shown throughout the Nation if the measures are to succeed completely.

In the intent of Congress, loans to banks or railroads or building and loan associations are not made merely to benefit the officers or stockholders of those institutions. They are intended to benefit communities and the people who live in them. Closed banks, for instance, mean dead towns and extreme distress. They mean paralysis of credit, unemployment, and the destruction of industry. Therefore it is distinctly valuable merely to keep banks open and sound. It is conducive of confidence. But consider for a moment the still greater public service performed when financial institutions follow the course of that New Jersey bank which recently advertised as follows:

"To the business men of New Jersey, individuals, partnerships, corporations, manufacturers, retailers, wholesalers:

"The Government of the United States, through the passage of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation legislation and the Glass-Steagall bill, has done everything in its power to make it easy for banks to secure funds with which to assist business.

"The Lincoln National Bank is ready to use these facilities freely wherever it can help restore the mercantile and industrial prosperity of New Jersey, and through so doing afford employment to its citizens. We will be glad to discuss with any business man how we can help him, and we are prepared to loan money to any sound business enterprise."

You ask what was the practical result of that advertisement, and I am happy to tell you. Within a few days the deposits of that bank were increased by a million dollars. Applications were received for $2,000,000 of loans. Business was done with new customers to the extent of a million and a half dollars, in addition to a further large amount with former customers. Two million dollars which had been idle went almost immediately out into productive enterprise—in the purchase of goods and the employment of labor. That New Jersey bank by its action expressed its own confidence; and just as fear is contagious, so is courage.

As a boy I lived by a river in the northern woods, down which came great drives of logs with the high water of the spring. Often a log caught in some way in the channel of the stream and a jam formed. Logs piled on one another, stopping all progress, damming the very current itself. An intrepid river driver, running out on the straining jam, located the key log. In the face of the angry river he wrenched out and thrust aside log after log until the key which held all others was reached. With quick decision and matchless daring the riverman attacked it. Mad water swirled and boiled among the tangled logs, but when that key log was moved the whole mass started. First slowly and then with gathering momentum it moved on its way again.

Fear is to-day the key log causing the jam in our flow of business, industry, and employment. With courage let us wrench it from its place that the stream of prosperity may flow.

In coming to a close I give you a familiar parable of Washington: It is of how his army went into Valley Forge as into the Valley of the Shadow, and came out of it trained, efficient, courageous. Washington had made of the very adversity of that winter an opportunity to prepare for victory. But when the moment was at hand a general, seized with timid fear, fell back when he should have advanced.

That cowardice and Washington's rebuke of it are history. But wait; the discipline gained in Valley Forge was not lost. The command of a leader who was not afraid wheeled the soldiers back into line. Washington took command, and Lafayette said of him on that day, "I never beheld so superb a man."

So we come out of this depression disciplined and clear of vision. This is another day when to falter is to fail, and to advance with confidence is to start the whole forward movement of recovery. As Washington rebuked that general who fell back at Monmouth, so his spirit, living again in this bicentennial year, rebukes our fears and gives the order to advance.

And finally we hear him speaking to us as he spoke to our forefathers in their day of stress, when he said:

"We must not despair; the game is yet in our own hands; to play it well is all we have to do."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take a great deal of time and am not going too deeply into the details of the bill, because where different questions arise it will be much better for those members of the committee who have spent days and weeks upon the bill to present the results of their deliberations under the 5-minute rule when amendments happen to be offered to the bill. Before I begin to talk about the bill, I want to say a word or two about the general practice of the handling of appropriation bills. There was brought up in the House the other day a motion to suspend the rules and concur in Senate amendments on the Interior Department appropriation bill. Some of us, about 40, voted against that motion. Some of us, and I was one, voted against it because there was concealed in that bill not economy but extravagance. On page 98, amendment numbered 172, there was a contract authorization for the expenditure of two and a half million dollars for the construction of highways. That was not in the bill when it went from the House, because that was a matter which appealed so little to the consideration of the Congress that there was not even legislative authority for such a matter. They told us as the bill was presented here and the motion was made to concur in the Senate amendments that it called for a saving of $5,000,000. Two and a half million dollars of the reduction disappears right there in this item. It did not appear on the surface as a direct appropriation this year but was concealed in a contract authorization. It was for the construction of new highways, solid-concrete highways, or tar highways in national parks. I believe it is upon those nonessentials that we do not need at present that we can best save our money in such times as these. We must not let false economy govern our conduct, but we must go into things far enough so that we will see what we are doing, and that we do not give away the Treasury under the guise of economy.

In the consideration of this bill your committee has spent four to five weeks of solid time holding hearings.

We have had able leadership in the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES], who has given of himself unstintingly to the work we have had in hand. We have brought in a bill which has cut from the total of the estimates submitted by the Bureau of the Budget approximately $15,000,000. The most comforting part about that cut, to almost every Member of the House, is the fact that as a result of the hearings and the statements of the chiefs of the Navy Department, almost all of that can be said to come to the House with the approval of the department.

There are three or four small items in the bill which I will discuss, and two other items which are not in the bill which I will discuss, with reference to the Navy for just a few moments. There has been so much talk about the naval reserve situation that I believe perhaps I should tell the Committee of the Whole House just a little more in detail of what actually happened there.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is about to discuss the reserve feature of the bill. Many of us are very, very vitally interested in it for this reason, that we are of the opinion that the Federal Government is not treating the various States fairly, with whom they have had agreements with regard to the reserves, particularly where the States themselves have appropriated four or five or six hundred thousand dollars in the establishment of militia buildings or other activities that go along with the reserves, which will now be declared more or less useless. I would like to have the gentleman's viewpoint on that.

Mr. TABER. I will try to discuss that as I go along and if the gentleman cares to ask me any more detailed questions with reference to it, I will attempt to answer him.

There were some cuts that were made by the committee on that appropriation, but they were minor. They totaled a very small item in the cut on the reserves appropriation.

There had been a substantial cut on the part of the Budget in this appropriation. Then the officers of the department came before us. Frankly, after the hearings had been closed and after we had marked up the bill, there appeared in the Army and Navy Journal an announcement, about which the committee knew nothing and about which the committee had no warning or no information any more than any other Member of the House, and which the committee did not itself inspire, that for the fiscal year 1933 the 15 days' active duty training for the reserves would be done away with; that the four ships on the Great Lakes, the Paducah, the Hawk, the Wilimantic, and the Wilmington, and the two eagle boats would not be used after the 1st of September, 1932.

Those ships have been kept upon the Great Lakes and have been used for the 15-day cruises, and they have been used for the week-end cruises which the officers and men of the Naval Militia are accustomed to take from sometime in May down to sometime in October. To be perfectly frank, I think the substantial part of those week-end cruises, as far as actual results go, takes place from about the middle of June to about the middle of September.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CLANCY. Gentlemen from Illinois refer to the donations of the several Great Lakes States to Naval Reserve training. For instance, Michigan gave $600,000. My city of Detroit gave $1,000,000 in property on condition that naval training on the Great Lakes would be maintained, and now the Navy Department recommends to be junked the Dubuque, the training ship at Detroit. We do not want that ship junked. Does the gentleman think that is fair? The Michigan State Legislature passed a resolution of protest two days ago, and the Common Council of the City of Detroit has also passed a resolution to the same effect. Both bodies donated heavily, and they claim the Navy Department has broken faith. I aim to correct that situation by offering an amendment this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York 10 additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. Now, that situation, to my mind, is a matter that I am not going to discuss in that particular way. I am just going to present the facts to the committee. I think it is unquestionably right that we should not ask the Government to pay for the 15-day cruises this year. The cost of keeping those ships in commission for the period from the middle of June to the middle of September, and I think that is all that anybody, under any circumstances, ought to consider at such a time as this, would be, I am told by Captain Schofield, who is in charge of Naval Reserve operations at the Navy Department, $100,000. Some larger amounts than that have been deducted but I do not think, under the circumstances, they would be required, because two of those ships last year were thoroughly overhauled and oil burners installed.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. In view of the gentleman's statement, is the gentleman trying to convey to the House the fact that the gentleman himself believes that probably an injustice was done to the reserves in cutting out their cruises and in cutting out these boats, for the small amount of money that could be saved to the Treasury?

Mr. TABER. I do not think under the circumstances that an injustice has been done from any standpoint in cutting out the 14 or 15 day cruises this year. I do not think it ought to be as a permanent proposition, but for this year, under all the circumstances, I think there is no question in the world but that with the week-end cruises they ought to be able to get along, and they would even be able to get along and do that with the amount we have carried. The situation with reference to that is that the bill provides for carrying those ships in commission until the 1st day of September, and probably that could be extended over Labor Day without any trouble, with the money that they already have.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman has stated that the bill provides for the keeping of the ships on the Great Lakes until the 1st of September for the purpose, I take it, of week-end cruises?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. That is already provided in the bill?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman inform the committee what the Appropriations Committee expects to be done with those ships after they are decommissioned in the fall? What is proposed by the department and what is proposed by the committee so far as retaining to the Government and to this particular service the ships on the Great Lakes that are now used for that purpose?

Mr. TABER. The committee has no information beyond that they are expected to be decommissioned.

Mr. WOODRUFF. As a matter of fact, the gentleman knows that it costs some money to keep ships out of commission.

Mr. TABER. I appreciate that.

Mr. WOODRUFF. There must be caretakers; there must be certain personnel of the Navy—or at least, of the reserves of the Navy—on those ships at all times to preserve them in the way they should be preserved. What provision has the committee made for that purpose?

Mr. TABER. The department has not brought that particular question to our consideration or asked any money to carry those ships along. I presume they would be tied up to a dock.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman and his committee were very kind the other day in giving a hearing to officers of the Naval Reserves on the Great Lakes on this problem of decommissioning these ships and doing away with this summer training on the Great Lakes. I personally appreciate the courtesy extended to these gentlemen because I am in a position, of course, to know what that service means, not alone to the officers and men taking it but to the national defense itself. I want to take this opportunity, if I may—and I hope I am not imposing too much on the good nature of the gentleman from New York—to say that the enlisted men in the Naval Reserve on the Great Lakes compose as fine a body of young Americans as can be found anywhere in the United States. They come from fine families; they are educated; I think I am safe in saying that 90 per cent of them are officer material. It is that sort of young men who are being trained in our Naval Reserve on the Great Lakes. So far as the saving to the Government is concerned, I understand it is the purpose of the department, if these ships are sold, to take these men and officers to the Atlantic Ocean and there train them during the summer. I think there is nobody in this House foolish enough to believe that you can transport those men from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic coast, give them their training there for 15 days, pay their way back again, send another detachment for a similar time, for as small a sum as it can be done on the Great Lakes. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

Mr. TABER. I think I ought to say this: That it is not within the expectation of the committee that the Naval Reserve will be taken to the sea in the fiscal year 1933.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I am sure it is not the purpose of the committee to do that this year, but it seems to be the program for following years.

Mr. TABER. And it is not the expectation of the department. It is the expectation that they will get what training they will get in the fiscal year 1933 by their week-end cruises on these ships up to the 1st of September, 1932. Frankly, I believe that if the Congress, when it comes here next winter, wants to put these ships back into commission, provided the purpose of the department is simply to lay them up at a dock, it could provide for it at the winter session.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I hope the gentleman's committee will let the department know that it does not have its approval in the proposition of selling these ships. I think the gentleman was impressed the other day by the splendid statements submitted to his committee by those officers from the Great Lakes. I think he and the other members of that committee were impressed with the importance of that particular activity on the Great Lakes. I think he would regret and I think every other member of his committee would regret the sale of these ships, especially in view of the fact that $150,000 was recently spent on two of those ships in remodeling them and bringing them up to date. That money has been spent within the last two years, and to sell them at this time, in my opinion, is just rank nonsense. It is the poorest piece of business I have known the Navy to propose in a long, long time.

Mr. TABER. I want to discuss one or two other things in a brief way, and I shall be unable to yield, because I have not the time. There is the question of aviation. There are four or five items involved there. In the first place, there is the cut of $800,000 for the construction of new planes. Your committee found that in all probability, according to the statements of the department, that the Navy will have on hand an excess of planes over the number we are authorized to maintain by law of probably 25 without this money, and therefore that has been eliminated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. TABER. We believe that with that money the department will be able to maintain the aviation branch of the service fully and completely and right up to the point of the program limit which has been given us by authority of Congress.

With reference to the other items, some of them were savings in the nature of postponement of work, like special improvements of stations. We have postponed some of those improvements. Like that is the civilian force at Sunnyvale, which was postponed because of the delay in completion of that project. One item was caused by the proposed decommissioning of the Los Angeles. That is an old ship and pretty nearly out, anyway. We have the Akron in full commission, and when it is desired to operate a large airship the Akron can be operated. When it is not, the three small lighter-than-air ships of about 300,000 cubic feet each can be used, and they are at Lakehurst prepared to go ahead.

Now, with reference to aviation pay. The limitation which the committee brought in of $1,100 as a maximum increase for aviation pay was brought in not because we have not any appreciation of aviation but because there are manifest abuses in the operation of that extra pay which ought to be corrected and because we believe this proposition will correct those abuses.

Mr. BACON and Mr. WOODRUFF rose.

Mr. TABER. No; I can not yield at this time. I will go into this fully when we get to the item under the 5-minute rule.

I think, if the gentlemen of the committee will study the hearings and the reports thoroughly and carefully, they will come to the conclusion that we did.

There are two other items I want to talk about. There is the clothing-factory situation. We have a clothing factory at Brooklyn for the Navy, a clothing factory at Philadelphia for the Marine Corps, and also a clothing factory at Philadelphia for the Army. I can not see any possible excuse for the maintenance of these three clothing factories. I think we ought to do away with all of them, because I do not like competition with private business. I realize that the sentiment of the Congress is not such that probably this can be accomplished. I realize in this bill we can accomplish nothing, but I do want to call attention to it briefly and say to the Economy Committee I hope they will throw the whole three establishments together and just have one, so that we can have some efficiency in making the clothing for our military forces.

There is one other subject I wish to mention, because it is my purpose when the item is reached in the bill to offer an amendment, which I believe will save the Navy $400,000 in officer pay and save the Army approximately $3,000,000 in officer pay. This is the proposition of constructive service.

Constructive service grew out of a provision in the 1922 pay act, which gave to those in the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Army officer service constructive pay and allowed them to count years other than the years of their commissioned service toward their longevity pay.

This has resulted in several very striking situations. For instance, I understand that out at the China station a year or so ago there was a lieutenant drawing more pay than the admiral in charge of the fleet.

I think we should confine pay to actual commissioned service and not in some artificial way boost up the pay of the Army and Navy officers, so that they are out of line with the service they are performing and giving to the Government.

I hope the committee, when it comes to consider these items, will give us a good, fair break and help the country save some money along these lines. [Applause.]

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to add my word of commendation for the splendid work that the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES] and his subcommittee have done in framing this bill. The gentleman has been mindful of the needs and the necessities of our Navy and the safety of our country, and at the same time has been most mindful of the interests of the taxpayers of the United States. His service here for years in the United States Congress has been one of great value to the country, and this has been shown by the fact that in a Republican district in Kansas they repeatedly elect him by an overwhelming majority and send him back here.

However, I want to use my time now to discuss a matter that the Congress soon must seriously consider, and that is the growing practice in every department and bureau and commission of the Government to establish within itself a legal department embracing a whole bunch of embryo lawyers drawing large salaries.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert certain documents to which I shall refer, and a list of the lawyers both here in Washington and also a list of lawyers outside of the city of Washington in the employ of the Veterans' Administration. I am going to put in the dates when they entered the bureau, the salary at which they entered the bureau, the salary they get now, and the date they were admitted to practice.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have here already prepared, and certified to me as being correct by Gen. Frank T. Hines, Director of Veterans' Affairs, a list of the lawyers here in Washington employed by his Veterans' Administration. General Hines is now having checked up for me, so that he can certify same as correct, a list of the lawyers outside of Washington, scattered over the United States, now employed by the Veterans' Administration, which he has promised to send to me this afternoon, and I will have it in time to insert same in the RECORD, so that you colleagues will have a complete picture, at one and the same time, of all of the lawyers now employed by just one bureau of the Government.

The following is the list of the Washington lawyers:

Lawyers in Washington employed by United States Veterans' Administration, with date they entered bureau, their salary when entering, their present salary now drawn, and year when they were licensed to practice law

Mr. BLANTON. I hope to-morrow that every Member of this Congress will read carefully this list of lawyers in Washington who are now employed by this one bureau. It will astonish you. And then read the list of lawyers outside of Washington now employed by this bureau, and it will further astonish you. Among this great army of so-called lawyers now employed by the Veterans' Administration you find here and there a real lawyer, but the great majority of them are mere lawyerettes, untrained, inexperienced, uninformed, and who do not know any more about properly preparing and conducting an important trial of an important case in a courthouse than a pointer dog. [Laughter.] All of the legal knowledge and experience they have ever had has been some lectures in a night school and clerical work in the bureau. Many entered the bureau at salaries of from $1,500 to $1,800 per year and are now drawing $3,000 to $9,000.

Mr. KELLER. How many of them?

Mr. BLANTON. Too many for me to count without an adding machine. [Laughter.]

The following is the list of lawyers outside of Washington now employed by this bureau:

Lawyers stationed outside of Washington employed by United States Veterans' Administration, with date they entered bureau, their salary when entering, their present salary now drawn, and year when they were licensed to practice law

Mr. BLANTON. I submit to my colleagues in Congress that the Veterans' Administration has entirely too many lawyers. I do not believe that any colleague in Congress ever dreamed that any one bureau of Government had in it as many lawyers as I have mentioned.

Now, let me introduce you to some of them. First, there is Mr. William Wolff Smith, drawing a salary of $9,000, and also retired pay of $187.50 per month additional, who got a swivel-chair commission in the Sanitary Corps here in Washington on October 29, 1918, just exactly 13 days before the armistice; who was for six months prior thereto employed in the War Department at a salary of only $125 per month; who was, when commissioned, declared physically unfit; who did not leave the Army after the war until he got the year's extra pay of $2,000; who was given a position in the Veterans' Bureau by Col. Charles R. Forbes at $4,000 on January 17, 1923, and 13 days later was promoted, on February 1, 1923, by Colonel Forbes to be general counsel, at $7,500 per annum, succeeding Mr. Kramer, who you will remember shortly thereafter committed suicide; and you will remember a little later on we sent Colonel Forbes to the penitentiary at Atlanta, but William Wolff Smith remained; and under a construction of the Welch Act he got his salary raised to $9,000 per annum, with 30 days' vacation on full pay and 30 days' sick leave on full pay each year. As a matter of fact, during most of the time he has been general counsel, since February 1, 1923, when he was not playing golf and having a good time in Washington, or else traveling all over the United States at Government expense, he has been in Government hospitals himself, getting the disabilities he possessed at the time he entered the Army treated, operated on, and trimmed up, the Government paying for his doctors, surgeons, nurses, medicines, and general hospital expenses, he drawing his big salary all of the time.

Just as soon as Congress passed the act granting a full year's pay to all officers who were discharged, William Wolff Smith arranged for the War Department to send him to Honolulu, and he and his wife thus got free this wonderful junket trip by way of the Grand Canyon going and by way of Mountain Rainier coming back, Smith putting in his application to be discharged just before he left San Francisco on the boat.

When the move was first made to pass the disabled emergency officers' retirement act, the Veterans' Bureau sent a report to the Military Affairs Committee, which Chairman McSWAIN now has, estimating that only 890 officers would get retired pay under said act, but just before the act was passed the bureau reported that 3,200 officers could come under the act. The act was passed on May 24, 1928, and the next day, before any forms had been printed or regulations promulgated, William Wolff Smith filed his application with the bureau for retired pay under said act, he knowing that if he should be allowed retired pay, he would get it from the date he filed his application, hence he was in such a hurry to get retired pay that he filed it on May 25, 1928; and after he had been turned down and turned down by different boards, he was finally allowed it, two years and a half after he had filed his application, and he then got from the Veterans' Bureau a check for $5,843.75 covering retired pay at the rate of $187.50 per month from May 25, 1928, to that date, December 30, 1930, during which time he was also drawing his regular salary of $9,000 per year. And ever since receiving that check for $5,843.75 he has continued to draw his $9,000 salary and also his additional retirement pay of $187.50 per month.

When we brought him before the Military Affairs Committee, confronted by the above facts and also by the fact that the board had on it George H. Lynch, who draws $6,000; Dr. T. B. Cracroft, who draws $6,200; and J. R. Galbraith, who draws a salary of $5,600 and also retirement pay additional of $106.25 per month, and whose wife also draws $2,400 in the bureau, it was no wonder that William Wolff Smith went to pieces and agreed to pay back to the Government his $187.50 per month and got himself sent to a hospital as irresponsible so that I could not make him admit some damaging facts.

Then there is the present solicitor in the bureau, who has under him several hundred lawyers and directs all legal business except insurance matters, which since July are handled by Smith. When the war started this solicitor was a student in Georgetown University. He donned a uniform, and I commend him for it. When the war was over he finished his law course and then entered the bureau. He does not know how to try a case. He does not know how to instruct lawyers to prepare a case for trial. He does not know how to prepare for the introduction of witnesses, and yet he is the solicitor in the bureau who entered it at a salary of $1,500 and now is drawing $8,000, and has under him an army of lawyers to direct.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield? Does he have reference to Mr. Roberts?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to say to the gentleman that in my opinion he is absolutely qualified for the job.

Mr. BLANTON. Did he ever try a case?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know. But Mr. Roberts is doing his work, and doing it in a wonderfully fine and efficient way.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to my friend—and he is my friend, and I appreciate him; I think he is a valuable man, but he sometimes makes statements in behalf of his friends that are really unwarranted—that there is not a man under God's shining sun who can tell other lawyers how to try a case successfully unless he has tried cases successfully himself. He can not do it.

Mr. SIMMONS. But I want to say to the gentleman that Mr. Roberts——

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield. The gentleman must not interrupt me until I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not now. In just a few minutes. I read to the committee yesterday a decision of a distinguished Federal judge out in Montana, and if you want to know how that Federal judge stands out there you ask the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT], and he will tell you that he is one of the finest judges in the United States. He said, in effect, that it was foolishness to call the case this bureau attended to for the Government a defense. He said it was foolish to call it a defense. He said that the cases are unprepared, not properly presented, and he said the judgment went against the Government as a matter of course.

Now, that is going to continue to be the way as long as you have men like William Wolff Smith and Roberts at the head of the legal department directing hundreds of lawyers when they have never tried a case themselves.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not yet. I heard a distinguished lawyer from the Veterans' Bureau yesterday admit to the committee under oath that the Government has lost about 85 per cent of its cases defended by this Veterans' Bureau. I want you to read the list of lawyers in the RECORD when it is printed to-morrow. You will see where scores of clerks entered the bureau at a salary of $1,600 to $1,800, attended a few law lectures, and now are drawing big salaries as lawyers. Where did they ever get an opportunity to learn how to try a case successfully in the courts?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute; I want to call attention to these facts.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Would not most of these 85 per cent of cases have been lost anyway? Has not the fault been in the legal opinions that were given before?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is backing up every word that I say about the inefficiency of these lawyers. If they were just cases filed against the Government, they should have been settled by the bureau before going to court without forcing the veterans and the Government to go to the expense of a trial.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman with me, or is he trying to hamstring me? If the gentleman will answer that, I will be very glad to yield.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman is trying to testify from personal knowledge.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield for any speech. The gentleman is a good parliamentarian and he made a good State officer, but I am sure that he does not know as much about this subject as I do. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCE. But I know more about this man than the gentleman does. I do not think the gentleman is quite fair.

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell the only unfair thing that I know about the gentleman from Massachusetts. He permitted a dentist down here to do some work for him once, and let that dentist hold him up for a thousand dollars. If he will let a dentist hold him up for that, he can not lecture me. [Laughter.] The reason I know that is that this dentist, when trying to hold me up, showed me the check that my colleague had given him.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman is so distinguished and I think so much of him that I yield.

Mr. LUCE. I simply wanted to testify that Mr. Roberts has been before the World War Veterans' Committee since its organization.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. And I have had constant contact with him, and I want to testify that there is no man in the service of the Government who is better worth his salary than is Joe Roberts.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman ever seen Mr. Roberts try a case in the courthouse?

Mr. LUCE. That is not his job.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, since last July he has been the solicitor of the bureau, drawing $8,000 per year, and in charge of several hundred lawyers, and to hold such a position I maintain that he should be an able, experienced lawyer. I know that he has been representing the bureau before various committees of Congress and that he is a genial fellow and has made us all like him personally, but a layman without any legal knowledge or experience could do this same work before committees of Congress.

Now, Mr. James O'C. Roberts, this $8,000 solicitor, got his law degree while working for the bureau, graduating in June, 1922, just three years after he entered the bureau. Now, here is his record in the bureau, with his salary promotions, as certified to me by General Hines:

James O'C. Roberts, solicitor, central office.
Date of appointment (temporary), $1,500, June 25, 1919; date of appointment (permanent), $1,400, February 1, 1920.
Promotions: $1,620, February 1, 1920; $1,800, August 11, 1920; $2,300, February 16, 1921; $3,000, February 16, 1923; $3,250, December 1, 1923; $3,300, July 1, 1924; $3,600, May 1, 1925; $4,000, October 16, 1925; $5,200, February 1, 1926; $5,400, July 1, 1926; $6,000, January 1, 1927; $6,500, July 1, 1928; $7,000, January 1, 1930; $8,000, July 23, 1930.
Graduate of Georgetown Law School, LL. B.
Date of graduation, June, 1922.

You will note that Mr. Roberts after the war entered the bureau on June 25, 1919, before he was a lawyer, at a salary of $1,500 per annum, and on February 1, 1920, he was promoted to a salary of $1,620 per annum, and taking his law course while he was drawing a salary from the Government he graduated in law in June, 1922, and on February 16, 1923, was immediately raised to a salary of $3,000, classed as a lawyer, and he has been in the bureau ever since, and now draws $8,000. Where did he get his experience as a lawyer?

He was in this bureau during the time Commissioner Frederick Fenning was drawing the $733,855.87 in money belonging to afflicted veterans, and yet he did not make one move to stop it. Even if William Wolff Smith permitted it, and was his superior, if he had been onto his job, he would have reported to General Hines that Frederick A. Fenning was robbing helpless veterans by the hundreds. Let me show you the bureau records of some of these lawyers as to their promotions, and so forth.

Here is that of Mr. Harry M. Seydel, and you will notice that he graduated in law while working for the Government, and four years after he entered the bureau:

Harry M. Seydel, acting chief, service division, solicitor's office, central office (detailed).
Date of appointment, $1,100, February 5, 1919.
Promotions, $1,320, August 16, 1919; $1,440, March 1, 1920; $1,560, May 1, 1920; $1,800, November 16, 1920; $2,000, October 1, 1921; $2,360, December 1, 1923; $2,960, May 1, 1924; $3,000, July 1, 1924; $3,800, October 16, 1924; $4,000, February 1, 1926; $5,200, January 16, 1927; $5,400, August 1, 1927; $5,600, June 30, 1928; $6,000, July 1, 1928; $6,200, January 1, 1930.
George Washington University, LL. B., 1923.

Here is the bureau record of Mr. James D. Hayes, and you will notice that he graduated in law less than two years before he began working for the bureau at a salary of $1,800; he could not have been much of a lawyer then:

James D. Hayes, chairman administrator's board of appeals, central office.
Date of appointment, $1,800, February 4, 1919.
Promotions, $1,920, February 1, 1920; $2,250, September 1, 1921; $2,400, November 16, 1921; $2,500, January 16, 1922; $3,000, September 1, 1922; $3,360, May 1, 1923; $3,600, December 1, 1923; $3,800, December 12, 1927; $4,000, June 30, 1928; $4,600, July 1, 1928; $5,600, September 1, 1928; $6,500 July 1, 1931.
Graduate of Notre Dame University, LL. B., June, 1917.

Here is the bureau record of Mr. Mark H. Grinder, and you will note that he graduated just six months before he entered the bureau at $1,800; hence could not have been much of a lawyer:

Grinder, Mr. Mark H., legal member, claim-rating section, central office.
Date of appointment, $1,800, December 10, 1918.
Promotions, $2,000, February 1, 1920; $2,360, May 1, 1924; $3,000, July 1, 1924; $3,800, March 16, 1925.
Demotion, $3,600, September 14, 1925.
Promotions, $3,800, April 16, 1926; $4,000, July 1, 1926; $4,200, August 1, 1927; $4,800, July 1, 1928; $5,000, January 1, 1930.
Graduate of Georgetown University, LL. B., June 10, 1918.
Ex-service: No.

Here is the bureau record of Robert L. Jarnagin, and you will notice that he entered the bureau on December 1, 1921, at a salary of $2,400:

Robert L. Jarnagin, assistant solicitor.
Date of appointment, $2,400, October 1, 1921.
Promotions, $2,650, December 1, 1923; $3,000, May 1, 1924; $3,500, November 16, 1924; $4,000, June 1, 1925; $4,200, October 1, 1925; $5,200, May 14, 1927; $5,400, August 1, 1927; $5,800, July 1, 1928; $6,500, August 1, 1929.
Graduate of University of Illinois, LL. B., 1916.
Illinois bar, July, 1916.

Here is the bureau record of Edward E. Odom, and you will notice that immediately after graduation he entered the bureau on July 28, 1920, at $2,400:

Edward E. Odom, chief, guardianship division, solicitor's office, central office.
Date of appointment, $2,400, July 28, 1920.
Promotions, $2,750, October 16, 1922; $3,000, August 1, 1923; $3,360, November 1. 1924; $3,600, September 16, 1925; $3,700, October 16, 1925; $4,000, March 1, 1926.
Demotions, $3,800, September 16, 1926.
Promotions, $4,000, September 17, 1926; $5,200, March 1, 1927; $5,400, August 1, 1927; $5,800, July 1, 1928; $6,000, January 1, 1930.
Graduate of Westminster Law School, LL. B., 1920.

Here is the bureau record of Davis G. Arnold:

Davis G. Arnold, assistant solicitor, central office.
Date of appointment, $6,000, December 1, 1923.
Promotions, $6,600, January 16, 1924; $7,200, February 1, 1924; $7,500, July 1, 1924.
Reduced, $6,000, March 20, 1926.
Promoted, $7,000, September 16, 1926.
Information not available re graduation or school. Admitted to practice law in Rhode Island, 1905.

Note that Davis G. Arnold draws $7,000, but I will say of him that he really is a lawyer. He is getting a pretty good salary. I know nothing about his integrity, but his record shows that he was admitted to practice law in Rhode Island in 1905, hence since he did not enter the bureau until 1923, he did have 18 years in which to become experienced in the actual practice of the law, and it takes actual practice either in an office or a courthouse to become an experienced lawyer.

Here is the bureau record of Miss Annabel Hinderliter, who was the stenographer of William Wolff Smith when he was in the War Department, and whom Smith caused to be transferred to the bureau when Col. Charles R. Forbes gave him a position there, and who was immediately assigned to William Wolff Smith's office in the bureau. Remember that while she got a license to practice law while studying during the time she was in the bureau, she was a stenographer when she entered in 1923, though she is now rated as a lawyer, and note her rapid promotions:

Annabel Hinderliter, senior attorney, central office:
Date of appointment, $1,440, February 12, 1923.
Promotions, $1,860, May 1, 1924; $2,100, July 1, 1924; $2,400, July 1, 1925; $2,500, October 16, 1925; $2,600, February 1, 1926; $3,000, June 1, 1926; $3,100, August 1, 1927; $3,800, November 1, 1927; $4,000, June 30, 1928; $4,600, July 1, 1928; $4,800, January 1, 1930.
Graduate of National University, LL. B., June 6, 1925.
Ex-service, No.

William Wolff Smith, in his testimony before the Military Affairs Committee, tried to claim that he did not have anything to do with her rapid promotions, but I quote the following from the official records of the bureau:

On February 27, 1923, Major Smith, the then General Counsel of the United States Veterans' Bureau, recommended that Miss Hinderliter be promoted from $1,440 to $1,600 per annum.
Under date of March 2, 1923, Major Smith was advised by the chief of personnel that Miss Hinderliter's promotion could not be approved.
On February 5, 1924, Major Smith submitted to the director a recommendation that an exception be made in the case of Miss Hinderliter. This recommendation of the general counsel was referred to the chairman of the classification committee, who, along with the executive officer of the supply service, recommended against the promotion.
On February 16, 1924, the recommendation of the general counsel was returned by the director without approval.
Under date of March 12, 1924, Major Smith addressed a memorandum to William H. Conklin, Assistant Director United States Veterans' Bureau, in which he recommended that Miss Hinderliter should at least be given a salary of $1,680. Under date of May 1, 1924, after an interchange of memoranda, Miss Hinderliter was promoted to $1,860 per annum.
Under date of December 5, 1924, Miss Hinderliter was given an efficiency rating of 96.94 by Major Smith.
Under date of January 12, 1925, in response to a request of Major Smith that Miss Hinderliter's grade be changed to P. and S. 2, the director advised that until this employee had completed her study of law as evidenced by graduation he would not approve her assignment to such position.
On or about April 1, 1925, Major Smith recommended that Miss Hinderliter, law clerk of the general counsel, be promoted to $2,400 per annum.
Under date of May 23, 1925, Miss Hinderliter was given an efficiency rating of 98.44 by Randolph C. Shaw, one of the staff of the general counsel.
On October 23, 1925, Major Smith recommended to the director that the salary of Miss Hinderliter be increased to $2,700 per annum. He disapproved this recommendation November 3, 1925.
Under date of November 16, 1925, Miss Hinderliter was rated 98.84 per cent by Major Smith.
Under date of February 13, 1926, Major Smith recommended that Miss Hinderliter be promoted to the position of assistant to the general counsel.
Under date of June 2, 1926, the recommendation of the general counsel that Miss Hinderliter be promoted from P. and S. 2 at $2,600 per annum to grade P. and S. 3 at $3,000 per annum was approved, to be effective June 1, 1926.

And in addition to the above the official records show that William Wolff Smith wrote a 3-page document urging that Miss Annabel Hinderliter be promoted to a much higher grade and with a much higher salary, but he was turned down. And one of his attorneys testified yesterday before the Committee on Military Affairs that the statements of William Wolff Smith, when urging said promotion, were false, and he brought that fact to the attention of General Hines last year when Smith's legal department was overhauled, and Smith was shorn of most of his attorneys, and they were given to Mr. Roberts.

Mr. FOSS. Is she a lawyer?

Mr. BLANTON. She is rated as a lawyer now. But when she entered the bureau on February 12, 1923, as a clerk-stenographer, at a salary of $1,440, and has been working for the bureau ever since, I do not know how on earth she could have become a very profound lawyer. One of the bureau lawyers testified yesterday that she had never tried a case herself, although she had sat in on cases really tried by himself and other lawyers.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just a minute, please. I have only a few minutes left, and I want to get these valuable facts in the RECORD so the gentleman and our other colleagues may read them in the morning. We must correct this situation by proper legislation before we adjourn this Congress.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I can not yield now. I must get in the RECORD what I want to place before the Congress.

I want you to know that when William Wolff Smith filed his amended application for retired pay as a disabled emergency officer, upon the forms the bureau promulgated and required, and he was asked under section 10 thereof to give the names and addresses of his employers and his monthly earnings just preceding his entry into the service of the World War, and he knew that his retirement pay would be predicated upon his earnings, he falsely and fraudulently stated that "he was in the private practice of the law," when he knew that during the six months just preceding his entry he had worked in the War Department for $125 per month, and he gave his address as "400 Commercial National Bank Building," pretending that he had a law office there, when in truth he did not, and he then gave his monthly earnings as "$600 per month, approx.," when in truth and in fact he had never tried a case and was getting only $125 per month as a clerk in the War Department, and he nowhere mentioned in such application that he was general counsel then in the Veterans' Bureau, and he had his assistant, Mr. James O'C. Roberts, and his stenographer, Miss Annabel Hinderliter, both swear to said application as true, and he swore to it that it was true.

And when he was trying to get his retired pay, after the retirement board, composed of Dr. B. A. Cockrell, Dr. J. C. Harris, Judge D. E. Smith, Hon. George K. Polk, and Chairman J. D. Hayes, had rendered an adverse decision against him on May 23, 1929, over a year after he filed his application, he got permission to file additional evidence, and then had his said stenographer, Miss Annabel Hinderliter, make an affidavit, in which she stated that since May 7, 1921, William Wolff Smith had been her immediate superior, and he had suffered with a cough, and "since I have known him he has always carried more than the usual number of handkerchiefs."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman please give me five minutes more?

Mr. AYRES. I would be very glad to if I had the time. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I thank my colleague. And William Wolff Smith used that affidavit, and the affidavit and help he got from Watson B. Miller, who draws from the American Legion a salary of either $7,500 or $10,000, to get his retired pay. And you will remember that Watson B. Miller testified that since 1923—when Smith became general counsel—he and Smith—

Have traveled extensively together from one end of the country to another, many times sleeping in the same room in hotels and on trains; scores of times during that period we have played golf together; frequently when playing golf together I have noticed that he held his hand in this position. I have also seen him walk a long distance over the holes with golf club in one hand and his other hand pressed on his lower left side; * * * Major Smith and I are about the same age and weight; on 25 or 30 occasions, when we have been doing similar things, he has had to quit before I did; on one occasion, when we were playing golf, he got as far as the seventh hole of a certain course we were on and quit, and didn't say why he quit, but he had some reason for doing it; it may have been associated with his service-connected disability.

Mr. BALDRIGE. What can we do to stop this?

Mr. BLANTON. Here is what we can do. We must repeal the act of May 24, 1928. We must discharge William Wolff Smith and the other incompetent parasites from the bureau. We must keep the real, good lawyers, but these embryo lawyers, several hundred of them, we ought to dismiss from the service. We ought to reorganize the service.

We ought to take their legal departments away from every single department and bureau of the Government and put it in the Department of Justice, where legal matters are properly handled, and make the Department of Justice responsible to this Government for every case that is tried against this Government. We also ought to repeal that portion of section 19 of the World War veterans' act that permits every two-bit attorney in every section of the United States to indiscriminately sue the Government on claims that are not proper claims, and some of them are making a business out of it, and I have information that there are some parties connected with the bureau who are in collusion with them in bringing claims against the Government.

It was testified before your committee on yesterday that there are 25,000 cases pending under this article 19, against the United States Government. It will bankrupt this Government if we do not stop it. We should put legal matters in the Department of Justice and let the Federal district attorneys be responsible for them in every community of the United States. There are some good lawyers in the bureau, but these little lawyerettes are appointed by a man who does not know a lawyer from a doctor, and they misrepresent the Government; and when we bring William Wolff Smith to taws before the committee, though he has been the great general counsel, and question him a few hours, he breaks down and goes before Doctor Calver over here and cries one minute and laughs another, and Doctor Calver has to send him to a hospital for observation, and we had a neurologist come before the committee on yesterday and say that he did not know when Smith would be able to come before the committee again. Is he able to sit across the table against the best lawyers of the United States and represent this Government? Is he able, as general counsel, in charge of all insurance cases, 25,000 of which are existing against the Government to-day, to properly direct lawyers how to try them, a man who can not answer questions for four hours? It is ridiculous. We must change this situation if we would save this Government from bankruptcy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I do not know any other way when one is interested in legislation except to grasp the opportunities as they come along and urge that legislation when it is opportune and under consideration.

I would like the attention of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Naval Affairs, because I am again about to propose ways and means to save a very substantial sum of money for the Federal Government. As we all know, the leaders in both the House and the Senate are spending many sleepless nights trying to work out some way to economize, to reduce Federal expenditures, without interfering with the efficiency of the Government of the United States. I would ask the chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking minority Member why it would not be in order, why it would not be proper and sound and wise, to suggest to our delegates at the Disarmament Conference now being held at Geneva that we could have identically the same proportional national defense for naval purposes by continuing the 5–5–3 ratio, but by entering into a naval compact to reduce the number of our battleships and battle cruisers over 10,000 tons by one-half. In other words, we could probably reduce this appropriation of $300,000,000 by a hundred or a hundred and fifty million dollars by entering into an agreement with those nations now assembled at Geneva, where up to date they have done nothing but talk, and get them to agree to reduce the number of battleships from 18 to 10 for both Great Britain and the United States, and from 10 down to 6, on the same proportionate ratio, for Japan. If we did that, I believe we would have not only the same proportional national defense and the same comparable naval defense but a better national defense from the point of view of the United States of America, for the reason that up to this time we have failed to live up to our allotment under the present 5–5–3 ratio.

I, for one, believe in a strong navy. I, for one, propose to vote in this House to maintain the 5–5–3 ratio as established by the Washington conference in every respect, even to the high bracket where it is set to-day; but we do not do it. Therefore I submit for the attention of the committee that we would have a better national defense if we urged a further agreement with those other nations at the Geneva conference, particularly Japan and Great Britain, that while maintaining the same 5–5–3 ratio to reduce the number of battleships and battle cruisers under the present allotment of 18 for the United States, 18 for Great Britain, and 10 for Japan down to 10 for both Great Britain and the United States and 6 for Japan. We would not jeopardize the efficiency of our national defense or the efficiency of our naval defense in any way by such a proportional reduction in number of battleships and battle cruisers above 10,000 tons.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman seriously contend that with our extended waterfront six battleships would be sufficient for our national defense?

Mr. FISH. Not 6 but 10 under my proposal. I can answer the gentleman easily. What happened to the battleships of Great Britain during the World War? They were kept in their harbors because they were afraid of the submarines. My proposal does not interfere with the construction of light cruisers or the so-called 10,000-ton cruisers. Those are the ones to protect trade and commerce, but not the great battleships. If Japan reduces the same proportional amount and if Great Britain reduces the same comparable amount, we will have exactly the same degree of protection. Whom does the gentleman want us to fight—France and Italy and Germany—without practically any battleships over 10,000 tons?

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. This gentleman does not want this country to fight with anybody, but I will answer the gentleman by saying that it is not the custom of American battleships to stay in the harbor during a war.

Mr. FISH. Now, the gentleman represents a district with a large navy yard, and I know the gentleman's attitude; but I submit that the way to economize, and yet maintain the same degree of national defense, is to cut the allotment for big battle cruisers and battleships in half and maintain the 5–5–3 ratio at the same time.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. I would like to know how the gentleman would get Japan to agree?

Mr. FISH. The only way we can begin is to begin and make an offer. I would like to see a Secretary of State like Charles Evans Hughes, who went right out before the Washington Limitation of Armament Conference and said, "We propose to establish a 5–5–3 ratio. We propose to scrap so many battleships and leave 18 for the United States, 18 for Great Britain, and 10 for Japan."

That is the proper way to do it. All we would be required to do is to make the offer through our delegates at Geneva at this time, for the burden of naval construction and maintenance is even a greater burden to Great Britain and Japan than to ourselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I agree with you that greater efficiency and economy should be practiced on all expenditures, whether additional or not, and I think I can say that the responsible men of this House are going to continue their efforts to balance the Budget and reduce public expenditures so that the expenditures as well as the debts of the Government may be reduced, and at as early a date as possible materially reduce the tax burdens.

SECTION 19 OF VETERANS' LAW

Before proceeding I want to direct my remarks to the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to repeal section 19 of the war veterans' law. It appears to me that the reasons advanced for the repeal of the law do not logically indicate that a repeal is the necessary remedy, but that something else is necessary. For example, always when there is evidence in a case, whether it is ready to-day or ready before the case is entirely dead, it ought to be made available to the person whose case is being tried.

Within a week I appeared before the Veterans' Bureau in connection with a case that has been in existence from 1922. Time after time the claimant was rejected because it was said the records did not show that certain things were in existence upon his enlistment. He had made the allegation in his first application for compensation, and for a period of practically 10 years the report, in a file almost 2 inches thick, time after time said, "You are not entitled because the records do not support your allegations."

I talked with a man at the department, and maybe there was collusion between the Congressman and the departmental representative, but I did not call it that. He suggested to me that possibly if we had the records of the Navy Department they might show what the fact was. By telephone the Navy Department said they would furnish, and they did furnish, the man's enlistment and hospital record in photostats. I looked at the photostats and they corroborated the man's original statement of 1922. I took those several photostats with me and appeared before the gentlemen up at the Veterans' Administration. I showed them the photostats and asked them to make a final review of the case. Now, if this proposed change in section 19 were in effect and this man had taken that rejection as final and brought his suit, the evidence that was available to him would be entirely shut out. If the fact that a suggestion is made that you can find your evidence somewhere is collusion, then I say let that collusion continue.

I could give you three other examples where material evidence was lost in exactly the same way in the records of the Department of Veterans' Administration and in the Navy Department or the War Department, which, if a man were willing to take the time to search for, could be found, and which, when found, could be presented in the case and thus make it possible for a man who has an actual service-connected disability to begin to receive some of the compensation to which he is entitled. No man here would deny that a man with a service-connected disability should have the right to use the evidence available to him to show that he should get what care the Government is willing to give him.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman. I do that which he has been doing practically every day. I only want a part of section 19 repealed, that part which permits cases to be filed against the Government when there is no merit in them at all, at a tremendous cost to the Government. I want to permit the adjudication of meritorious cases. I only object to collusion where one lawyer has 50 cases against the Government obtained through help in one certain department. When one lawyer brings 50 cases against the Government representing certain clients that sometimes indicates collusion between him and somebody in the department, beyond any question.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. But the proposal in the amendment is—

That in any suit tried under the provisions of this section the court shall not receive, admit, or entertain the testimony of any person whose statement has not previously been submitted to the United States Veterans' Bureau or the Veterans' Administration prior to the denial of the claim sued upon, and the date of issuance of the letter of disagreement required by this section shall be the date of denial of the claim.

That is the amendment that is proposed and I am sure if the gentleman will read it again, he will agree with me.

Mr. BLANTON. Who is proposing that?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. That is proposed in the bill to effect economies in the National Government.

Mr. BLANTON. That has not come before us as yet, and I am not anticipating that bill now, because the committee has not yet definitely agreed upon what it shall contain.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I may say in that connection that ever since some one told me that in the Sunday newspaper there was printed the bill that was going to be presented on the floor of this House, I have tried to get a copy of the bill. I asked at the desk here on my left, and I asked our Republican floor leader, and I asked the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House on Monday and on Tuesday, and no one could give me a copy of the report; but upon Wednesday I obtained a mimeographed copy of something that I understood had been circulated around here, and it is from that proposed bill that I am reading the proposed amendment to section 19, which will be presented on the floor here.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee has not yet definitely agreed on its program, has it? There have been some tentative agreements and some tentative programs, but no program has been definitely agreed upon by the committee.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I can not say. I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I can not say, either, but I do not believe there has been.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Mr. EATON of Colorado. There is one other subject that I wish to touch upon, and that is the subject of appropriations for vocational education. I want it understood, as I stated in the beginning, I am not here asking to have the expenses of the Government increased. I have probably voted against more increases than any other man on the floor, and I have carefully considered every vote I have cast; but in the matter of vocational education it seems to me you are striking at one of the places where expenditure might properly be continued, because that has to do with the preparing of men and women, both adults and children, who are not drones and who are willing to work and thus prepare themselves for better work and to make a better livelihood and be more available in our everyday work.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. These handicapped children and citizens, of course, are not organized and are not in politics. They are spread all over the country, and they are not grouped in any one section. I suppose this is why a great many of these so-called economy artists have hit upon this appropriation to make a showing of economy. I am going to vote against it.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I am going to join with the gentleman.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. ARENTZ. I do not know any more about what this Economy Committee is doing than the gentleman from Colorado, but I understand that the vocational-education item is going to be allowed in full, and that provision will be stricken from the bill that is going to be presented to the House; in other words, the agitation by a number of Members of the House, including our good friend from New York, has borne fruit, and I think the vocational-education item will be complete when it comes before the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] say they are not organized? How many telegrams did the gentleman get this morning and yesterday and day before and during last week?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They are from unorganized citizens who have the interest of education at heart.

Mr. BLANTON. But they know what is going on, and I am with them. They have been filling my desk, and they have been filling the desks of the other Members with their requests, and all of us are going to respond to their requests.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But they are not organized.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I do not know whether they are organized or not, but I will say that telegrams from teachers have been coming in to different ones; and no matter whether they are from teachers or who they may be from, and even though it may be from the selfish interest of the teacher to continue on the pay roll, yet the work they do in vocational education I think is the most productive of all the schemes of education that we have, and I want to do all I properly can to see that vocational education for the grown-up boy and girl and the adult who has not had education or opportunities is continued; and I say here that in our city where we have an opportunity school which was started years ago, and which is used as a model throughout the United States, that school is going to be maintained whether we have Federal appropriations or not.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman on that.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. In the district which I represent, vocational education has been in force since 1891, and the Denver Opportunity School is a model for many such institutions in the United States. The school has an annual enrollment of 9,600 people of all ages throughout the school year. There are more than 3,000 in daily attendance for instruction. An employment bureau is also operated in connection with the school, which last year placed 1,500 in earning positions.

The detail of the Government's appropriation and its State apportionment is not before me, but throughout the State of Colorado vocational institutions are operated; and my last information was that notwithstanding Denver has approximately one-third of the population of the State of Colorado, but one-sixth of the Federal appropriation is allotted to Denver, the balance going to other sections of the State.

The only comments I have made in connection with the necessary reductions in the appropriations is where useful and necessary functions have been cut or threatened with insufficient appropriation for continuance of the necessary part of their functions. The work of vocational education is present this minute—right now. To-day is the day for training of those who are unfitted for productive participation in our daily work. Their training may not be curtailed without relegating to county aid a larger number, and that number is composed of those who are not drones, but who are ready and willing to work and better themselves to carry on the productive business of the world. Those who attend these schools are not mendicants, nor are they looking for a dole.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' SALARIES

I want to speak now on the subject of the proposed cut in the salaries of Federal employees. I do not think the Federal employees in Denver have any better friend than I am now and have been in the past. There are more than 1,700 in the Post Office and other departments. I am told that 93½ per cent of the workers in Denver receive a salary of less than $2,700 per year, and nearly 50 per cent are paid less than $1,800. I can not say how many receive less than $1,000.

There is one feature of this question which I have not yet heard discussed in this House. All of the employees of the Government are in one of these three classes—political, military, and civil service. Those in the political class take political chances as to their salaries and tenure of employment, based upon the results of elections and the pleasure of those elected from time to time. Those who enter the military service have the opportunity of life work at designated compensation and devote whatever skill and earning capacity they have to the general welfare and protection of our country. The rest have all availed themselves of a nonpartisan plan of civil service and have selected this stabilized employment in lieu of the competitive field in the commercial or professional world.

Every man and woman in civil service knows upon taking a civil-service position that upon good conduct, the proper performance of the assigned work, and passing the required and permitted examination, their stabilized employment is assured until sickness or age requires retirement. And during the retirement period they will receive monthly payments which will keep the wolf from the door.

They learn that a percentage of their salary is retained from every pay check which provides for a portion of their pay upon retirement. Every one of these civil-service employees gives up his or her chances for more lucrative employment and reward in a competitive field, and most of them devote their lives to good service in the Government. I hold no brief for the drones and incompetents; but I want to speak a word for those thousands of faithful workers who daily perform the actual work of our Government.

In a tabulation furnished me by the Bureau of the Budget I am informed that throughout the United States there are 345,351 who receive less than $1,000 per year. Or, to say it in another way, less than $83.33 per month. Another group of 336,541 receive salaries running from $1,000 to $2,000. A third group of 259,262 receive salaries running from $2,000 to $2,500, and I want to state that it is my experience that it is in this group where the men and women are found who do the most valuable work of the Government.

Surely those receiving less than $1,000 per year ought not yet be called upon to have their wages cut. There may not be so many who agree that those in the next two groups should not suffer any reduction; but if a plan were proposed which would cut out the drones and the incompetents, then those who conscientiously perform their daily work ought not to be compelled to suffer a penalty on account of the dereliction of some of the others. This is one feature in which it would appear the employees themselves ought to cooperate and furnish aid to the Economy Committee in reducing the expenses of the Government.

As far as I know, no one has yet proposed any proper change in civil-service rules which would aid in weeding out this deadwood. My present position is that I can not be a party to a horizontal cut from top to bottom, and I hope that those who are working on a plan of reducing the Federal pay roll will make some tangible, workable provision to get rid of the deadwood, see that the lowest-priced employees are protected in their stabilized employment, all permitted to receive a living wage, and then make proper adjustments in the higher brackets. I trust that their wisdom will result in the placing of the dividing line at a fair and equitable point.

In closing I want you to understand that I am just as keen to reduce public expenditures as any man in this House. And I feel sure that the controversy over Federal employees' salaries will continue until a fair adjustment is made, not to the workers alone but also to the people who pay the taxes.

If that does not sound sensible to you, let me know what you would do under the circumstances. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MCCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, there has recently descended upon my office an avalanche of letters and telegrams, more in number than I have ever received during a similar period, protesting against any legislation which would curtail or destroy vocational education, as is provided for by the Smith-Hughes Act. I dare say that I have in my office over 150 letters that can not be answered for several days.

The friends of vocational training may not be organized as has been said on this floor, yet there is one thing certain; they are posted as to what is going on in Congress, and in my opinion, the Member who votes to destroy this legislation might just as well get ready for a free trip up Salt

Creek. One-half of the expense necessary to provide rural rehabilitation and education is either defrayed by the State or the community served. This kind of training extends to the underprivileged a service that can not be given in any other way; and regardless of what action the Economy Committee takes, I am not going to vote to destroy a system of education that is producing more good for the amount of money expended than anything else provided by the Government.

The bill that is now pending provides that the sum of $10,000,000 shall be expended to patch up several old battleships. It is proposed to expend between seventy-five and one hundred million dollars for such purposes. As I view it, such ships are already in the obsolescent class and will never again be used in a war with a major nation. If the appropriation committee that has jurisdiction over this subject wants to perform a real service for the Nation this item could be stricken from the bill, and it alone would be sufficient to take care of all the expense in connection with rural education. I have consistently spoken and voted against all such extravagant expenditures, and I venture to assert that it will only be a little while until these ships that have been patched up will be assigned to the scrap heap, as already over $11,000,000 expended for this same purpose has gone this route. [Applause.]

I desire to briefly discuss some of the important bills that have been enacted into law since I have been a Member of this House. In order that everyone may be posted as to the procedure that governs every matter in Congress, I will state that the party in power always is in full control of the legislative program, and, as a rule, no bill can become a law unless it is approved by the leaders of such party. The Democratic Party has not been in power since the elections of 1920, and at present both the Senate and the executive branch are under the control of the Republican Party. Therefore one can readily understand that during the period from 1920 up to date, it has been a rare occasion that a bill enacted into law carried the name of any Member of Congress unless he was affiliated with the dominant party.

During the present session I have introduced a number of bills, some of which are as follows:

A bill to bring about consolidation in every bureau of the Government for the purpose of preventing duplication and waste, which is in line with the work now being proposed by the Economy Committee.

A bill to regulate the sale of foreign securities, making it impossible to offer the same for sale to our people until approved by a governmental agency.

A bill to put into effect regulations governing the sale of all kinds of securities, thereby protecting the innocent investor so that his life earnings would not be wasted.

A bill to guarantee deposits in member banks of the Federal reserve system, which would provide the same kind of safety as is required on deposits made by States, counties, cities, and the Federal Government.

A bill making school warrants eligible for security in obtaining funds from the Secretary of the Treasury and providing that a separate issue of currency might be issued for this purpose.

A bill providing for payment to the ex-service men of the last half of their bonus, realizing that they are in more need at the present time than ever before.

A bill reducing the salaries of Government officials in the higher brackets, including Members of Congress.

A bill providing hospital facilities in private institutions for World War veterans when Government space is not available, thereby making it possible for many individuals to receive treatment near their homes.

I am especially interested in everything that relates to agriculture, realizing that the true source of all wealth is in the ground. The greatest evil that our farmers have had to put up with is the practice of selling futures on the different stock exchanges, thereby forcing abnormal prices, which in many instances have resulted in disaster. I have pending a bill before the Agriculture Committee, which would make it a punishable offense for anyone to sell such a future contract on certain farm products unless there is an actual delivery from the seller to the buyer, and giving the Secretary of Agriculture authority to make the necessary rules and regulations to govern such transactions. The results obtained by the Farm Board in speculating with the people's money on wheat and cotton has cost this Government millions of dollars, and has practically bankrupted many kinds of farm institutions. Everyone realizes the truth of this statement, even the Federal Farm Board, and they have given out information to the effect that a mistake was made and such a policy has been abandoned.

The price of commodities will have to be raised if the farmer is to survive. My bill would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to select the products that are to be sold at a price not less than the cost of production and cause the kind of regulations to be put into effect, based upon supply and demand, to the extent that if there was a surplus produced over the domestic supply such surplus would be withheld from the market until it could be sold without disturbing existing conditions. Realizing the need of proper support for agriculture and those who till the soil, at the beginning of this session I met with the Oklahoma delegation for the purpose of working out a bill, and when the same was completed, at my request it was introduced by Congressman SWANK, as he at one time served on the Committee on Agriculture. This was a delegation measure, as it was our earnest desire to bring about some kind of relief along this line. I have added one new feature to this legislation, and I am sure that the enactment of this law will do more to bolster up agriculture than anything else that can be done.

One of the first bills that I assisted in passing was what is known as the good roads act. It put into effect a new policy, which has resulted in the construction of splendid highways throughout the Nation. The people who reside in the country have been the most benefited, as they now enjoy practically the same priviliges as those who reside in the city. In Oklahoma the sum of $2,555,034.34 was made available to be expended in 1932, and no more important legislation has been enacted into a law than this bill.

Another measure that has been especially beneficial, and one that I supported, is the rural credits legislation and the establishment of farm-loan banks, enabling farmers to borrow money at a low rate of interest. The first loan I ever obtained on a farm carried a rate of interest of 12½ per cent. The result was I got the loan and the mortgage company got the farm.

Our standard of living is so high that immigrants from every country in the world were flocking to the United States before the restricted immigration bill was enacted into a law. This measure was completed during my service, and is one of the most beneficial acts on our statutes, as it has stopped this Nation from being a dumping ground for many that could be classed as undesirable.

At the beginning of my service our rural-mail system was in its infancy. I point with pride to the efficient service that is now being given to the patrons, and it has been my privilege to aid in the passage of many bills that have made this result possible.

I have voted against a number of high tariff bills, realizing that the provisions contained in the same discriminate in favor of the big manufacturing interests and to the detriment of our farmers and consumers of the West and South. Such measures did much to destroy our foreign markets, thereby reducing prices on farm products and encouraging reprisals or retaliatory tariff acts by foreign governments, which have had much to do with the present depression.

I voted against all of the foreign-debt settlements for the reason over $10,000,000,000 was either canceled or omitted by such laws. I voted against the moratorium act, which postponed payments amounting to $252,000,000, realizing that the more foreign countries were excused from paying their obligations the more they expended on armaments and being against any policy that would not provide proper relief for our own people.

All during my service I have appreciated the patriotic aid given to our country by the ex-service men of all wars. Active support has been given to the various rehabilitation measures in their behalf, and I am now favoring the payment of the last half of the soldiers' bonus on the grounds that it would do more to increase the supply of currency and to bring relief to every section of the country than anything else.

One of the most iniquitous measures that was ever presented in the way of a revenue bearing bill was the so-called sales tax. If it had been put into effect a policy would have been established that might have remained with us for all time to come. I take the position that the more fortunate in life should be willing to pay a proportionate share of the expense of maintaining this Government and that the present deficit should be raised by increasing the amount collected from incomes in the higher brackets, increasing the inheritance tax, the gift tax, and by excess-profit taxes sufficiently to take care of the needs of the country. I am pleased that the principle of a sales tax was defeated, and I am sure that by reducing expenditures, abolishing useless bureaus, consolidating different departments, and reducing salaries it will be possible to provide a sufficient amount of money to defray the expenses of the Government.

I point with pride to other legislation which I have favored and aided in the passage of during my tenure in office:

War excess-profits tax, which caused some of the World War profiteers to help bear the expense of the Government.

The agricultural extension acts, which provide benefits to our rural sections of the Nation.

Federal warehouse and uniform cotton and grain grading acts, which brought about certain standardizations.

Federal Employment Bureau, which has rendered fine service in obtaining employment for many.

Women's and Children's Bureaus in the Department of Labor, which dispense much useful information covering many subjects relating to the home.

War risk insurance acts, which furnished protection to the dependents of the ex-service men.

Packers' and stockyards' inspection act, which has thrown many safeguards around meat for human consumption.

Disabled veterans' compensation act, which provides financial help to those injured while performing service in the World War and to their dependents.

Veterans' non-service connected disability act, which takes care of the unfortunates who are incapacitated to the extent they can not earn a livelihood.

Drought and storm relief legislation, which has aided thousands of our citizens who found themselves destitute because of conditions they could not control.

In addition to the above I have supported every rehabilitation measure during the present session of Congress, having in mind that the Nation was suffering from an industrial panic and that if relief had not been granted there would have been a financial crash that would have paralyzed nearly every kind of industry.

Congress, in many respects, is similar to an educational institution. One begins at the bottom and gradually works up. Experience and acquaintance are essential and can not be overlooked, and those who have the longest service are as a rule the ones who acquire the greatest amount of responsibility. The States that have profited the most are the ones that have recognized these principles, and I am grateful to the splendid citizens of the seventh congressional district for the constant support they have given me year after year, as such is responsible for the many positions of honor and trust that I now hold.

I have lived in what is now Oklahoma for the past 30 years. I have had experience as a homesteader and know something of the hardships that our early pioneers went through. It has been my constant aim at all times to render the best assistance possible to my fellow men. I have gone forward in the performance of my congressional duties with the thought of rendering to the people whom I have the honor to represent the kind of aid that would reflect credit upon them. I am proud of the confidence that has been bestowed upon me by my colleagues, and I shall be grateful if this record will meet the approval of those who have cooperated with me in such a fine way.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ELLZEY] such time as he desires.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Mr. ELLZEY. Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be made in behalf of vocational education and for thousands of American girls and boys who are now being educated in the rural schools of the Nation. This type of educational institution, better known as the consolidated school, for several years has been receiving Federal aid for vocational education.

Since becoming a Member of Congress I have listened attentively and with keen interest to many speeches that offered a sympathetic sentiment for the American farmer. Yes, that splendid desire to help him comes from practically every section of the Nation. Yet in the face of these facts the President of the Nation has made the ill-advised recommendation to the Economy Committee that Federal aid for vocational education be suspended for one year. Surely the gentleman is misguided as to its far-reaching and most disastrous results to the American farmer. Let us analyze this proposal.

Several years ago Congress passed a law which proposed to appropriate Federal funds for the support of vocational education throughout the Nation. The plan provided for a distribution of funds thus appropriated to the individual States. Each State was to appropriate an amount equal to the sum secured from the Federal Government. With such assurance from the Federal and State Governments—and may I term it a contract between them—the individual school districts proceeded to make preparations for a better educational program for their children. The new type of school became known as the Smith-Hughes school.

Then the rural citizens—if you please, that fine class of honest American citizens known as farmers—at a great expense erected school buildings. They equipped their schools with modern departments of agriculture, home economics, and manual training. The trustees of these schools demanded well-trained instructors to give vocational guidance to their children.

In view of these facts, which can not be disputed, it would be unfair to accept this recommendation. Surely it breaks faith with the farmer and violates a contract with him. Furthermore, it is unfair because it would probably force the State to withdraw support in case Federal aid is suspended.

This proposal, as recommended by the President, is false economy. Is it economy to say to the farmers that the Government will save money for the National Treasury, and at the same time force the farmers to raise additional funds to educate their children? Such a move will probably close the doors of Smith-Hughes schools next session. Is that economy? My conception of real economy was well demonstrated in the House when we voted recently for an appropriation bill that reduced expenditures approximately $55,000,000. Another fine example of economy was shown in our vote to eliminate an appropriation for the completion of one bridge in the District of Columbia in the sum of approximately $840,000. This expenditure was largely for ornamental purposes. For the sake of economy, why did not the President make the two recommendations mentioned above to the Economy Committee? I shall gladly vote for a reduction of my own salary, but I do believe the American children should be protected. [Applause.]

The department of vocational education in my State of Mississippi is certainly in sympathy with the spirit of rigid economy. This department went before the appropriation committees of the State legislature and requested a 25 per cent reduction. Furthermore, appreciating the serious economic situation facing us, I have been advised that no efforts were made by this State department urging Congress to pass the George-Reed bill, 1929, for vocational education. This bill provided for an increase of $500,000 for vocational education. Surely these people are sympathetic.

The Federal appropriation for vocational education goes directly to the farmers. In my candid opinion, it is one of the few appropriations that very largely reaches its correct destination.

Let me urge the Members of the House to oppose this recommendation for the following reasons:

First. It is unfair to the American farmers and their children, because it breaks a contract with them. With millions of dollars invested in equipment, many schools would be forced to close.

Second. Such a plan is false economy, because in attempting to save money for the Federal Treasury, at the same time it forces the American farmer to raise vast sums of money for schools.

Third. This plan would probably force the farmers of the Nation to close the doors of a majority of Smith-Hughes schools.

(1) State aid would be withdrawn when Federal aid ceased.

(2) The farmers can not raise school funds with prices of agricultural commodities at rock bottom.

Please note facts relative to vocational education as they apply to Mississippi, namely:

First. There are 442 vocational departments in the high schools of Mississippi which are dependent on Federal aid for existence.

Second. Of the above number there are 194 departments of vocational agriculture—the only vocational education available to Mississippi rural boys.

Third. During the year ending 1931 there was a total enrollment of 22,957 in the vocational classes of these schools.

Fourth. Of this total there were 15,068 enrolled in vocational agriculture.

Fifth. The amount of Federal money expended in Mississippi in these schools in 1931 was $155,276.38.

Sixth. The profits made by those enrolled in classes of vocational agriculture was approximately twice the total cost of the instruction, including Federal, State, and local funds.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to a very serious state of affairs that now exists. We have received word that the Committee on Economy and the President are absolutely floundering around in a maze of statements; that they are lost in a sea of words. I thought it was the duty of the House to take some action on this important matter. We owe it to them to help them out of their dilemma. I rose in these few minutes to suggest to the House that we appoint a clarification committee or a coordinating committee, in order that they may answer the S O S that has been sent out and try to locate where our distinguished President and the committee are now floundering. [Laughter.] Ordinarily when an S O S is sent out, help is sent from various life-saving stations and from headquarters of salvage-operating companies.

So I say we ought to take cognizance of this state of affairs and endeavor to send out pilots to properly guide the committee and the President to a safe harbor. [Laughter.]

As we all know, Federal employees are a distinctive arm of our service. We can not discharge the functions of government without them, and, indeed, they are entitled to proper consideration at our hands. It has been said that the cost of living has gone down. In some slight instances, yes; but as was illustrated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] a while ago, the cost of professional services has not gone down. You are paying the same price to the doctor, to the optician, to the oculist, to the dentist, to the druggist, to the lawyer, and to practically every form of professional service that is included in our daily routine. I think, therefore, that the fact that a few cents be taken off the cost of bread or milk or meat or vegetables ought not to have a very serious effect upon our deliberations in considering the salaries of our splendid staff of Federal employees.

I believe also that by discussing these things we come to a realization of them. Gentlemen ought not to go back home with an alibi to their people that they did not know what it was all about. Take the time to be informed that you may know what these various plans are, and if they are presented to us eventually—that is, if the life-saving committee I suggested rescues them—I think we should find out what there is in the various bills. They are various; they are multitudinous. Each day brings forth a new one. Perhaps it may be the means of better information; perhaps it may be the result of having the advice of an expert. All these things, however, will require our careful consideration; and if these distinguished committees are so befogged and befuddled that they are unable to arrive at any particular or definite conclusion, what will be our plight when the plans are presented to us and we do not have time to properly consider them? Therefore, I say, beware of the plans that may be presented here by the various salary cutters. [Applause.]

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time in view of some statements which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made a few moments ago in regard to J. O'C. Roberts, who is the solicitor of the Veterans' Bureau. For the first six years of the life of the Veterans' Committee of the House I was a member of it, and I think three times during that period I was assigned on the subcommittee to draft a general legislative bill to bring to this House. Not only in the testimony given to the committee on which it might base its action but during the deliberations of that committee Mr. Roberts was assigned the task of assisting as the legal adviser from the Veterans' Bureau. I say without hesitation that I think Joe Roberts is the most efficient man on his job that I have found in the Government service since I have been in Washington. [Applause.] I say that with no apology to anybody. I am not intimate with him; I have never asked him for a favor. I have asked him for information, and I have always gotten the authentic kind and none other. I do think if the gentleman from Texas is basing his attack on information that he is acting on with regard to Mr. Roberts, possibly there may be some factionalism on the part of those who are furnishing him that information.

Mr. BLANTON. I have not denied that he is a good man and a gentleman. I question only his legal experience and ability as a lawyer.

Mr. BROWNING. I decline to yield to the gentleman from Texas. He was pushed for time and could not yield to me, and I have only five minutes. I am talking about his legal ability in the job that he is in. It has been my understanding from the beginning that the Department of Justice is the responsible authority for trying these cases against the Government. Usually a man is assigned from the Veterans' Bureau to assist the district attorney; and if the district attorney's office anywhere in this country does not have a qualified man to try a lawsuit, then you need not blame the solicitor of the Veterans' Bureau. In my judgment, Mr. Roberts is one of the most efficient men the Government has and one of the best fitted in his place, and I say that from my experience and observation with him.

I could not help being a bit amused at the fine bill of health the gentleman gave to Mr. Arnold. I have no grievance to express toward Mr. Arnold, but I remind the gentleman from Texas that Mr. Arnold was the guardianship officer under whom Mr. Frederick Fenning was operating at the time the gentleman from Texas performed so splendid a service in digging up Mr. Fenning's record; and when Mr. Arnold came before our committee, he declined to give any information with regard to the operations of Mr. Fenning; and I am somewhat surprised that the gentleman from Texas would now undertake to belittle the qualifications for his present job of a man as strong as J. O'C. Roberts and then be willing to give a clean bill of health to a man like Mr. Arnold.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not give him a clean bill of health. I merely said that he is a lawyer.

Mr. BROWNING. Unless the gentleman's remarks are absolutely deleted, it will show that he picked him out as the one lawyer in the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, he might be a good lawyer and yet use his wits and experience for a wrong purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly the gentleman from Texas did not mean to infer that in his statement to the House a few moments ago.

Mr. BROWNING. I am not undertaking to infer that Mr. Arnold is crooked.

Mr. SIMMONS. I mean the gentleman from Texas. He did not infer anything of that kind.

Mr. BLANTON. I merely said that he was a good lawyer.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand now that the gentleman from Texas claims that a good lawyer and a crooked lawyer may be the same thing. I disagree with him.

Mr. BROWNING. Under those circumstances I yield for a short statement to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. The only reference I made here to him was that he was a lawyer. He is a lawyer.

Mr. BROWNING. The gentleman does not think anybody can be a good lawyer who does not have a good character, does he? I do not. He might be an able lawyer and not good. I am not questioning his character.

Mr. BLANTON. One of the greatest lawyers in the United States is now defending a meritorious case in a foreign country, and he has kept more crooks of national reputation from getting their just deserts than possibly all of the other great criminal lawyers put together. Instead of saying that he was a good lawyer, I should have said a "shrewd" lawyer.

Mr. BROWNING. I do not want to leave it in the RECORD that the gentleman reflects on a man's character and then says he is a good lawyer. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, the particular matters claiming the attention of Congress at this time with reference to a great many of the cross currents of economies must be met, and I wish to refer to one of those measures briefly. That is that economy proposed by the President, and I understand has been proposed by some of the members of the Economy Committee, to discontinue vocational education as furnished by the Federal Government in cooperation with the States. If I know the sentiment of this House and of the country, I believe I can say that no such measure as this is economy. It is false economy, and I do not believe this House will stand for any discontinuance of that valuable work.

If time permitted, I would attempt to show how far-reaching it is, and how many rural high schools of this country, where they never had an opportunity for education before, are built up around this very work. Doing away with this kind of work would cause those schools to be abandoned, and in many instances would break up communities. I think it is some of the most valuable work the Government does. In fact, I think it is the outstanding work of the Department of Agriculture; and I hope that if that measure is brought before this House, it will be defeated, and I shall do all I can to help defeat it. I am glad that we are informed that our committee is coming more and more to see the light. I presented this matter to our distinguished chairman upon its inception, and he was kind enough to give me the assurance that he would consider the matter very carefully. And I certainly hope no such legislation is reported to this House. If so, we should defeat this move, as I see it.

I am glad to give for the benefit of the RECORD some valuable information which I have not only learned at first-hand but much of which has been furnished me by distinguished educators and thousands of citizens of my district and my State. I want to speak for them briefly at this time and incorporate in the RECORD their constructive views and reasons for continuing this work.

Discontinuance of this work would mean to my State alone—and I am sure the other 47 States of the Union, in proportion—the discontinuance of 1,381 vocational classes. It would deprive 12,671 adult persons of evening and part-time training which they are now taking to better equip themselves to live and serve. It would affect thousands of other adults at various angles of life. It would result in closing of more than 350 departments, housed in quarters and new buildings constructed in many instances by communities where this construction was a great financial sacrifice, and break faith with them. It would destroy the evening program for adult farmers. It would result in disbanding of the Future Farmers of America in my State, which would directly affect 4,308 high-school boys. It would deprive the Alabama farmers of a type of training which they have long wished for and needed, relative to their home and farm problems. It would affect the teaching of home economics, which prepares thousands of our girls for home-keeping and home-loving and the many things of health and economics on which the successful and happy home depends. It would eliminate a great deal of inspiration for home-making and home-owning, which comes through this program and this work.

In addition to the professional work, it will do away with the evening industrial program, which in one county in my State has 50 classes. It would take immeasurable benefits from the trade schools in my State. It would do away with the training of foremen and leaders in 41 industrial plants in my State. It would destroy the vocational program in seven of the leading cities of my State, as well as the destruction of textile training in the various centers of textile industry, and vitally affect the institutes for the deaf, blind, and so on, and would withdraw complete support from the vocational teaching training classes in my State.

These are some of the facts that I give for the RECORD, with the hope that we may think on these things, and that every Member of Congress may resolve that no such program as this, if reported to the House, will pass. I, for one, as a former school administrator, where under my observation and administration this valuable work was done, believe in the work and feel that nothing has been proposed in this Congress since I have been a Member that would do more to disrupt farm communities and industrial programs and retard development of our communities than this proposed move. Too, as said before, it would be complete breaking of faith with those who have sacrificed to bring this work to their communities. I sincerely hope that the committee will recommend the continuance of this work and will not recommend any undue curtailment of vocational education.

I am glad to have this opportunity to speak for the tens of thousands of citizens in my State who are interested in this work and have seen its benefits.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] five minutes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself to one phase of the naval appropriation bill, which will soon be read under the 5-minute rule.

To-morrow we will reach the proposal to reduce the naval flying pay, and I am much concerned that that will mean a breakdown of all the work that has gone forward for the last 10 years to build up a real aviation service in both the Army and the Navy.

I addressed a communication to the Assistant Secretary of War as to the effects of a similar proposal on Army aviation, and I wish to read his letter, which is very brief, in reply. I may say that I was amazed to find that neither the Army nor the Navy had been called before either the Appropriations Subcommittee of the Army or the Navy to discuss this question of a reduction in flying pay. The reduction proposed has been arbitrarily made without any testimony as to its possible effects.

The letter from the Assistant Secretary of War reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 21, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT L. BACON,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BACON: I am very glad to answer your inquiry about my opinion of the effect of the proposed $1,100 limitation on the flying pay of Army Air Corps officers.

In my judgment, it will very seriously undermine the morale of our pilots who are engaged in the most hazardous of all peacetime governmental occupations. Since last July 1, 40 of our personnel have lost their lives in military flying.

It is grossly unfair that service pilots above all others should be singled out for special sacrifices.

This proposition would seriously reduce the flying pay of many lieutenants, all captains, and officers of higher grades. That includes all war-time pilots. Service pilots to-day are paid a lower rate than that received by pilots doing comparable but less hazardous flying in civil life. Sound principles of leadership require those in command to lead their air troops in combat flying in peace and in war. Our tables of organization call, whenever possible, upon captains to lead flights; majors, squadrons; lieutenant-colonels, groups; and colonels, wings. This responsibility requires experience, and that is only obtained with the passage of time in actual air operations. Meanwhile age increases the flying risks as the physical reactions slow down, and at the same time the ordinary financial responsibilities of life grow more burdensome.

If the basic idea of this limitation is economy, I am certain that such an end will not be attained. It will inevitably drive many of our key men out of flying. These men will be replaced by relatively inexperienced ones. This means inexperienced leadership with a resultant increase in the number of crashes, which will in turn result in increased costs to the Government, rather than decreased costs. With airplanes now costing up to $100,000 each, it would appear to me to be extremely poor policy to permit control of this equipment to fall into the hands of inexperienced and young men whose judgment has not as yet had time to mature.

Every one of our tactical groups in the field to-day is commanded by a field officer. He is not only technically in command but actually leads his group in all flying maneuvers and operations, incurring the same risks as the last man in each element, and more too, because of his age. I have in mind, for example, the major in command of the first pursuit group. Flying No. 1 in a close formation of some 60 planes, he daily leads them in vertical power dives of some 10,000 feet, in which the speed approaches 300 miles an hour. I also have in mind the major general, now chief of the Army Air Corps, who flies several hundred hours every year, never with an observer, but piloting himself, and who recently personally led the Army maneuvers of some 600 Army planes.

It has been said that there are individual abuses of flying pay. Even if that be true, it is no reason why an injustice should be done to those who daily risk their lives preparing the Nation for defense. I personally give my assurance that if such abuses are brought to the attention of the War Department they will be corrected forthwith.

I earnestly hope that this limitation will not be imposed.

Sincerely yours,

F. TRUBEE DAVISON,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to this letter which the Assistant Secretary of War has written, at my request he has sent me certain tables showing the fatalities in the Army Air Corps Service in the past few years. I ask unanimous consent to include those tables and some explanations with them in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON]?

There was no objection.

The tables referred to are as follows:

[Extract from report of Appropriations Committee, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 19, 1932, p. 8505]

It is among such junior officers and student flyers that the principal hazards lie. * * *

The reason for selecting $1,100 as the maximum amount for flying pay is because that it is the maximum rate now being received by the larger portion of the junior officer aviators.

The following statistics show that the principal hazards are not confined to the class drawing $1,100 or less:

SUMMARY

Moral obligation: Officers have entered this hazardous profession in expectation that the rates provided would be continued.

Hazard: The hazards to the military flyer are much greater than the hazards to the commercial flyer.

Fatality: The fatality rate due to aviation accident is three times the fatality rate due to all other causes, including disease.

Insurance rate: Insurance companies have raised the rate of extra premium for aviation risk, and most companies will not insure aviators.

Insurance cost: The cost of proper insurance increases with age and family responsibilities and is equal to more than half the present flight pay.

Commercial pilots: Are paid more than military pilots.

Retired pay: Senior Air Corps officers jeopardize a retirement pay three times greater than the flight pay they receive in excess of the extra aviation insurance premiums.

Flying by senior officers: Senior officers fly with their organizations. All in turn are assigned to organizations. When not with organizations, most of them fly the maximum they can be required to fly.

All officers: The morale of all officers will be affected by a cut.

Savings: The savings to be obtained by a cut in the maximum rates are small, while the injury to morale and efficiency will be great.

Conclusion: No reduction in flying-pay rates should be made.

The proposition to reduce flying pay is uneconomical and is a breach of contract with the officers who adopted and remained in a hazardous profession in the belief that the Government would keep faith with them in the matter of continuing the extra compensation for this hazardous profession. Those who had faith in this implied contract find themselves now no longer fitted for adopting another profession in which the remuneration would be what they had believed the Government would provide.

Comparison with commercial aviation: It is incorrect to compare military aviation with commercial aviation with respect to the hazards involved. The commercial flyer flies over fixed routes, over established airways dotted with emergency landing fields at frequent intervals, guided by lights and marked airways, and kept informed of weather conditions by radio. The military flyer has none of these advantages. He must be trained to fly over uncharted courses in adverse weather conditions. He carries high explosives. He dives and fires on targets, practicing the accurate use of his machine guns. He must practice dangerous maneuvers, subjecting the airplane to great stresses. His airplanes are being designed to operate at greater speeds. He must control his airplane not only when flying alone but when flying in close formation while executing difficult maneuvers. He must practice flying in formation at extremely low altitudes, as attack aviation would maneuver in the face of the enemy. He must operate at high altitudes where additional supplies of oxygen must be furnished. He frequently must resort to the use of a parachute, and during all this flying he undergoes a great physical and mental strain. Decreases in the accident rate of military flying are apparent rather than real. The Air Corps in its development of military aviation is entering a period of greater hazard where much more will be required of material and personnel. Further increases in the reliability of engines and in mechanical construction will not greatly decrease this extra hazard. The development of military aviation to its maximum efficiency will increase this hazard.

Fatality rate: Statistics with respect to fatalities among personnel of the Air Corps on active service indicate a maximum annual rate of 3.5 per cent, a minimum annual rate of 1 per cent, and an average annual rate of 1.9 per cent. The present annual rate is over 2 per cent and is increasing. The best military training demands that the military personnel be capable of obtaining the maximum performance and maneuver ability from their equipment, and the attainment of these maximums will increase the hazards to such an extent that the annual rate of fatalities from aviation accidents may be predicted to be 3 per cent. The annual expected rate of fatality due to aviation accidents alone is three times the normal expected average fatality rate among men between the ages of 25 and 50.

Extra premium: The 3 per cent annual fatality aviation accident rate will require an extra annual insurance premium of over $30 per thousand. The total fatalities among commissioned personnel in the Air Corps during the last five years has been 3.77 times the fatality rate in the rest of the Army.

Debt: Air Corps officers have made commitments based on the expectation that the prescribed flying pay will be continued. It is quite a serious matter to suddenly withdraw this pay. Such action will not only cause a reduction in morale, due to a lowered standard of living thereby enforced, but will also cause a serious reduction in morale due to an officer being suddenly plunged into debt because of insufficient pay to take care of commitments already undertaken.

Insurance carried: Among these commitments is the question of insurance. Due to the extra hazard, Air Corps officers have made extensive commitments with reference to insurance. One officer has over $60,000, some officers have $50,000 insurance, many officers have $40,000 insurance, and still a larger percentage have lesser amounts. On all insurance, except Government insurance, unless an officer has been extremely lucky in obtaining insurance prior to his entering the aviation profession, an additional premium for flight hazard is required. This premium is being increased.

Cost of insurance: The additional premium for aviation risk is now $25 per thousand in the Prudential Insurance Co., which company permits only $10,000 worth of such insurance to be taken. The additional premium is $12 per thousand in the Travelers Insurance Co., which company likewise permits only $10,000 worth of insurance to be taken and permits no insurance of a pilot who has had less than 400 hours' experience. Insurance for aviators is not obtainable in most of the other companies. The average annual premium payments by Air Corps officers for straight life insurance are at the rate of $10 to $15 per thousand for $10,000 worth of Government insurance; at the rate of $15 to $20 per thousand on $30,000 private insurance, without extra premium for flying risk, and $10 to $25 per thousand additional premium for flying risk on $30,000 insurance in private companies, depending upon whether he took his insurance at the time when private companies were offering this insurance at $10 per thousand extra premium, or whether he took his insurance at a later date. This makes a total of from $850 to $1,500 annual premium, depending on age. These are commitments already made in the understanding that flying pay would be continued. The commitments will still remain necessary, irrespective of the continuation of flying pay.

Yield from insurance: There are some who, perhaps, think that $40,000 worth of insurance is an excessive amount of insurance for an officer with a family to carry, but when it is considered that it is difficult to make safe investments at any figure in excess of 5 per cent, which 5 per cent would yield only $2,000 per year, and which investments may not prove to be as safe as is anticipated, it is not believed that any normal man with normal feelings of responsibility for his family should consider carrying any lesser amount.

Pay of commercial pilots versus military pilots: The economic necessity of flying pay to fill the complement of Air Corps officers may be analyzed by comparison with pay of pilots in commercial aviation. The pay of pilots of the Boeing Air Transport was $781 per month; of the Pacific Air Transport, $723 per month; and of the Varney Air Lines, $696 per month in May, 1931. These rates are still continued. The Ludington Air Line was paying a straight salary of $500 per month, and is now paying the same amount, except that the pay is at the rate of 5½ cents a mile with $350 a month guaranteed. The average monthly pay of Air Corps officers, including base pay, flying pay, and all allowances will be in 1933, $400.63; of this amount $113.33 is flying pay. The Government is now obtaining its pilots very cheaply in spite of the added risk of military aviation.

Reasons for percentage schedule: The payment for the extra hazard should be made in amounts gradually increasing with age for the following reasons:

a. The compensation for extra hazard would otherwise be a smaller proportion of the income and thus furnish a lesser incentive for undertaking the hazardous duty.

b. An officer of 30 years' service may retire on an income of $359.37 per month. An officer of 23 years' service would retire, if permitted, on an income of $229 per month. It is not fair to ask them to jeopardize this income for their dependents by taking a risk two to three times as great as would otherwise be incurred and only recompense them by flight pay which may barely pay the insurance necessary to provide a fraction of the income which could be obtained by retirement.

Distribution of pay to grade: At present distribution of flight pay to the various grades is as follows:

	Per cent
Lieutenants	65.9
Captains	20.42
Majors	9.57
Lieutenant colonels	2.52
Colonels	.78
Generals	.66

Eighty-six per cent of the total flight pay goes to captains and lieutenants.

Flying performed by higher grades: The officers in the higher grades of the Air Corps, who are assigned to the command of units, fly with their organizations. The officers in the higher grades not assigned to tactical units are required to fly a maximum consistent with the proper performance of their other duties. This amount of flying is being carefully supervised. Even though flying in some cases a lesser number of hours, additional risk is incurred for each hour flown because lack of practice increases the hazard. Administrative action is being taken to increase the flying done by administrative officers in order to reduce the accident rate and effect savings in the cost of the maintenance of the Air Corps. This action will be ineffective if such officers have their flying pay reduced. Since officers at one time serve on administrative duties and at another time on tactical assignments, it is important that all officers maintain a proficiency in piloting which will not require the expense of a refresher course. It is likewise essential that all officers possess first-hand knowledge of the conditions of and requirements for equipment and training. It is unfair and uneconomical to penalize an individual because of a temporary period of reduced flying activity. This reduced flying activity has not been great in the past. Statistics show that the average officer in each grade on administrative duties is flying on an average over 50 per cent of the general average for the Air Corps.

Savings: A rough estimate shows that the savings in the 1933 estimate if the maximum rate of flight pay is reduced to $1,100 will be $467,482. This reduction in flight pay will be absorbed by the communities in which aviators are stationed and will effect a reduction in the business activity in these communities equal to at least five times the amount absorbed.

In view of the injustices which will result to a large number of Air Corps officers, and the adverse effect on the morale of all Air Corps officers, it is urgently recommended that no change be made which will reduce the present rates of flying pay.

FOLLOWING LIST OF FIELD OFFICERS WHO HAVE DIED AS RESULT OF AIRPLANE ACCIDENTS FROM 1918 TO 1931, INCLUSIVE

1918: Lieut. Col. H. J. Damm, Maj. O. J. Brindley, Maj. J. P. Mitchel, Maj. W. R. Ream (medical officer detailed to the Air Corps).

1919: Maj. D. M. Peterman, Lieut. Col. F. T. Dickman, Maj. J. F. Butts, Maj. H. M. Clark, Maj. Patrick Frissell, Maj. D. B. Crissy, Maj. W. A. Saunders, Col. T. F. Dodd.

1921: Maj. S. L. Wheeler, Lieut. Col. A. Miller.

1922: Maj. J. W. Simons, Maj. G. L. Gearhart, Maj. W. W. Vautsmier, Maj. J. G. Thornell.

1923: Maj. T. N. Duncan, Maj. E. L. Napier (medical officer detailed to the Air Corps).

1925: Maj. Lee O. Wright, Maj. C. C. Benedict.

1926: Maj. W. L. Moose.

1927: Maj. H. L. Geiger.

1929: Maj. Paul Bock.

1931: Maj. C. Hart (medical officer detailed to the Air Corps).

The total number of field officers killed between 1918 and 1931, inclusive, was 26.

The average number of field officers in the Air Corps per year during this period was 115.

The average percentage killed per year was 2 per cent.

FIELD OFFICERS RECEIVING INJURIES IN AIRPLANE ACCIDENTS, 1920–1931

1920: Maj. H. L. Watson.

1921: Maj. A. W. Robins, Maj. J. Y. Chisum, Maj. W. H. Frank.

1922: Maj. W. W. Winn, Maj. Maxwell Kirby.

1923: Maj. H. J. Knerr.

1925: Maj. J. H. Pirie, Lieut. Col. William Schauffler, Lieut. Col. W. G. McChord, Lieut. Col. C. H. Danforth.

1926: Maj. Jacob E. Fickel, Lieut. Col. Arthur G. Fisher, Maj. Harold Geiger, Maj. Millard F. Harmon, Maj. Horace M. Hickam, Maj. Orlando J. Posey (M. C.).

1929: Maj. Claude W. Cummings (M. C.).

1930: Lieut. Col. Oscar Westover, Maj. R. F. Longacre (M. C.), Maj. Reginald Ducat (M. C.).

The total number of field officers injured between 1920 and 1931, inclusive, was 21.

The average number of field officers in the Air Corps per year during this period was 115.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. There is another matter that I would like to suggest to the gentleman in connection with his remarks about aviation pay. If the Economy Committee brings in a bill of any kind reducing pay generally in the Army and Navy, these flight officers and men will be reduced twice. In other words, their pay will be practically cut in half.

Mr. BACON. That will probably be true. I want to call attention, however, to the fact that this matter will come before the committee to-morrow, and I hope to have the opportunity to discuss it further. What applies to the Army applies also to the Navy. For the past 10 years we have been trying to build up a group of majors, lieutenant colonels, and colonels who can actually fly, themselves, and lead their squadrons in flights. You can not push the junior aviators, but you can lead them. This proposed reduction will undo the work of years, will destroy morale, and will greatly reduce the efficiency of both Army and Navy aviation. I hope the Members will study the letter and tables furnished by Mr. Davison before finally making up their minds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY].

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I have just received by air mail a resolution passed by the lower house of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, protesting against the breaking of the implied contract which is involved in this naval bill, which contract the Federal Government had with the State of Michigan. This implied contract is broken by the endeavor to scrap the training ships on the Great Lakes.

The Common Council of the City of Detroit also passed a resolution unanimously, two days ago, protesting against this breach of faith. The city of Detroit was induced to put $1,000,000 into this training scheme, and the State of Michigan appropriated $600,000. Now the Federal Government is leaving the city and State flat.

When the bill is read I will offer an amendment to correct that breach of faith.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the House has passed the revenue bill, now pending before the Senate committee, which is estimated to raise approximately $1,250,000,000 additional revenue for a depleted Treasury. In addition to this every appropriation bill is being drastically reduced far below the Budget estimates approved and submitted by the President, in an effort to save approximately $250,000,000. The Economy Committee is working out a program for consideration as an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill, which will further reduce Government expenditures in a sum estimated to approximate $250,000,000. This will be a reduction in governmental expenditures, under the Budget estimates, of approximately $500,000,000.

The additional burdens of taxation in the revenue bill are being transferred to the taxpayers of our own country from the taxpayers of Europe, in part, because of the moratorium granted to European countries extending payments aggregating $252,000,000, not for one year, but over a period of 10 years.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] in a speech in the Senate stated that none of these extensions were asked for by European countries, but were made at the suggestion of "the invisible government," the international bankers, who have negotiated foreign loans in enormous amounts.

It was urged in support of the moratorium that it was necessary to save European countries from bankruptcy. The truth is if the budgets of the foreign countries had been reduced by the following amounts: Belgium 2.45 per cent of its budget, Great Britain 3.75 per cent, Italy 1.41 per cent, and France 2.65 per cent, it would not have been necessary to have extended the moratorium.

In our foreign-debt settlements, calculating the interest on a basis of 4¼ per cent instead of on what we actually received, we actually lost $10,705,618,006.90. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] estimates that, on the basis of present-worth value, we lost on these adjustments about $6,000,000,000. These foreign Governments are spending annually on naval and land armaments as follows: Great Britain, $678,051,247; France, $517,910,816; Italy, not including naval aviation, $350,057,884.

If our Government were more insistent upon having the foreign Governments pay their indebtedness to the United States, instead of making an effort to protect the international bankers, business conditions would improve and much of the taxation necessary to be imposed would not be necessary.

I did not support the moratorium and voted against the reduction or cancellation of all of these indebtednesses.

Every European nation indebted to the United States is maintaining a larger and more expensive navy and a land force than ever before, except during the World War. According to the reports from the War Department, the total organized force of France at the present time is 6,942,559 men; Italy, 5,985,597; Poland, 1,977,095; and Great Britain, 744,646.

These armed forces require enormous expenditures, not only by the European Governments, but added competitive expenditures by our own Government as well. The present naval appropriation bill, now under consideration, recommends for the coming fiscal year an expenditure of $326,340,466.

There is absolutely no excuse for any leniency on behalf of our Government in any further extensions, cancellations, or remissions, either of principal or interest, of the amount due us by these foreign Governments.

We have heard the statement made until it is threadbare, that they are not able to pay. This is refuted by the figures I have given showing the expenditures by the several European nations on naval armaments and land forces. Of course, if all of their money is spent in war preparations they have no money to spend on their legitimate obligations. The money due us is for the most part money advanced by us.

Many people really think that it would be such a financial strain that it would force the European countries into bankruptcy if they were urged to pay the amounts agreed upon in these several adjustments.

Does any person who reflects think if Italy reduced her budget 1.41 per cent and paid that amount to the United States on her indebtedness, this would force her into bankruptcy?

The truth is that the people of the country have been educated to believe that the payment of the small amounts due annually would force these Governments into bankruptcy, that they accept these statements without further investigation.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] made the astounding statement in the Senate, as shown on page 8493 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 19, 1932, in discussing these foreign-debt settlements:

> In one case a nation had made a payment to the Treasury Department; the moratorium was granted and the payment returned.

The press reports indicated at the time that a number of European nations had made arrangements through New York banks to pay the amounts of their indebtedness to the United States in the event that the moratorium resolution was not passed. When representatives of these banks were summoned before a Senate committee they side-stepped in every direction and evaded a direct reply. My candid judgment is that all of these Governments were making the necessary financial arrangements to meet the payments when they were to become due.

The taxpayers of our country should be made to understand that the additional tax burdens imposed upon them by reason of the revenue bill is because of our remission or cancellation of a large part of the debts which the foreign Governments owe.

Some weeks ago I emphasized the necessity for the reduction of governmental expenditures. Every city and town throughout the United States is earnestly revising its budget.

The estimated expenditures for the year 1932 of our Government, including the Postal Service, is $5,178,524,967.95. In 1887, under the last year of the first Cleveland administration, our governmental expenditures were $383,245,913.54.

I have repeatedly insisted that the best way to economize is to reduce expenditures. Congress has not received the assistance that it should have received from the heads of the departments and the various bureaus. During the course of preparation of the several appropriation bills the head of practically every bureau appeared before the subcommittee and fought any reduction. The President has at his service the Bureau of the Budget. It has a large clerical force. The appropriation for the Bureau of the Budget for the current year is $190,000. It has plenty of time and the facilities for investigating every bureau. Congress has a right to expect that the report of the Bureau of the Budget represents the most economical amount that each department or bureau could be run for without crippling the service. Frankly, Congress, since the creation of the Bureau of the Budget, has always reduced its estimates. Congress is sharply reducing its estimates in every appropriation bill for the coming fiscal year.

I want again to emphasize to the taxpayers of the country that when they are called upon to pay increased taxes, it is in a measure because we have, first remitted or canceled a large part of the indebtedness due us from foreign Governments, and, second, we granted a moratorium of $252,000,000 in December last. The people are led to believe that this moratorium was for only one year, when the truth is that this $252,000,000 is to be repaid spread over a period of 10 years.

If the Economy Committee finds it necessary, to balance the Budget, to present an amendment reducing the salaries of the employees of the Nation, each one should remember that this was in part due to a falling off in the revenues of the Government, but that it was for the most part due to the leniency shown to the taxpayers of the foreign countries.

Many unthinking people ask, What are you going to do about it? Are you going to war to collect these amounts due? No; of course not. You do not have to fight every individual to whom you present an account. You can insist on an account that is due being paid without personal difficulty. The same is true with foreign nations. Those familiar with history will recall that about 100 years ago now France was indebted to our Government, and it took the insistent demands of "Old Hickory" to bring that Government to terms, and the amount was adjusted and settled.

The credits we extended these foreign Governments were in good faith. We paid all of our own expenses during the World War. Our soldiers gave a good account of themselves. They assisted in winning a triumphant victory.

I am trying to emphasize that there is nothing to the old threadbare statement that the nations of Europe are unable to pay their indebtedness to us. The figures that I have given showing their expenditures refute this, and the childish argument made for the purpose of alarming our people that a firmer insistence on behalf of our Government for the collection of the balance of the indebtedness due from each of these nations would lead to war. Of course, everyone who is at all familiar with our diplomatic relations knows that it is not true; and if our Government had stood firm, a much larger part would have been paid—and to the extent of the amount paid the increased taxes we are imposing would be reduced.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER].

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I have asked this time for the purpose of making an announcement of the one hundredth anniversary of Hot Springs National Park, Ark. On April 25 the celebration will begin, and it extends from the 25th of April to the 1st day of May.

Opening of a local museum on Central Avenue, which will contain historical exhibits a century old, will take place Monday. The historical pageant to be staged on the Rix Stadium field the following day will depict the history of Hot Springs from the time the Indians discovered the hot healing waters, and will portray the modern city and national park. Not fewer than 1,500 persons, including school children, will take part.

The pageant was written by Harvey H. Haley, city superintendent of schools, who, assisted by V. E. Sammons, principal of the high school, and Mrs. Lelia Conte, principal of Jones School, will direct it. The pageant is divided into five régimes. The discovery of the hot springs by the Indians will be shown, with ceremonial dances by various tribes and a bow-and-arrow dance. Then comes a portrayal of the visit of De Soto in 1541. Battles between the Spanish explorers and Indians also will be shown.

The third régime shows the visit of French engineers, trappers, and explorers, and depicts the early days of La Salle, Marquette, De Tonti, and Jacques Cartier, and includes the march of Jesuit priests and a reenactment of the Louisiana Purchase.

In régime No. 4 there will be a revival of the historic covered wagons. Conflicts with Indians will be shown. The action of Congress in 1882 in creating the Government's first national park will be depicted. The social life of residents of that time also will be shown, and that episode will close with a Virginia reel and the dancing of the minuet. The grand finale will typify Hot Springs as it is to-day and will close with Uncle Sam standing before the "mike" of KTHS and broadcasting a centennial message to the Nation.

There are 46 hot springs located in the national park and they have an aggregate flow of 851,308 gallons daily. These springs are owned and controlled by the United States Government, which indorses the curative properties of the hot water, which ranges in temperature from 102° to 147° Fahrenheit.

The centennial parade will be held Thursday afternoon, April 28. It will consist of military units and many floats, each of which will portray a feature of national-park and municipal history. No commercial float will be permitted. Bands and musical organizations from other cities will intersperse the sections of the parade.

Scott D. Hamilton, manager of the chamber of commerce, who is directing the entire centennial celebration, said plans were being made to devote Friday to aviation, with an air circus as the feature.

Saturday, April 30, has been designated as "Pioneer Day." Residents of Hot Springs have been asked on that day to discard modern attire and appear in costumes such as were worn a century ago.

The Rotary Club has offered a prize to the best set of whiskers and flowing mustache to be grown by any now smooth-faced man residing in Hot Springs. The celebration will close Sunday, May 1, when the local Choral Club will give a concert in the auditorium.

I take this opportunity of inviting the Speaker of the House and all the Members of the House who might have a chance to do so to visit the great Hot Springs National Park during this period of time.

Hot Springs National Park is growing by leaps and bounds. The last census showed a 30 per cent increase of the population in 10 years. The great Army, Navy, and veterans' hospital, to cost a million and a half dollars, provided for by this Congress is now in the course of construction, and when completed will be one of the most beautiful and comfortable hospitals in the United States.

No more prosperous businesses and business men can be found in the United States than are at Hot Springs National Park. Each man is a booster for the park and works and looks forward with great pride as the city grows and expands its usefulness to the world, to the greatest national park in America.

No finer hotels can be found anywhere than we have in this great national park, located in the mountains, where the air is pure and where everything is conducive to good health. Besides that we have the greatest curative waters that nature has given to the world. Thousands of people afflicted with various diseases go to this great natural health resort each year and are cured, and go home and give praise to this wonderful contribution that nature has given to mankind in the healing waters of this great resort.

By the side of this great city flows the beautiful Ouachita River, which is formed by the mountain streams and is as pure as can be found anywhere. Within a very short distance of this city the Arkansas Power & Light Co. has built two great dams, at the cost of many millions of dollars, and this stream is harnessed and used for the generation of electricity for three or four States and furnishes power for the running of all electric machinery.

The building of these two great dams near this great national resort has formed two lakes of something like 10,000 acres—Lake Hamilton and Lake Catherine—which have been stocked with fish by the National and State Governments and which are now nationally known as one of the greatest resorts of this kind, and fish can be caught there practically the year around. The lakes are stocked with motor boats that are as fine as can be found on the Potomac or elsewhere.

So one seeking rest and pleasure can find no better place to go than Hot Springs National Park. You hear each night over the radio an invitation from this city—from KTHS, which means "Come to Hot Springs." Anyone accepting that invitation will repeat it annually.

The great Broadway of America leading from Broadway, New York, to San Diego, Calif., extends through this great national park, and you can drive from Broadway, New York, to Hot Springs National Park on concrete or hard-surfaced roads.

We are told in the Bible that there was a pool known as the pool of Bethesda, and that at certain times the waters of this great pool were troubled and those that were permitted to enter it were healed. The difference between this great Hot Springs water and the Bethesda pool is that the waters at Hot Springs are troubled at all times; and if you are so afflicted that you can not get in them yourselves, they have attendants at each of the bathhouses to help you enter and let you be cured.

When this session of Congress is over many of you will want a much-needed rest, and I take pleasure in inviting you to this great national resort to spend your time in resting and recuperating—and you would also be given the privilege of enjoying the sunshine and friendship of our southern people, who know how to meet and greet the stranger and make him feel welcome. [Applause.]

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORR].

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, it was my pleasure to hear the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] speaking to you on this Navy appropriation bill. The gentleman brought out the fact that the only letters he had received requesting further naval appropriations were from people who were interested in naval construction and in shipbuilding.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HORR. In just a moment.

Mr. FRENCH. The statement of the gentleman is not accurate at all. I did not make that statement.

Mr. HORR. If the gentleman did not make the statement, the RECORD will clarify what has been said.

I am proud of the fact that I do represent the Bremerton Navy Yard, which is in my district—a navy yard which built the cruiser Louisville for $1,000,000 less than the money appropriated for it, and 90 days under the time schedule.

Mr. THATCHER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HORR. I have only five minutes. If the gentleman can get me more time, I would be pleased to yield; but I have something else to say about the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. THATCHER. I want to supplement the statement the gentleman has just made.

Mr. HORR. If the gentleman has something to supplement my statement, I yield.

Mr. THATCHER. And the Louisville was built at a cost of about $2,500,000 less than the amount bid by private yards.

Mr. HORR. Yes; and it is very kind of the gentleman to make that statement.

May I call the attention of the gentlemen who are opposed to these appropriations for the Navy to the fact that it seems strange that the membership of this House, who have participated in warfare and who really know what it is to serve their country in combat, are not the people who are opposing the appropriations for Army and for Navy.

May I also call attention to the fact that the letters I am receiving are not from the people who are particularly or directly interested in the building of ships, but I am receiving letters from the great American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled American Veterans, various patriotic organizations, and from men who have been tested under fire and know what it is to go into combat unprepared.

Talk about your Geneva conference and your agreements of nations, and you must do it without a smile! Did you hear the distinguished gentleman a few minutes ago calling your attention to the Geneva conference? Have we not had enough of international conferences? In our dealings with other nations we have been, as the philosopher, Will Rogers, has said, the only nation that has never lost a war and the only one that has never won a conference.

I may say to you that on the Pacific coast the Navy to us is the first line of defense. China and Japan are a long way from the eastern coast, and you are not cognizant of warlike conditions and you do not sense them like my people out on the Pacific coast. We realize just what it means when the Orient begins to stir and warlike preparations are made in the Far East.

My good friend the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] opposes living up to the naval pact, and I give the gentleman credit for being sincere; but the gentleman comes from an inland State, a State that will never in all probability be invaded and, I hope, never know the real horrors of war; but may I call attention to the fact that at one time the gentleman was of the same thought as myself on maintaining the Navy to treaty strength? I refer you to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 15, 1922, and from page 5592 read you the statesmanlike utterance of this statesman from Idaho when the gentleman was speaking then upon the Navy bill and in favor of maintaining treaty strength. I now quote from his speech in 1922:

> The agreement of the conference carries dual responsibility—it carries responsibility to the nations of the world besides our own and it carries responsibility to our people. We must keep faith with foreign countries by refusing to go above the 5–5–3 agreement. We must keep faith with the people of the United States by refusing to go below, except as we may do so through the concert of supplemental agreements. This I hope we may be able to do.
> Gentlemen, I believe we have given you a bill that respects the treaty and that will challenge the admiration not only of our own people but of foreign countries as well.

The gentleman from Idaho could not present a better argument for the maintenance of our Navy up to the ratio prescribed in the London and Washington treaties, and I am surprised to-day to find him arguing against the maintenance of these treaty requirements.

In 1922 he gave voice to that which should prompt us all, namely, that we should keep faith with the American people by refusing to go below the treaty requirements. And, gentlemen of the House, we are not maintaining the ratio of these treaties, and the following chart will show that Japan and Great Britain both have exceeded their treaty allowances in comparison to the ratio prescribed for the United States. I submit the following table, which shows the increase in naval armament of Japan and Great Britain over the 10–10–6 ratio of the London treaty.

Ratio ships built and building

	United States		Great Britain		Japan		Treaty allowance
	1921	1931	1921	1931	1921	1931
Capital ships, battleships and cruisers	10	10	7.1	12.2	4.9	6.5	10-10-6
Aircraft carriers	10	10	45.0	12.6	8.0	7.5
Heavy cruisers	10	10	4.5	12.9	5.6	7.6	10-8.1-6
Light cruisers	10	10	35.0	23.6	11.2	12.8	10-13.4-7
Destroyers	10	10	6.8	6.9	2.1	11.9	10-10-7
Submarines	10	10	8.3	9.0	3.8	12.8	10-10-10
All combatant types	10	10	8.4	12.5	4.7	8.2	10-10-6

From this table we can readily see that in all combatant types the United States is maintaining its ratio of 10 and Great Britain has increased her ratio from 10, prescribed under the treaty, to 12.5, and that Japan has increased from her ratio of 6 to 8.2.

If we are to keep faith with the people of the United States, we must bring our Navy up to the standard of ratio prescribed.

I realize that we are in a depression; but when war comes considerations are not given to nations that are unprepared. Do the gentlemen realize that it takes 3½ years to build a battleship, 3 years to build a cruiser, from 3 to 3½ years to construct an aircraft carrier, 2 years for a destroyer, 2½ years for submarines; and do the gentlemen also know that 80 per cent of the money expended for the construction of naval armament is paid out for labor?

The London and Washington treaty ratios were without doubt based upon the present armaments of the nations that participated. What will be the condition of the United States in 1936, when these treaties terminate? We will without doubt be far below our quota; and it will be extremely difficult to insist upon our future proper naval development if we enter into another conference, which will without doubt be called, with a small Navy.

Economy in government is to be commended; but where appropriations are withheld to the extent that the military and naval prestige of our country is impaired, it is time to call a halt.

Has the gentleman taken into consideration in these curtailments the number of men who will be deprived of the opportunity of labor in the shipyards, both Government and privately owned, if this plan of Navy reduction is continued?

Do the gentlemen consider the subsidiary institutions of industry that manufacture materials that go into the construction of naval armament? Above all, has proper thought been given to the matter of adequate preparedness, which a reduction in Navy will destroy?

It is easy to talk of pacts, treaties, and agreements and peace conferences, but the people on the western coast of this great Republic feel keenly the lack of adequate preparedness when they consider the unrest in the Orient.

Do my colleagues realize just what war with the East would mean to my section of the country? Have they given thought to the fact that the first airplane raids would be directed against my home city of Seattle, the Puget Sound cities, and the navy yard at Bremerton?

Gentlemen, we feel keenly this lack of preparation and your failure to take into consideration our unpreparedness on the Pacific coast. The Navy is our first line of defense. Destroy it and you have destroyed any opportunity of offensive warfare. Do not, I implore you, invite invasion.

May I ask that you give your support to this necessary branch of national defense? [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

PAY, MISCELLANEOUS

For commissions and interest; transportation of funds, including the cost of insurance on shipments of money by registered mail when necessary; exchange; not to exceed $2,000 for the part-time or intermittent employment in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of such experts and at such rates of compensation as may be contracted for by and in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy; actual expenses of officers and midshipmen while on shore-patrol duty, including the hire of automobiles when necessary for the use of shore-patrol detachments; hire of launches or other small boats in Asiatic waters; for rent of buildings and offices not in navy yards; expenses of courts-martial, including law and reference books, prisoners and prisons, and courts of inquiry, boards of inspection, examining boards, with clerks, and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs; expenses of naval districts; not to exceed $15,000 for promoting accident prevention and safety for civilian employees in shore establishments of the Navy, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy; stationery and recording; religious books; newspapers and periodicals for the naval service; all advertising of the Naval Department and its bureaus (except advertising for recruits for the Bureau of Navigation); copying; ferriage, tolls; cost of suits; relief of vessels in distress; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks; quarantine expenses; reports; professional investigation; cost of special instruction at home in other than history, languages, civil government, and literature, and cost of special instruction abroad, including maintenance of students and attachés, and not to exceed $9,750 for allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 5, sec. 118a); information from abroad and at home, and the collection and classification thereof, and the expenditures for such purposes shall be accounted for specifically; all charges pertaining to the Navy Department and its bureaus for ice for the cooling of drinking water on shore (except at naval hospitals), and not to exceed $175,000 for telephone rentals and tolls, telegrams and cablegrams; postage, foreign and domestic, and post-office box rentals; for necessary expenses for interned persons and prisoners of war under the jurisdiction of Navy Department, including funeral expenses for such interned persons or prisoners of war as may die while under such jurisdiction, and for payment of claims for damages as provided in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year 1920, approved July 11, 1919 (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 600); and other necessary and incidental expenses; in all, $1,450,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the expense of any naval district in which there may be an active navy yard, naval training station, or naval operating base, unless the commandant of the naval district shall be also the commandant of one of such establishments: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the schedule of wages for civil employees in the field service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $530,000.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, before the word "not," insert the following: "For traveling expenses of civilian employees."

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, that was omitted through inadvertence.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. A few days ago we had a striking example of the policy of the House in cutting down the amount reported from the committee by 10 per cent, as suggested and acted upon by the Senate. We have received no intimation that that policy will not be followed when the other appropriation bills reach the Senate, and those heretofore passed by the House. I wish to inquire whether the subcommittee has taken into consideration the fact of the adopted policy of Congress, that the amount agreed upon in the various items by the House committee is going to be curtailed to the extent of 10 per cent?

Mr. AYRES. The committee has not taken that into consideration at all. We have gone along without regard to any action of that kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the committee in any of these items made any reduction in salary or compensation as compared with existing law?

Mr. AYRES. We have made no salary reductions at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Last year I thought it was the policy of Congress to curtail the pay of the office of personnel as based upon the quota allowed under existing law.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. AYRES. I yield.

Mr. FRENCH. I think the gentleman will recall that we carried the provision limiting the number of officers to which pay could be made on the basis of existing law, so as to prevent a large additional number going in as graduates from the academy.

Mr. AYRES. That is correct; but we made no reduction.

Mr. FRENCH. No reduction; it was a reduction from what would have been the case if it were not for the legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman support a proposition to cut down all of these appropriations 10 per cent, so that the House may have the credit of being in favor of economy, rather than when the bill comes from the Senate, ratifying the action of the Senate, thereby proclaiming to the country that the Senate is the economy body?

Mr. AYRES. No; we have cut just as far as it was possible to cut, I should say, without impairing the efficiency of the Navy.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there is still a reservation—if perchance the Senate does adopt the policy of cutting all appropriation bills 10 per cent, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House moves to concur in the Senate amendment, then will he not be only too happy to ratify the action of the Senate?

Mr. AYRES. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin is anticipating what the Senate might do.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the other day that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House was in favor of a policy of ratifying the action of the Senate in cutting down appropriations 10 per cent.

Mr. AYRES. I am not aware that he made such a declaration.

Mr. STAFFORD. He did not make the declaration then. It was by his conduct and action that he so declared the policy.

Mr. AYRES. I think that is a matter that we must determine if and when the question arises.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that some of the bills that have already passed the House could be cut down much more than 10 per cent without doing harm to the service. I am seeking information as to whether the committee in this particular made any efforts to cut down the salary allowance for the office of the Secretary.

Mr. AYRES. The gentleman will find as we go through the bill, if he will make comparisons with the current appropriations, that we have made considerable reductions all along the line.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have the report here of the appropriation for the Secretary's office last year, $215,520; budgetary estimates, $215,520; amount recommended in the present bill, $215,520. Ergo, it may be subject to a 10 per cent reduction as established by the Senate policy.

Mr. AYRES. I made the statement in the beginning that the committee did not disturb any salary items.

Mr. STAFFORD. But in the Interior Department appropriation bill we did cut by 10 per cent every salary item as it left the House.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Just for the benefit of the RECORD and that the public may be informed, I should like to know just what percentage of reduction the House Appropriations Committee did effect under the recommendations of the Budget.

Mr. AYRES. We effected a reduction of a little over $15,000,000 under the current year.

Mr. BRIGGS. As I understand it, the Budget estimates provided a recommendation of $350,000,000.

Mr. AYRES. Yes; including special funds.

Mr. BRIGGS. And this bill carries recommendations for $326,000,000?

Mr. AYRES. Yes; but excluding the special funds.

Mr. BRIGGS. So there is a reduction under the Budget of what amount?

Mr. BRITTEN. About fifteen and a half million dollars.

Mr. AYRES. Yes; in direct appropriations.

Mr. BRIGGS. Oh, I see; in direct appropriations. That figure excludes special funds and a reappropriation?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. With the gentleman's permission, at this point I would like to insert into the RECORD certain figures to call them to the attention of the House. The estimates for 1933 submitted in August, 1931, were $397,000,000. Subsequent to that, revised estimates were brought in for $358,000,000. Subsequent to that, in October, 1931, they were reduced to $346,000,000, and then finally recommended to the Bureau of the Budget at $341,500,000, when the Navy was cut to the bone, and from that $341,500,000 the gentleman is deducting $15,500,000. I understood the gentleman to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin a few moments ago that no salaries were reduced in this bill. It is my impression that flight pay for the Navy and Marine Corps is materially reduced.

Mr. AYRES. That is not a salary.

Mr. BRITTEN. What would the gentleman call it?

Mr. AYRES. I would call it an allowance, or, perhaps, a gratuity, extra to the salary; of course, in a sense, it is pay.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman would call it pay. It is part of their salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. Would the gentleman support a motion to recommit, including a 10 per cent decrease in the appropriations?

Mr. AYRES. We have not reached that point.

Mr. GOSS. I say, would he?

Mr. AYRES. Do not let us cross any bridges until we come to them.

Mr. BRIGGS. Did the gentleman's committee conscientiously endeavor to weed out every item it could do, without impairing the national defense?

Mr. AYRES. Certainly, and I so stated Tuesday last as well as I could. It is all in the RECORD. We did our best to make reductions and at the same time not harm the efficiency of the Navy.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is the statement of the committee as set forth in the tabulation appearing in the committee's report correct? The bill carries direct appropriations of $326,340,466, or $31,921,657 less than the sum of the current appropriations.

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. And $15,300,000 less than the Budget estimate?

Mr. AYRES. That is right.

Mr. BRIGGS. So you really cut this bill 10 per cent below the appropriation for the previous year?

Mr. AYRES. Not quite.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to direct your attention to a splendid compliment to some worthy employees, all hidden away in the printed hearings on this bill.

In these days, Mr. Chairman, when we are emphasizing economy, and justly so, I think it is worth while to read these lines from the hearings on page 633:

COST OF HULL AND MACHINERY WORK

Mr. AYRES. Admiral Rock, are you and Admiral Robinson going to accomplish the hull and machinery work on any of the vessels, upon which work is proceeding, below the cost limits?

Admiral ROCK. Our experience up to the present time, except for the Chicago and the Louisville, built in the west coast navy yards, and the Salt Lake City, built under private contract in the East, is that the ships will cost practically up to the authorized limits of cost, and we are not estimating in our estimates, as submitted, any saving under the limits of cost on the ships now under construction, except about $1,250,000 on the two ships building on the west coast.

Mr. AYRES. That saving is due to what reason?

Admiral ROCK. I think the saving on the ships built and building on the west coast is due simply to the fact that the men there, up to the present time, have worked with a better spirit, more steadily, due, of course, partly to the management and partly to their own spirit, than they have in other parts of the country.

According to the testimony of Admiral Rock, we get more for the money expended when we build ships on the west coast; and I want to pay this tribute to the men and officers at the Puget Sound Navy Yard at Bremerton, Wash., and the Mare Island Yard in California, to which I think they are entitled. If, by their spirit and energy and better work, they are saving the people of this country nearly $2,000,000 on a single Navy vessel, it is worth while being made a matter of record, and I want to utter this word of commendation for those workmen and all others who perform their work in like manner.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I yield.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Is there any difference between the Government yards and private yards, in the cost, in that respect?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes. The facts are set out here in the hearings on the Navy appropriation bill.

I call your attention to the fact that the Puget Sound and Mare Island Yards, on the west coast, saved the taxpayers nearly $4,000,000 in the construction of two vessels—the Louisville and Chicago—recently launched. The Navy Department also anticipates a million and a quarter dollar saving by these same yards on the Astoria and San Francisco now under construction. I compliment the men in those yards on this splendid showing. Records like these are the best guaranty of future contracts and steady employment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment, merely to answer the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GOSS].

In my judgment, if every supply bill that we send to the Senate is reduced 10 per cent by the Senate, and then when it comes back to the House, if it is reduced by us another 10 per cent, it would not hurt the Government one bit, and the people of the country would be much better off.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield right there for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am asking the gentleman a serious question, of course.

Mr. BLANTON. My statement was serious. It is the best judgment I have.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman knows the Senate reduced the appropriation for prohibition enforcement $1,100,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, it did that to be consistent.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes. Now, when that bill comes to the House will the gentleman offer an amendment to reduce it another $1,100,000? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to my friend the "wet" gentleman from Illinois that if he will agree concerning each and all of the appropriation bills which come from the Senate, after the Senate has reduced it 10 per cent, to get the House to reduce another 10 per cent, I will go along with him and be consistent and let the appropriation for prohibition enforcement be reduced proportionately with the others. Is that not consistent?

Mr. BRITTEN. That is consistent, and if I had the gentleman's persuasive power I would make an agreement with him right now.

Mr. BLANTON. If you make that extra 10 per cent reduction apply to all of the big supply bills, the taxpayers in every district in the United States would be glad, and some real, constructive economy would be accomplished.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. Was the gentleman speaking for himself or his party at that time?

Mr. BLANTON. I was speaking only for myself. No man on the floor has a right to speak for the Committee on Appropriations other than the chairman or the subchairman. I am not speaking for the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations is not a political committee. Every member of that committee works harmoniously with every other member for the best interest of the country. There is no politics in it. They put their shoulders to the wheel and work together. They have some differences, of course, and they fight them out among themselves, but you do not find them attacking each other on the floor. I am speaking only my private sentiments. The committee has already passed on the matter by bringing in this bill, but I imagine that they anticipated there would be another 10 per cent cut before the bill is finally passed into law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE MARINE SCHOOLS, ACT MARCH 4, 1911

To reimburse the State of California, $25,000; the State of Massachusetts, $25,000; the State of New York, $25,000; and the State of Pennsylvania, $25,000, for expenses incurred in the maintenance and support of marine schools in such States as provided in the act authorizing the establishment of marine schools, etc., approved March 4, 1911 (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 1121), and for the maintenance and repair of the particular vessels loaned by the United States to the said States on the date of the approval of this act for use in connection with such State marine schools, $117,600; in all, $217,600.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this to obtain information as to the real purpose of these appropriations to the various four States as a contribution toward the maintenance of State marine schools. I was rather interested in the discussion in general debate as to the policy of the committee in discontinuing the appropriation in the next fiscal year for the naval reservists, particularly on the Great Lakes, and making no provision whatsoever for the officer personnel or for the maintenance of the four training ships during the fiscal year 1933. Here you have a contribution appropriation of $25,000 each to four States. It is in the nature of training for the Navy; yet if the committee and the House are going to be consistent, why should not this $217,000 be eliminated? The States on the Great Lakes do not wish to be discriminated against even though these may not be comparable services. I am well aware of the fact that the Navy Department took it upon itself to deny to the Great Lakes States the privilege of 15 days' summer training and no training in 1933. It took that action without the knowledge, and even without the approval, you might say, of the subcommittee handling the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. AYRES. The subcommittee did not initiate the matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know it did not. I say the department took that action without the approval of the committee handling the naval appropriation bill and even without notice to the committee.

Mr. AYRES. We propose to reduce this appropriation from $267,000 to $217,000. As to the other proposition, I will say that the committee is not responsible for the move to take these boats off the Great Lakes. The first information the committee had that they were to be taken off was when it saw an announcement of the fact in what is known as the Army and Navy Register. It was through that source that we received information that the department already had suspended this activity. Therefore we called the naval authorities before us and were told that the step had been taken as a measure of economy. The week-end cruises and armory drill training will continue as heretofore.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand from the hearings that it is not contemplated they are going to have any week-end cruises in the next year.

Mr. AYRES. That is not our information.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the fiscal year 1933?

Mr. TABER. Until the 1st of September, 1932.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am speaking of 1933.

Mr. TABER. That is in 1933.

Mr. STAFFORD. Only a fractional part and a vulgar fractional part of 1933.

Mr. TABER. Almost all of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The substantial part is after September. I still insist that the committee has not provided one cent of money for cruises after September, 1932, and that is the major part of the fiscal year.

Mr. AYRES. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit me, the Navy Department or its responsible representatives, who are charged with the efficiency of the Navy, voluntarily have proposed this move. If we can not rely upon the Chief of Operations to effect changes that will least impair the efficiency of the Navy as a whole, what is the committee going to do?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will follow up the question I asked in the beginning. If the Navy Department is to be consistent, why should it not withdraw this $117,000 which it is proposed to give to some specially favored States along the seacoast and at the same time not give these privileges to the Great Lakes region?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. If the gentleman will yield, I should say that the appropriation for the marine schools is not analogous to the appropriation for the reserves. They are two different subjects.

Mr. STAFFORD. I grant you they are different; but are not they akin?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes. The marine-school appropriations are made for the purpose of supplementing appropriations made by the four States which are mentioned in the bill, where schools are maintained for the training of officers for the merchant marine of the United States. Of course, it is very possible that many of those who are trained in these schools will become members of the reserves but not necessarily so.

Mr. STAFFORD. They will certainly be trained for service in the Navy in case of war.

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, yes; that is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the main purpose of the Naval Reserve.

Mr. FRENCH. But it is not the main purpose of the marine schools. It is by way of supplementing the work of the States in encouraging the training of men to take charge of ships in commerce.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not wish to contend that the training given Naval Reserves does not equip those boys for operating as marines.

Mr. FRENCH. Of course, that is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, we need them as much on the Great Lakes as on the high seas—on the great unsalted seas of the interior. The gentleman is acquainted with our Great Lakes system, I suppose?

Mr. FRENCH. I am acquainted with the system to which the gentleman refers. I am pointing out, however, that the training in the marine school is for an entirely different purpose, with an entirely different objective.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do not emphasize "entirely different," because they are akin and very closely related except in name.

Mr. FRENCH. The training that is given to the reserves primarily is for the purpose of supplementing the Naval Establishment. The training in the marine school is for the purpose primarily of aiding the merchant marine of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I shall not charge that there is a difference without a distinction. There is a difference, but not much.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

OPERATION AND CONSERVATION OF THE NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVES

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to carry out the provisions contained in the act approved June 4, 1920 (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 524), requiring him to conserve, develop, use, and operate the naval petroleum reserves, $80,000, of which amount not to exceed $15,000 shall be available for employees assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the schedule of wages for civil employees in the field service of the Navy Department and of which $5,000 shall be available exclusively for repairs to shut-in wells, Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3: Provided, That out of any sums appropriated for naval purposes by this act any portion thereof, not to exceed $10,000,000, shall be available to enable the Secretary of the Navy to protect Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 1, established by Executive order of September 2, 1912, pursuant to the act of June 25, 1910 (U. S. C., title 43, secs. 141–143), by drilling wells and performing any work incident thereto, of which amount not to exceed $100,000 shall be available for employees assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the schedule of wages for civil employees in the field service of the Navy Department: Provided further, That no part of the sum made available for the protection of this property shall be expended if a satisfactory agreement can be made with adjoining landowners to not drill offset wells for the purpose of producing oil.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I think the House would be interested in having some explanation for the reason of cutting in half the appropriation of last year of $160,000 to $80,000 for the protection of our petroleum reserves. It was recommended to the gentleman's committee and the gentleman's committee has agreed to the recommendation of the Budget, but, nevertheless, there is a cut of 50 per cent in the appropriation of last year.

Mr. AYRES. I will state to the gentleman that it is due to the plan to curtail the program of mudding in inactive wells upon the naval petroleum reserves.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is not any less activity proposed.

Mr. AYRES. There is no immediate need, we are advised, for a larger appropriation for the purpose I just indicated.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume, perhaps, the appropriation of last year was larger than the conditions required.

Mr. AYRES. I would not say that. The protection program has advanced to a point where a lesser amount will suffice for the present.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION

RECREATION FOR ENLISTED MEN, NAVY

For the recreation, amusement, comfort, contentment, and health of the Navy, including subscriptions to newspapers, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, under such regulations as he may prescribe, $368,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the schedule of wages for civil employees in the field service of the Navy Department, exclusive of temporary services, shall not exceed $36,000: Provided further, That hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept donations and contributions from organizations, individuals, or others, for use in providing recreation, amusement, and contentment of enlisted men, such donations to be credited to "Ships' stores profits, Navy."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read ending with line 5, on page 8, for the purpose of seeking an explanation from the chairman. The language is:

That hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept donations and contributions from organizations, individuals, or others for use in providing recreation, amusement, and contentment of enlisted men, such donations to be credited to "Ships' stores profits, Navy."

Mr. AYRES. I will say to the gentleman that it means just exactly what it says. They may accept donations from any source in order to augment this fund. It also contemplates the use of profits made on sales on the smaller vessels of the Navy, which do not have regularly constituted ships' stores, of such things as confections, cigars, and cigarettes.

Mr. GOSS. I may state to the gentleman that this is new legislation, unauthorized by law, and I would like to know what is the purpose of it.

Mr. AYRES. The purpose of it is to supplement to the extent practicable the appropriation we are considering.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is not this due to the fact that the Naval Appropriations Committee cut down the current appropriation—the one which had heretofore provided for this activity, and this provision is to make it possible for these activities to be continued without any impairment of the fund?

Mr. AYRES. Yes; except that the committee did not reduce the appropriation. The reduced amount came to us in the Budget.

Mr. GOSS. So now we expect the public to furnish the food and other things for nothing?

Mr. AYRES. The amendment does not restrict the sources.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield for a question to the chairman?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to ask the chairman if this is not a direct appeal on the part of the Government for contributions of athletic goods of various kinds, pictures, baseball bats, boxing gloves, and everything that may be used for recreational purposes from the people of the country?

Mr. AYRES. It might appear so from the language, which I am frank to say was written in the Navy Department. I think, however, it is expected that the donations and contributions will come from sources within the service.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does it not make Uncle Sam look like a beggar?

Mr. AYRES. No; I do not agree to that.

Mr. BRITTEN. Let me read the gentleman the language of the proviso, if the gentlemen from Connecticut will permit:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept donations and contributions from organizations, individuals, or others, for use in providing recreation, amusement, and contentment of enlisted men; such donations to be credited to "Ships' Stores Profits, Navy."

In other words, Uncle Sam is seen holding his hand out like a blind man or a beggar on the street asking for donations, so that our men may exercise and may have wholesome, healthful recreation wherever our ships may be. Is not this a rather sorry plight for the committee to put the Navy Department in?

Mr. AYRES. I will say to the gentleman that if we do not watch our step Uncle Sam probably will be holding out his hand for donations in order to run this Government.

Mr. BRITTEN. Let me read the language again:

That hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept donations and contributions from organizations, individuals, or others—

And so forth. What does that mean, if it does not mean that he has his hand out expecting some one to hand him a dollar with which to carry on?

Mr. AYRES. Did the gentleman ever accept a donation in his life?

Mr. BRITTEN. I never did.

Mr. AYRES. Then the gentleman is lucky. [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the department came to the committee with this suggestion and with the reason that a large number of ship stores are run on the larger ships, like cruisers and battleships, from which the profits, under the law as it stands, have been turned into the recreation fund and used for that purpose.

But in the smaller ships the stores are not run in that way—on the destroyers and submarines—they make a profit, but under the ruling of the Comptroller General they have been unable to turn that profit into the recreation fund. The purpose of the department is, as they said when they came before us asking for the language, to permit these stores which are not operated in the regular way, under the direction of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, to turn whatever profit they may make into the recreation fund. It occurred to the committee that it was a perfectly proper proceeding.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. If the purpose of the language in the bill is what the gentleman states, I am in hearty accord with it, but that is not the fact. The fact of the matter is that this does not say anything about money taken in in the ship stores.

Mr. TABER. These stores are not run in the regular way under the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts as stores on the larger ships are. They are run in a way without the law and the Comptroller General has held that these profits can not be turned in and used as a part of the recreation fund.

Mr. BRITTEN. But this language does not refer to what the gentleman is talking about at all.

Mr. TABER. It permits it to be done. These informal organizations are run and they make a small profit, and this is the language that the department wanted to effectuate this purpose.

Mr. BRITTEN. Well, let us see if it does apply to ship stores.

That hereafter the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept donations and contributions from organizations.

That does not mean a naval vessel.

Mr. TABER. These organizations are all on the ships. They are informal organizations composed of officers and men on each ship.

Mr. BRITTEN. The language does not say anything about the Navy or a ship.

Mr. TABER. It says organizations and others. That is what the department wanted, and we let them have it, as it is their profit which they wish to use for this purpose.

Mr. BRITTEN. I agree with the gentleman 100 per cent if it is the intention or expectation that the money collected aboard the smaller ships is to be transferred to the recreation fund. I am whole-heartedly for it.

But there is not a single word in this language that indicates that that is what is to be done. This language here, as indicated by the chairman of the subcommittee having the bill in charge, is to permit outside organizations, outside individuals, to contribute money or anything else to ship stores for entertainment purposes, so that the officers and men may have entertainment and recreation. It does not say a single word about these small-ship stores on destroyers, for instance.

Mr. TABER. These small stores are not within the law. That is, they are run by the men and the officers on the ships in the same way that the stores on the large ships are run, but they are not run under the department. They are informal organizations, and they want the contribution of these funds to use them in the regular way.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am for preparing and approving language that will do that thing.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. What objection is there to that?

Mr. BRITTEN. What objection is there to Uncle Sam putting in an appropriation bill that Uncle Sam will receive contributions from people in the country to maintain the Government? I say it is a shameful declaration.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the explanation of the gentleman I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

INSTRUMENTS AND SUPPLIES, BUREAU OF NAVIGATION

For supplies for seamen's quarters; and for the purchase of all other articles of equipage at home and abroad; and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels therewith and manufacture of such articles in the several navy yards; all pilotage and towage of ships of war; canal tolls, wharfage, dock and port charges, and other necessary incidental expenses of a similar nature; services and materials in repairing, correcting, adjusting, and testing compasses on shore and on board ship; nautical and astronomical instruments and repairs to same; libraries for ships of war, professional books, schoolbooks, and papers; maintenance of gunnery and other training classes; compasses, compass fittings, including binnacles, tripods, and other appendages of ship's compasses; logs and other appliances for measuring the ship's way and leads and other appliances for sounding; photographs, photographic instruments and materials, printing outfit and materials; music and musical instruments; and for the necessary civilian electricians for gyrocompass testing and inspection; in all, $533,243: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the schedule of wages for civil employees in the field service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $33,460.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is this Group IV (b)?

Mr. AYRES. They are what we usually term classified employees.

Mr. GOSS. What do they do?

Mr. AYRES. They are the employees of the Navy Department in the field; that is, at the navy yards, navy stations, and other naval establishments apart from the Navy Department here in Washington. Field employees are divided administratively into five groups. Group I consists of unskilled laborers, Group II of helpers, Group III of mechanics, and Group IV (a) of supervisory mechanics, and Group IV (b) of clerks, draftsmen, technicians, watchmen.

Mr. GOSS. Has there been any reduction in their pay?

Mr. AYRES. No; in fact as to a very large number of them, their pay quite recently has been advanced.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the provision, it merely seeks to limit the appropriation for this grade of work.

Mr. AYRES. That is all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Namely, draftsmen and other types of employment such as the gentleman enumerated.

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. If I may be permitted, we have carried similar limitations heretofore in different language, accomplishing the same result.

Mr. AYRES. That is true.

The Clerk read as follows:

OCEAN AND LAKE SURVEYS, BUREAU OF NAVIGATION

For hydrographic surveys, including the pay of the necessary hydrographic surveyors, cartoghaphic draftsmen, and recorders, and for the purchase of nautical books, charts, and sailing directions, $65,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the schedule of wages for civil employees in the field service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $27,000.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be permitted to correct the spelling of the word "cartographic," in line 6, page 10.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to ask a question of the chairman of the subcommittee. On page 10 of the bill, $27,000 is appropriated for Group IV (b) employees. Is that a new way that Group IV (b) is being treated this year? Heretofore they were all paid out of a special fund. I notice throughout this bill that a certain amount is allowed for Group IV (b) and what disturbs me is that, back on page 7, out of $368,000 for recreation the committee has allowed $36,000 for this Group IV (b), and that further on in the bill, out of an appropriation of $14,000,000, $30,000 only is allowed. What does that mean?

Mr. AYRES. Simply that the department has not asked for a larger amount.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. But, as I understand it, draftsmen and men of that type are in this Group IV (b). Here is an appropriation of $14,000,000. Does that mean that only $30,000 can be allowed for draftsmen, storekeepers, and men of that type?

Mr. AYERS. To what item is the gentleman referring?

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. That is on page 50 of the bill. I am comparing that with this item just read.

Mr. AYRES. That has no connection with this.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. It has on page 7, and it has where we have been reading. I am sure the gentleman must know, and if he will turn to page 50 for a moment, I think he can give us an explanation. That is a very important item. I know the importance of it, because I offered an amendment earlier in the session to increase the number of draftsmen because they could not keep up with the work.

Mr. AYRES. We have always limited the amount that might be expended for the class of services embraced by Group IV (b), although instead of designating them as a group, heretofore we have named the classes of employment, and for the sake of uniformity and definiteness this new language has been suggested.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. In the Bureau of Construction and Repair can these draftsmen be paid out of their allowance? Those classes are engaged in this modernization work.

Mr. AYRES. Not in excess of the limitation.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. What I am afraid of is that you have cut the amount down too much to carry on the work of this modernization. If $30,000 is all that you have for modernization, there must be something wrong.

Mr. AYRES. That is all the Navy Department has asked. There has been a slowing up in the modernization work, and this sum, we have been told, will be adequate.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Can you tell me where those draftsmen are going to be paid out of this $14,000,000 appropriation for modernization?

Mr. AYRES. The original estimate was $265,000. The department later reduced it to $30,000. I know of no other fund out of which draftsmen may be employed who are engaged exclusively in modernization work.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. If the original estimate was $265,000, how can we go ahead with the modernization of those battleships with but $30,000?

Mr. AYRES. The gentleman will have to ask the Navy Department.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. AYRES. Have I answered the gentleman's question?

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. No; the gentleman has not answered my question; and I submit it is a very important item. I do not believe the gentleman himself understands my question.

Mr. AYRES. Perhaps I did not grasp the import of the gentleman's question, although I believe I did.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. It seems to me there must be some explanation of it. Modernization work, like all other construction work, requires the services of draftsmen. We are undertaking $14,000,000 of modernization work and allowing but $30,000 for services of draftsmen. The gentleman says that last year the department recommended $265,000.

Mr. AYRES. No. I said the department originally asked for $265,000 for 1933, and later changed it to $30,000. I should think that much of the preliminary work has been done; the work on the ships has been started and much of the planning work necessarily must have been completed, as the vessels actually are undergoing modernization.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. I understand that; but from the time they start work on a ship until the work is ended, draftsmen are needed, and I am wondering why the appropriation this year is so small compared with what it was last year.

Mr. AYRES. The only answer I can make to the gentleman is to repeat what I have already said, that the department has said that this was all that was needed for the purpose. We must rely upon them to acquaint us with their needs.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the provision at present under discussion relate to the hydrographic service?

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. That particular reference does, but it appears in several places in the bill. We are doing $14,000,000 of modernization. I am not satisfied with the explanation that has been given, but I will try to get something from the Navy Department before this comes up to-morrow.

Mr. AYRES. I would advise that the gentleman pursue that course.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. I am not satisfied with the answers that have been given, but I will try to get further information from the Navy Department before this comes up to-morrow.

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

As the gentleman from Virginia has suggested, there is quite a radical reduction in the appropriation from $260,000 to $30,000. I am informed that a great deal of work which is contemplated and which should be in process of prosecution is not being done for the very reason they have not a sufficient number of draftsmen to keep plans drawn ahead for the workmen in the different yards. A reduction in the amount allowed for draftsmen will further reduce the progress of the work on the ships on which modernization has been started.

Mr. AYRES. The reverse of that, I should say, would be true. The Navy Department says the smaller amount will suffice because there has been a slowing up in the modernization program.

Mr. DELANEY. There must be some good reason for such a radical reduction, it seems to me.

Mr. LAGUARDIA offered the following amendment:

Page 10, line 8, strike out "$65,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$86,600."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, at this time the House is rather disturbed, and the Committee on Economy is very much undecided, as to just what to do to meet this hysteria, this mania of economy. I submit that now, instead of considering a reduction of wages of Federal employees we had better start figuring on increases in wages. Times are changing very fast. Mr. Chairman, to-day the Committee on Banking and Currency of this House voted unanimously, I understand, to favorably report the Goldsborough bill, restoring and maintaining the purchasing power of the dollar. I predict that when that bill comes before the House, it will pass with very little difficulty.

What does it do? It fixes the purchasing power of the dollar on the basis of commodity prices, and the range taken from 1921 to 1929 will fix the value of the dollar to meet commodity prices of 1926. That may create the stimulus necessary to rehabilitate business, commerce, industry, and agriculture. It will give the farmer an opportunity to pay his debts on a price level equal to that of the period in which the debts were contracted. But unless we take care (and I am certainly going to be on guard), to allow a compensating increase to the wage earners, we will find that the working people of this country and the wage earners will be compelled to carry the entire cost of this transition.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I submit that the Committee on Economy might very well drop its labors now on salary decreases, and instead of calling in the pruners they had better call in Mr. Ethelbert Stewart, the head of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the recognized authority on commodity prices in this country, and be prepared with a plan which we will inevitably be compelled to adopt within six months to meet these increases of commodity prices.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am very much interested in what the gentleman has said. I am wondering if the gentleman can tell the House by what miracle, by what procedure this value of the dollar is to be so cheerfully and delightfully changed, under the Goldsborough legislation?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, I do not think that will be difficult under the provisions of the bill. Why, the Federal reserve is inflating that much currency now. The plan provided in the bill to which I have referred is just as artificial as our present monetary system.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman really believe that the issuance of more money now by the Federal reserve system will do the very spectacular and almost impossible thing that the gentleman has just suggested to the House?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Why, surely.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it that easy?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The other day it was testified by the governor of the Federal reserve bank that they were now issuing $100,000,000 a week of currency, and that was reflected in our exchange, and some of the gentlemen were whining and complaining that some one was pegging down the dollar. That is exactly what the Federal Reserve Board is trying to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to ask the gentleman how the $100,000,000 a week will finally get into the hands of the public? How will the man on the street in my district get some of that $100,000,000.

Mr. SEIBERLING. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman made the statement that they were issuing currency. That is not true. They are buying securities and putting them in the banks.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is true. But they are issuing money against their own securities. It is—issuing money—paper money—inflating currency.

Mr. SEIBERLING. But they are buying securities.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Quite true. But they are issuing money against their own securities.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has not answered my question. How is that $100,000,000 going to find its way into the hands of the man on the street all over the United States?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Increased wages, increased prices, increased credits, increased business, increased employment. The gentleman knows that commodity prices, being fixed on the value of the currency, if commodity prices go up, or currency values go down, it will furnish that stimulant to trade and industry that the country has been clamoring for. That being so, it will create work, and if it creates work, it creates salaries and wages, and if it creates salaries and wages, it puts the money into circulation.

Mr. BRITTEN. The only way the commodity price can go up is by some one having money with which to buy the commodity?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is true.

Mr. BRITTEN. How is the man on the street going to get some of this $100,000,000?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. By making money available for credit, which means money for industry, for business—creating jobs.

Mr. BRITTEN. Who is going to create the jobs for him?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Increased purchasing power increases demand for goods—for food, for clothes. Increased commodity prices mean increased circulation.

Mr. BRITTEN. But the increased commodity price is only obtained by the circulation of money. How does this money circulate and get into the district before it gets to the commodity man?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. By increasing wages and prices the volume of money in circulation increases.

Mr. BRITTEN. I disagree with the gentleman. If you should print a thousand billion dollars worth of that money and hold it in the Federal reserve, it will never do any good.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course, if they held it in the Federal reserve it would not do any good.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman has not answered my question, and I will repeat it: How is the man on the street going to get any of that money?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. By getting a job caused by increased prices, causing increased business.

Mr. BRITTEN. For whom will he work? He is anxious for work now and can not get it.

Mr. DELANEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. DELANEY. Does the gentleman mean to say that the farmer can go to his bank with his grain and wheat and on the strength of presenting those things to the bank borrow money on those commodities?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; at increased prices.

Mr. DELANEY. On what year is that based—1926?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is based on a period from 1921 to 1929. The average commodity prices would therefore be of 1926, I should say.

Mr. KELLER. If the gentleman will permit, I will take just half a minute to say that I shall be very glad to undertake to answer the gentleman's [Mr. BRITTEN] questions. Whenever I have the opportunity, I shall be glad to answer them specifically.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I know the gentleman can explain the plan, but he will never be able to answer the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] because he does not want to learn.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL TRAINING STATIONS, BUREAU OF NAVIGATION

For maintenance, including labor and material, heat, light, water, general care, repairs, and improvements; school books; and all other incidental expenses for the naval training stations that follow:

San Diego, Calif., $166,300;
Newport, R. I., $182,000;
Great Lakes, Ill., $252,900;
Hampton Roads, Va., $231,000:

Provided, That the amount to be paid out of each of the foregoing sums for employees assigned to Group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the schedule of wages for civil employees in the field service of the Navy Department shall not exceed for San Diego, $7,500; for Newport, $10,000; for Great Lakes, $14,500; and for Hampton Roads, $5,500.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. In line 20, page 10, strike out the figures "$182,000" and insert the figures "$198,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURDICK: On page 10, line 20, strike out the figures "$182,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$198,500."

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee why the appropriation for the training station at Newport was reduced $89,000, the other training stations being reduced $23,000, $22,000, and $24,000, respectively.

Mr. AYRES. I will state to the gentleman that the department is considering closing that station and using it as a part of the War College.

Mr. BURDICK. What department is that?

Mr. AYRES. The Navy Department.

Mr. BURDICK. Is that statement made by the department in the hearings?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. BURDICK. I will say to the gentleman that my information from the Navy Department, obtained no later than this morning, was that the Navy Department had no idea of using this training station as an addition to the War College.

Mr. AYRES. It was stated to the committee by representatives of the department that such a change was under consideration.

Mr. BURDICK. I could not find any such thing in the hearings, and I tried to go through them very thoroughly.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. I wonder if the chairman of the subcommittee could explain the difference between Newport and San Diego. I notice in the hearings, page 210, that San Diego has a recruiting capacity of 1,754 while Newport has a recruiting capacity of 2,700. Then, again, it has a service-school capacity of 403 whereas Newport has a service-school capacity of 511; in fact, Newport has more capacity than any of the other naval-training stations, and yet that is the only one that is not given any large amount.

Mr. AYRES. And the reason is, as I stated before, that the Navy Department is contemplating discontinuing Newport as a training station.

Mr. GOSS. Why?

Mr. AYRES. I assume because they do not consider it necessary.

Mr. GOSS. Why not make the cuts even and make them apply equally to the station in San Diego and the one in the South?

Mr. AYRES. There is no intention to abandon them as training stations.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee just where in the hearings before his committee has the Navy Department or any representative of the Navy Department indicated that they were going to discontinue Newport as a training station?

Mr. AYRES. It has not been printed; but I shall be perfectly willing for the gentleman to see it.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman does not recall, does he, any representative of the Navy Department coming before his subcommittee and recommending or suggesting that Newport was to be discontinued as a training station? If so, I would like to know the gentleman's name.

Mr. AYRES. The Secretary and the Chief of Operations, Admiral Pratt, indicated to us that the matter was under consideration.

Mr. BRITTEN. They spoke about the discontinuance of this station?

Mr. AYRES. They did.

Mr. BURDICK. Does that appear in the printed hearings?

Mr. AYRES. It does not, but I shall be glad to show the statement to the gentleman.

Mr. BURDICK. Then the committee hearings are not complete?

Mr. AYRES. A great many matters are presented to the committee that do not appear in the hearings.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. This training station at Newport is the first and oldest training station in America. It has permanent buildings in good repair, and, as has been stated, can care for 2,700 recruits. It has the reputation of turning out a class of recruits that is of great credit to the Navy. Health conditions are wonderful there. Everything is done there for the new boy who is leaving his home to join the service. The climate is good, conditions are good, they are on an island separated from the city, and the behavior and health record of these boys far excels that of any other training station in the United States.

Therefore, it seems to me, in view of the fact this committee has seen fit to make an appropriation for the training of the boys at this original training station, they should make an adequate appropriation.

I have not objected to the fact that the committee has cut off $65,000 from what the Budget estimated. The Budget estimated $265,000 for the coming year, and the committee has cut it down to $182,000. I am just asking you to put back the $16,500 that they have cut off from what is required for the actual training of the boys at this station.

Mr. GOSS. I understood it was $83,000 less than the Budget estimate.

Mr. BURDICK. That is correct, but $65,000 was for work on the wall and roads, and so on.

I would therefore ask the committee to restore to the appropriation the sum of $16,500 in order that the boys may be properly cared for and trained.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the matter that has just been called to the attention of the House concerning the Newport training station, to my mind is the first step toward eliminating one of the Atlantic coast stations, because the $182,000 provided for Newport can not maintain that station.

The committee, in its bill, has some new language which authorizes the President to dispose of, lease or sell, any of the Atlantic coast establishments. It may be subject to a point of order, as some one has suggested.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the gentleman will yield, it says "any shore establishment."

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; any shore establishment.

This language is the first step toward closing one of these institutions.

The Director of the Budget, after having this matter in hand for weeks and months, and after scaling down the amount as far as he could go within reason, recommended to the committee that $270,000 be set aside for the maintenance of the Newport station. The subcommittee, in its wisdom, cut that $270,000 down to $182,000, or a cut of about $88,000.

The department has informed me that if you are aiming to get along at this station with $182,000, you might just as well close it, because it can not be maintained with that amount of money. I am not thinking of some construction work or additions that the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BURDICK] recently referred to, a retaining wall and some sidewalks and some repairs that are necessary—I am not figuring on those items at all—it will require $220,000 to maintain this institution without any new construction.

If the House, in its wisdom, desires to discontinue the Newport station as a training station, then let us cut out the $180,000. If it desires to continue the Newport station as a training station, it will require $220,000, and I hope the gentlemen of the committee will see fit to maintain this institution where it belongs and as it is, and this will require $220,000 for maintenance alone, without any new construction.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. I notice on page 35 of the report that with respect to the naval training station in California there is only a reduction of $7,500 and for the one on the Great Lakes a reduction of $6,400, none at Hampton Roads, but a reduction of $83,000 at Newport.

Mr. BRITTEN. You can not always compare the stations in that way, I may say to the gentleman from Connecticut, but I think the deduction was arbitrarily made upon the presumption—not upon the fact but upon the presumption—that the activities of the training station were to be turned over to the War College.

Mr. Chairman, I offer as a substitute amendment that the amount carried in the bill at line 20, page 10, "$182,000," be changed to read, "Newport, R. I., $220,000," and I offer this as a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment for the amendment offered by Mr. BURDICK: Page 10, line 20, strike out "$182,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$220,000."

Mr. DELANEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield.

Mr. DELANEY. The gentleman from Illinois is a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, and knows that next week, on Wednesday, the Secretary of the Navy is due to appear before the committee to submit a proposal to dispense with 20 shore stations all over the United States.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes, if any.

Mr. DELANEY. So if the Secretary of the Navy's proposition prevails all this money we are discussing will not be used.

Mr. BRITTEN. It may not be. I will say that the language carried in the bill a little further along authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to dispense with shore stations is subject to a point of order. The legislative committee has agreed that the Secretary of the Navy shall meet us on next Wednesday morning, when he will be prepared to tell the committee and the Congress just which shore stations, if any, can be dispensed with. In the meantime I think it is only fair that the Newport station—and I have no particular interest in it except that if it is a going concern it should have a sufficient appropriation. It should have sufficient to keep it alive—and that is $220,000—until we hear from the Secretary of the Navy next week, when he may decide that it may be closed up; and if so, we will take care of that.

Mr. BURDICK. Was not it agreed that the committee should have in its hand a copy of the statement prior to that meeting?

Mr. BRITTEN. A copy of a detailed statement referring to all the yards on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Navy and the Chief of Operations said that consideration was being given to closing the Newport Training Station as such and enlarging the War College. So we felt, with that question pending, we would not be justified in bringing to you a larger appropriation than that for which the bill provides.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it necessary to appropriate $182,000 to maintain the Newport station in a closed condition?

Mr. AYRES. The appropriation of $182,000 will permit the station to be operated. If the department should close it, of course that amount would not be needed and we would expect a saving to be effected.

Mr. BRITTEN. But the gentleman says that they design to close it.

Mr. AYRES. That they have considered closing it and using it as a part of the War College.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does this bill carry any increase for the enlargement of the War College?

Mr. AYRES. No; not at all.

Mr. BURDICK. I would like to ask the gentleman why, in striking off $65,000 for new work, sidewalks, and roads—why, in addition, they cut off $16,500?

Mr. AYRES. That was due to confining the allowance for certain items to the 1931 expenditures.

Mr. TABER. The fuel expenditure in 1931 was $13,000 less than the estimate that was made up for 1933, and we thought that they ought to be able with current prices to get along for that figure.

Mr. AYRES. The fuel item is cut $13,000; light, and so forth, $2,000; and so on, all on the basis of the expenditures in 1931.

Mr. BURDICK. Then they should be able to carry on with the amount fixed here.

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. BURDICK. If they do the same as they did in 1931.

Mr. AYRES. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, it is amazing to me when the Democratic members of this committee sincerely try to help balance the Budget, to see these Republicans jump up and offer amendments here and there for the purpose of increasing the appropriations, especially when they are not necessary, which even the Navy lords realize and recognize we can dispense with.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. In a moment. Would it not be much better if some of the Republicans would try to help us bring back conditions that would make possible the employment of some of the 8,000,000 of unfortunate people who are seeking work and can not find it, instead of insisting upon these naval officers living in the splendor and luxury to which they have been accustomed? I have nothing against the Navy; I would like to see our country have the most powerful navy in the world, but I think, when the country is in the condition that it is to-day, when we are facing a situation where we are obliged to make up a deficit of nearly $1,500,000,000 which has been brought about by Republican misrule, it is manifestly unfair for the gentlemen on the Republican side to do all in their power to make it so hard for us Democrats to accomplish this. I now yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GOSS. Would the gentleman accept a reduction in the appropriation for the Great Lakes Naval Station in Illinois along the same line? This is in this same particular section.

Mr. SABATH. I never asked for any special appropriation for Illinois that I was not ready to accord to any other State.

Mr. GOSS. That is all we are asking for.

Mr. SABATH. If the great naval station in Illinois does not need the amount provided for it, I shall vote for a reduction that will not impair efficiency, and I shall vote for any reduction that shall be brought about to balance the Budget. Every time we try to raise a little money by suggesting this or that tax, the gentleman knows that immediately the industries or the interests of the country become aroused and say that we are trying to destroy them and make impossible their existence. Therefore they demand that we economize. I know that the word economy is hard for the Republicans to hear, and that it is hard for them to economize and get themselves into a position where they are ready to do so. They are perfectly willing to do it at home and through the Republican newspapers, but here on the floor I have not seen anyone, with the exception of two or three men, who has had the courage of his convictions and who has helped the Democrats bring about the economy that will balance the Budget, as it should be balanced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I compliment my Democratic economy friend, but I want to ask him a question. I believe the gentleman voted for the $135,000,000 road bill dole for the States last month.

Mr. SABATH. No; I did not.

Mr. BRITTEN. Then, I congratulate him again, although I am of the impression that he did so vote but he does not now remember it.

Mr. SABATH. I did not. If I thought that voting $135,000,000 would relieve the intolerable conditions brought about by the Republican Party, I would vote for it, but unfortunately I do not agree that we can relieve the conditions by such an appropriation. There are many other ways, as have been suggested by the gentleman from New York, whereby we may be able to bring about conditions, through Democratic wisdom and policy and energy and courage, that will relieve the situation that now exists.

If my colleague would familiarize himself a little more with the deplorable conditions existing at home, though I realize he is obliged to be here to look after the Navy interests, I know that he would come to the same conclusion that I have come to; that is, that it is absolutely imperative that something be done to reduce the expenditures and relieve the situation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman's economy go so far as to vote against the world's fair appropriation?

Mr. SABATH. I am pleased, indeed, that the gentleman asked me this question. I have voted and worked for the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the reason that I believe it will bring about tremendous good to the country. I believe that this million dollars will bring to America at least 1,000,000 people from abroad and will attract many exhibitors, who will expend fifty times the amount that we have appropriated.

It will create employment; it will help to restore business in the United States.

What has the Navy ever done to relieve distressed business conditions? What we need to do at present is to restore, to rebuild, to reconstruct, not to destroy. The Navy is an implement of war; it destroys. I want to construct, reconstruct, rebuild, bring about employment, so that we can shortly give employment to some of the many millions that are without work due to Republican misrule.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BRITTEN) there were—ayes 27, noes 38.

So the substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BURDICK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURDICK) there were—ayes 34, noes 34.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair votes no.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, before we proceed further I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, a while ago we had a rather tentative agreement that when we reached the Naval Reserve section in the bill, or any other section in which the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], who is away at a funeral to-day, is interested, the committee would either rise or pass over that section. It is 5 o'clock, and I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. AYRES] that we rise for the day.

Mr. AYRES. I would suggest that we read to the end of the paragraph and then rise.

Mr. BRITTEN. Even though we read to the end of the paragraph to-night we would have to reread it to-morrow upon the request of some Member. There is nothing to be gained by reading to the end of the paragraph to-night.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLANCY. If the committee proceeds as suggested by the gentleman from Kansas, will amendments to that paragraph be in order to-morrow?

Mr. AYRES. I may say to the Chair that the reason I asked that the paragraph be read at this time was for the purpose of using some time. I have no objection to passing the paragraph over until to-morrow.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. BANKHEAD] having resumed the chair, Mr. FULLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11452) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by inserting in the RECORD a speech I made at the State University at Columbia, Mo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent I extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address made by me in Columbia, Mo., on April 13, 1932, at the exercises incident to the unveiling of a bronze tablet commemorative of Thomas Jefferson. Said exercises were the first held under a Missouri statute making Jefferson's birthday a legal holiday in the State of Missouri. The ceremonies were held under the supervision of the faculty and student body of the University of Missouri. I also wish to include the remarks of Mr. James C. Wilson, president of the Student Government Association, and Hon. Walter Williams, the president of said university, on that occasion. The remarks are all embodied in the following report prepared by Mr. John F. Williams, director of the university publications department of the University of Missouri:

COLUMBIA, MO., April 14.—Golden light of a setting sun cast a brilliant dignity around the 105-year-old Jefferson Monument on the University of Missouri campus yesterday as university students, Columbia townspeople, and visitors gathered to pay tribute to the memory of Thomas Jefferson, whose birthday was being celebrated for the first time as a State holiday by unveiling a bronze tablet bearing the epitaph written for himself by Jefferson.

The ceremony was held adjacent to the monument at the southeast corner of Francis Quadrangle. The entire cadet corps of the university was massed in front of the speakers' stand, with the university band on the flank, and about the monument were gathered hundreds of students from the university, members of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and other patriotic societies, and many distinguished visitors from Jefferson City and Kansas City.

James C. Wilson, president of the Student Government Association, which made plans for the occasion, presided, and presented Congressman JOSEPH B. SHANNON, of Kansas City, who made the presentation of the tablet in behalf of a group of friends whose contributions have made possible the purchase of the marker. In presenting Mr. SHANNON, Mr. Wilson said:

"Nearly two centuries ago there was born in the beautiful farm lands of Virginia a man whose life was to be devoted to the task of building a great democracy. Realizing that freedom, equality, and self-government are founded on an intelligent body politic, he conceived a system of free higher education in state-supported universities. This man was Thomas Jefferson.

"In a few years his vision was to be realized when he founded the first State university—the University of Virginia. From this descended our own university.

"As a statesman Thomas Jefferson envisioned a nation stretching from coast to coast. It was his courage and foresight that acquired for the United States the territory from which our own State was carved. And it was in this State that the first State university west of the Mississippi was founded. Consequently, 47 years ago the descendants of Jefferson deemed it fitting to present Missouri University with the original marker from the tomb of Thomas Jefferson in spite of the desire of Virginia University and others to have it.

"It is most proper that we gather here to-day to pay homage to the man who made it possible for us to be here. May we always remember our debt to him and gather here each year in tribute to his memory.

"To-day we are doubly honored in having with us one through whose efforts we received the bronze plaque placed upon the marker. He is the leading exponent of Thomas Jefferson and probably knows more of his life and work than any man alive. I take great pleasure in introducing Congressman JOSEPH B. SHANNON."

Mr. SHANNON gave a brief history of the enactment by the last general assembly of the law making Jefferson's Birthday a legal holiday in Missouri. He was the sponsor of this law and largely responsible for its passage. He paid gracious tribute to Governor Caulfield for having signed the bill a year ago yesterday, thus making it a law. Governor Caulfield has presented Mr. SHANNON with the pen with which he signed the bill. Mr. SHANNON'S address was particularly appropriate to the occasion and to the large audience of students. He spoke as follows:

"I know of no more appropriate way of improving the opportunity, so graciously afforded me by your honored president of the University of Missouri, of aiding in commemorating the occasion of this, the first legal celebration of Thomas Jefferson's birthday in the State of Missouri, than to leave with you, in some more enduring way than mere words of speech, a record of some of the great American principles that Jefferson enunciated.

"I believe that the most effective tribute that we can pay to his memory is not to elaborate or explain the principles that he stood for, but simply to let him speak for himself, as in his many writings and messages he has so clearly and eloquently voiced the ideals upon which he hoped this Republic would be founded and continued.

"With the hope and the purpose, therefore, that some of the essential teachings of this great American may remain with you in the permanent form of a printed memorial, I shall simply read to you to-day some of his notable and noble utterances illustrative of the doctrines of Jeffersonian Americanism.

"The three extracts that I have selected have to do with the spirit of all America as he conceived its destiny. I feel sure that if every American boy and girl were to keep the principles therein enunciated in perpetual remembrance they would aid in making them better citizens and more loyal and intelligent Americans.

"Jefferson's statement of the objects of primary education, contained in the report prepared by him for the commission appointed by the Governor of Virginia in 1818, will never be improved upon. It is more than a mere statement of the elements of rudimentary education. It is a crystallization of the duties of every good citizen under a popular government. He thus defined the objects of primary education:

"'1. To give to every citizen the information he needs for the transaction of his own business.

"'2. To enable him to calculate for himself, and to express and preserve his ideas, his contracts, and accounts in writing.

"'3. To improve, by reading, his morals and faculties.

"'4. To understand his duties to his neighbors and country, and to discharge with competence the functions confided to him by either.

"'5. To know his rights; to exercise with order and justice those he retains; to choose with discretion the fiduciary of those he delegates; and to notice their conduct with diligence, with candor and with judgment.

"'6. And, in general, to observe with intelligence and faithfulness all the social relations under which he shall be placed.'

"When Jefferson was nearing the close of life, he wrote a letter to his grandson in which he said:

"'This letter will be to you as one from the dead. The writer will be in the grave before you can weigh its counsels. Your affectionate father has requested that I would address you something which might possibly have a favorable influence on the course of life you have to run, and I, too, as a namesake, feel an interest in that course.

"'Few words will be necessary with good dispositions on your part. Adore God. Reverence and cherish your parents. Love your neighbor as yourself, and your country more than yourself. Be just. Be true. Murmur not at the ways of Providence, so that the life into which you have entered be the portal to one of eternal and ineffable bliss. And if to the dead it be permitted to care for the things of this world, every action of your life will be under my regard.'

"In a letter to Miles King, September 26, 1804, he said:

"'Our particular principles of religion are a subject of accountability to God alone. I inquire after no man's and trouble none with mine. Let us not be uneasy, then, about the different roads we may pursue as believing them the shortest to that of our last abode.'

"In his original bill for the establishment of religious freedom, Jefferson elaborated upon this American principle in the following language:

"'Our civil rights have no dependence on our religious opinions any more than our opinions in physics or geometry; therefore the proscribing any citizen as unworthy the public confidence by laying upon him an incapacity of being called to offices of trust and emolument unless he profess or renounce this or that religious opinion is depriving him injuriously of those privileges and advantages to which, in common with his fellow citizens, he has a natural right; it tends also to corrupt the principles of that very religion it is meant to encourage, by bribing, with a monopoly of worldly honors and emoluments, those who will externally profess and conform to it; and though indeed these are criminal who do not withstand such temptation, yet neither are those innocent who lay the bait in their way.'

"In a letter to Dr. Benjamin Rush, September 23, 1800, he wrote:

"'I have sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man.'

"These doctrines of the great American, whose birth we are met to commemorate to-day, require no explanation, apology, or defense. They are the very essences of true American citizenship and loyalty. They should be engraven in the hearts of every student of our national traditions and ideals. They are the voice of one of the wisest and greatest of the founders of our Republic, speaking to us, as he said in his letter to his grandson, from the tomb, upon which, by his own request, his devotion to these principles was inscribed."

Following Mr. SHANNON'S address, Mr. Wilson presented Dr. Walter Williams, president of the University of Missouri, who made a brief address of acceptance, as follows:

"For years, beginning with the times when Col. J. S. Dorsey placed annually a wreath upon the Jefferson Monument, the birthday anniversary of Jefferson has been commemorated in various ways at the University of Missouri. At the latest session of the general assembly, Jefferson Day was made a legal holiday in Missouri. The celebration of to-day, appropriately in charge of the Student Self-Government Association, has for its chief speaker Congressman JOSEPH B. SHANNON, who was largely responsible for making this day a legal holiday, and for the gift to the university of the bronze marker which relates the story of the monument.

"Gov. Henry S. Caulfield, who signed the bill passed by the general assembly making Jefferson's birthday a legal holiday, has asked me to express his regrets at his inability to participate personally in the ceremony of to-day. While formal acceptance of the marker has already been made, I wish to add appreciation of Mr. SHANNON'S generosity and also appreciation of his presence here to-day and of his admirable address. I hope the formal observance at the oldest State university in the Louisiana territory will each year bring to students and faculty, to the community and the Commonwealth, remembrance of the debt we owe to the supreme American, Thomas Jefferson. A study of the principles of Thomas Jefferson—encouragement of freedom of speech, of freedom of religious belief, of education from the primary schools to the university, of toleration, of the central thought of his political philosophy, 'that whenever the people are well informed they can be trusted with their own affairs'—will fit us better to carry on the Republic of which he was the greatest figure in his day."

Following the remarks of President Williams the university band played Old Missouri, which was sung by the students. Immediately following this the band struck up a march and proceeded to the main campus, where the entire cadet corps marched in review, complimentary to Mr. Shannon.

The tablet, which has been affixed to the monument, bears this inscription:

"This original marker, placed at the grave of Thomas Jefferson at Monticello, Va., in 1826, constructed from his own design, was presented July 4, 1883, by the Jefferson heirs to the University of Missouri, first State university to be founded in the Louisiana territory purchased from France during President Jefferson's administration. The obelisk, dedicated on this campus at commencement, June 4, 1885, commemorates Thomas Jefferson, third President of the United States, whose faith in the future of Western America and whose confidence in the people has shaped our national ideals; commemorates the author of the Declaration of Independence and of the Virginia Statute for Religious Freedom, founder of the University of Virginia, fosterer of public education in the United States."

The original epitaph: "Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of American Independence, of the Statute of Virginia for Religious Freedom, and father of the University of Virginia. Born April 2, 1743 O. S.; died July 4, 1826."

ADDRESS OF HON. JOSEPH L. HOOPER, OF MICHIGAN

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOPER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following speech delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. HOOPER:

WHERE IS THE DEMOCRATIC PROGRAM?

At the Jefferson Day banquet held in this city last week under the auspices of the Democratic National Committee former Gov. Alfred E. Smith reminded the Democratic leaders there assembled that the Democratic Party has been the minority party for 70 years, and he continued—I now quote:

"I am inclined to the belief that we are a minority party because during all of that period we have attempted to win national approval as a rebuke to the majority party. In other words, we seek a negative victory rather than an affirmative victory. We seek to ride into power upon the mistakes of our opponents rather than upon constructive achievement upon our own part. * * * This country is sick and tired of listening to political campaign orators who tell us what is the matter with us."

On November 14, 1928, Governor Smith in a nation-wide radio address made an appeal to the Democrats of the country, in which he said:

"The Democratic Party certainly would not be in a position four years from now to solicit the confidence and support of the American people if, during that period, it neglected to build up a constructive program and relied entirely upon the failure of the opposition party. The minority party must not permit itself to become a party of obstruction and opposition for political purposes only. * * * It would be regarded as a constructive achievement if the Democratic Party at Washington were to formulate a program, adopt it, and offer it to the Congress of the United States, and there defend it."

Immediately after the congressional elections in 1930 the recognized leaders of the Democratic Party issued a statement to the country which began as follows (I now quote):

"A remarkable victory has come to the Democratic Party. We, however, regard it less as a political triumph than as a great opportunity for constructive service."

The statement closed with the assurance that the Democratic Party realized it had been intrusted with a great task and with the pledge that it would perform that task.

That statement was signed by James M. Cox, John W. Davis, and Alfred E. Smith; by the Democratic leader in the United States Senate, JOSEPH T. ROBINSON; the Democratic leader in the House of Representatives, JOHN N. GARNER; Chairman Raskob of the Democratic National Committee; and the chairman of the Democratic National Executive Committee, Mr. Jouett Shouse.

Three years and a half have elapsed since Governor Smith made his appeal to the Democratic Party to show itself capable of something constructive. One year and a half has elapsed since the joint statement was issued by the leaders just named, stating they recognized the party's opportunity for constructive service and assuring the country that the Democratic congressional leaders were equal to the task.

Time has flown, but the Democratic Party hasn't moved. If it had an opportunity for constructive service, as its leaders claim, it did not measure up.

For three years and a half the American people have heard Democratic denunciation of the present tariff law as being vicious and uneconomic, robbing domestic consumers, destroying foreign markets, a tool of the special interests, an enemy of the common man. From every platform and through every microphone the American people have been assured that as soon as the Democratic Party obtained power the alleged evils of this iniquitous tariff would be promptly corrected. What happened after the Democratic Party obtained control of the House of Representatives which must, under our Federal Constitution, originate all tariff bills? The Democratic Ways and Means Committee reported and the Democratic House passed a so-called tariff bill which does not alter one single rate or touch a single schedule of the Republic tariff bill.

Now, the conclusion is inescapable that if the present tariff law is as iniquitous as it has been portrayed for three years by Democrats, then the action of the Democratic House was the essence of cowardice and a base betrayal of the American people. On the other hand, if the present tariff law is not as bad as it has been charged by Democrats, and the action of the Democratic House would indicate that it is not, then the Democratic Party has been a consummate hypocrite for three years and the truth does not pass its lips in the discussion of the tariff.

Governor Roosevelt, in his St. Paul address last evening, repeated the charge that existing rates in the present tariff law are exorbitantly high and that, furthermore, the law is not based upon any scientific analysis of the tariff. If that be true, then why do not Democrats take their case before the Tariff Commission, which is nonpartisan, upon which they have very able Democratic representation who would see that justice was done, and which is organized for the express purpose of arriving at scientific results in connection with tariff rates? To this date no Democrat has made an appeal to the Tariff Commission for a reduction of rates. On the other hand, the record shows that several Democrats have appeared before the commission petitioning for increase of existing rates. Where is the consistency in a program of this character?

Since July, 1929, the Democratic Party has denounced Republican agricultural legislation. The farmer has been told for the past three years that his only hope for better prices, wider markets, and higher purchasing power was in the control of Congress by the Democratic Party. The Democratic Party is officially in control of the House of Representatives and, to all practical intents and purposes, by reason of its alliance with the radical wing of the Republican Party, in control of the Senate. Yet it has not introduced a single bill, announced a single policy, or presented any kind of a program that would add a single penny to the price of a bushel of wheat, pay off a single dollar of any farm mortgage, or raise the purchasing power of agricultural products by a fraction of a cent.

For three years the Democratic Party has assured the workingman that he has nothing to hope for so long as the Republican Party remains in power; that the industrial policies of the Hoover administration were futile; that President Hoover's unemployment program was merely an insincere gesture; that this administration neither understands the problems of labor nor sympathizes with the wage earner. But to this very evening the Democratic Party has not come forward with any alternative program, policy, or suggestion. It has not presented any plan that would give a steady job to any idle man or start the wheels turning in any idle factory.

The combined brains of the Democrats in both branches of Congress have not been able, despite their 3-year criticism of the constructive policies of Herbert Hoover, to present any policy or agree upon any program that would lessen in any measure the severity of the existing economic depression or shorten it by one day.

One proposal has emanated from former Governor Smith, who, at the Jefferson Day banquet in Washington, advocated a 20-year moratorium on international debts as one method of relieving the present depression. In view of the fact that such a moratorium would cost the taxpayers of this country $300,000,000 a year interest for 20 years, the thinking man may be pardoned for not seeing any practical relief in such a program at a time when the prime need of the hour is a reduction of expenditures and taxes. Another proposal from the same source is the issuance of $5,000,000,000 in bonds for a more or less mythical program of public works. The program is very alluring to the superficial. Turning to the practical side of it, however, we are confronted with these difficulties. Five billion dollars in bonds could not be sold in this country without depreciating the value of all other Government bonds and all other outstanding securities at least 20 per cent, which loss would fall directly upon the individuals of this country who have purchased those bonds and securities.

Such a slump would constitute a grave threat at the solvency of every bank and life-insurance company whose principal assets consist of such bonds and securities. Another effect would be the withdrawing from private enterprise and industry of $5,000,000,000. The necessity of the hour is for industry to revive so that it may employ men. It certainly could not do this if the capital needed in its revival were attracted to a tax-exempt bond issue. The third question presented by this proposed $5,000,000,000 bond issue for public works is how it would be expended, where it would be expended, for what it would be expended, and who would decide the size of the several appropriations and the allotment and allocations. Such a proposal would instantly and inevitably, by reason of its character, degenerate into a pork-grabbing contest of unparalleled magnitude and an alarmingly high percentage of the funds would be wasted through political maneuvering and favoritism.

For three years the Democratic Party has told what is the matter with the country and insisted it needed a change of doctors, and now, when it is given control of Congress and asked to prescribe, it throws up its hands and admits it is unable to diagnose the case and has no remedy. No wonder Governor Smith, in his disgust at Democratic demagoguery in his Jefferson Day address, exclaimed: "I would rather have a short handshake with the fellow who knows how to do a thing than listen for a week to the fellow who knows how to tell you what the trouble is."

During the three years and a half which have elapsed since Governor Smith issued his first appeal, in November, 1928, for a constructive Democratic program presented to Congress, there have been four complete sessions of the Congress and it is now in its fifth session. These sessions have covered, all told, 25 months. It has, therefore, not been due to lack of either time or opportunity that the Democratic Party has failed to formulate a program and offer it to the Congress of the United States as Governor Smith advised. During all that time the Democratic congressional leaders were the same individuals who are the Democratic leaders of the present Congress and who will be the Democratic leaders in the next Congress.

If the lack of any program during the last three and a half years has been due to incapacity of the Democratic leaders, it is perfectly evident that the same incapacity will exist in the next Congress. If it has been due to the inability of the Democratic leaders to agree among themselves, it is perfectly clear that the same lack of harmony will exist in the next Congress.

For three and one-half years nothing has prevented the Democratic Party from getting together, formulating a legislative program and presenting it to Congress and the American people, except its infirmity of purpose, its lack of harmony, its bitter factional differences, and its general incompetency. These defects are characteristic of that party. They account for the fact that it has been a minority, party of obstruction and denunciation, as Governor Smith has pointed out, since the Civil War. They are preventing the Democratic Party from functioning to-day. They will prevent its being a party that can constructively function to-morrow.

The stove league never wins any pennants. The Democratic street-corner brand of statesmanship never solves any problems. For 70 years the Democratic Party has done nothing but denounce the policies of the Republican Party. It has become a Democratic tradition. It has passed from generation to generation. The son has plied the trade of the father. It has become habitual. It is in the blood. You can not change it. Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, you can not expect a wrecking crew to do the work of an engineering corps.

THE SOLDIERS' BONUS

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to insert a short address I made before the Ways and Means Committee on the subject of the bonus.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address made by me before the Ways and Means Committee on the subject of the bonus, April 18, 1932:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee, I am glad of this opportunity of appearing before you to congratulate this great committee for its decision to hold hearings on proposed legislation for the full cash payment of the bonus of the ex-service men.

We realize that the economic condition of the masses of this country is almost total depletion. Since the convening of Congress last December strong efforts have been put forth in a nonpartisan manner—I am happy to state—to bring better conditions among our people. We voted $2,000,000,000 for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to help in restoring confidence, to stop bank failures, to aid in reducing unemployment, to extend seed and crop loans to needy farmers, and to stop further deflation of farm and commodity prices. I voted for this measure. The results show that the passage of this bill has been beneficial. More than 500 farmers in Etowah County, Ala., have borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation this year to make their crops, and many farmers in other counties throughout the State have done likewise. These men could not borrow a dollar from the local banks of their county, and they and their families would have been on sufferance and not able to grow the necessities of life this year had not this Congress enacted this law.

I am informed that we can pass legislation for the full cash payment of the bonus without increasing taxation at this time and without appropriating a single dollar from the Treasury. By the enactment of the Patman bill this can be done. Its enactment will place more than $2,000,000,000 of new money in circulation, which will double the amount of money in actual circulation. This amount of new money will inflate values, pay debts, pay taxes, promote business, revive industry, restore buying power, thereby increasing consumption and giving employment to the unemployed and relieving distress throughout the entire Nation. One new dollar put into circulation now would within a short period of time pass through the hands of at least 10 people; therefore this $2,000,000,000 of new money would transact $20,000,000,000 worth of business in one year's time. It has been indicated by some of the opponents of this bill that $2,000,000,000 is an insufficient amount to restore business; however, the $2,000,000,000 deficit in the Treasury has been a nightmare to this committee and the entire Congress.

The approximate cost of the World War was $200,000,000,000. The war was fought on a credit. The various Governments used every agency at their command in securing this credit, which resulted in excessive inflation of prices of all commodities. Now, 14 years after the close of this war with these enormous debts upon us and drastically deflated commodity prices, the people of the world can not now pay these debts and it is unjust for this generation to have to suffer all these evil consequences. Inasmuch as our Government used its agencies to secure credit to win the war, I think it should at this time, through this Congress, use its agencies to defer a part of this war debt until a later date. The war debt of the United States has already been reduced by $10,000,000,000, which is $3,500,000,000 more than was anticipated by the Treasury officials to be paid to this date, and there would not be a deficit in the Federal Treasury if the millionaires of the Nation, many of whom made their huge fortunes out of war contracts, had not been refunded in taxes more than $2,000,000,000 since the war closed.

President Hoover has already indicated that he will veto the bill for the payment of the bonus. In passing on public questions I have adopted the policy of as near as I can placing myself in the other fellow's shoes. If Mr. Hoover were one of the ex-service men of the average station in life instead of being President of the United States, I feel confident that he would favor the cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates. As to the needs of the ex-service men and their families, I will state that I have personally talked to many of them in my district and there are but few exceptions indeed where it is not sorely needed.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we can not get away from the fact that this is a debt of honor this Nation owes its soldiers who so valiantly served in the World War.

I favor this Congress fighting this out and paying it if we have to stay in session the entire summer.

A HEART-TO-HEART TALK WITH MY CONSTITUENTS

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY] have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, ever since I was elected to Congress I have felt it was my duty, at reasonable intervals, to have a heart-to-heart talk with my constituents concerning affairs in Washington affecting them and myself.

The people of my district have been good to me and have kept me in Congress since November, 1922. I have only had one contest since that time in my own party, and was successful in being renominated by an overwhelming majority, for which I am deeply grateful and humbly appreciative. Every two years my majority in the general election has increased. I feel sure that my constituents will give me credit for a constant and earnest desire to represent them faithfully. Their continuation of my in office is proof of this, I think.

I have been honored by the Democratic Party by being placed on the great Appropriations Committee. This is probably the most powerful committee of the House, and is sought after by Members who have had long service in the House. I was one of the new seven Democrats assigned to this committee at the beginning of this session of Congress. Assignment to this committee carries with it very onerous work and long, strenuous hours. Daily hearings on the various appropriation bills have been held since the convening of Congress after the Christmas holidays. These hearings usually last from six to eight hours daily. This extra work in addition to my other duties as a Member of Congress greatly overtaxed my strength. When I was taken with a servere attack of influenza, I had little resistance left due to the fact that I had been working many hours overtime each day.

Due to the efficiency of my office force here in Washington, which is so well known to my constituents, I have been able to give attention to every request made of me, and in addition thereto I have always kept my Washington office open the year round. I have earnestly tried to comply with every reasonable request, and I am sure that any person in my district feels at liberty to call on me at any time without the formality of an introduction through some one else.

In addition to the service given from my Washington office, my office at New Bern has been very helpful and is always ready to render any assistance possible.

I realize that conditions back home are serious. Thousands of people are unemployed, and a great many have lost heavily during the depression. I can deeply sympathize with these people, because I am faced with the same situation.

For the past three weeks I have been confined to my room at the Raleigh Hotel under orders from my physician, Dr. George Calver, of the House of Representatives, and have had two nurses in daily attendance. Doctor Calver informs me, however, that I will be able to get out again within the next week. Of course, I will have to be very careful to conserve my strength to avoid a relapse.

I can truthfully say to every constituent of mine that I am in as good shape to carry on my work as ever before. Of course, I can have no complaint against anyone who wishes to oppose me. That is his privilege if he so desires; but since the question of my illness has been so much discussed, I felt that my constituents should have full knowledge of all the facts.

STATEMENT OF DR. GEORGE CALVER, OFFICIAL PHYSICIAN OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Congressman ABERNETHY has had an unusually severe and toxic attack of influenza. He has been confined in his room at the hotel, being too sick to move to a hospital. His convalescence has been very prolonged, but he has gained strength slowly and steadily. He is still quite weak, but should be able to return to his home in North Carolina about April 26. I have advised him to avoid strenuous speeches and overtaxing himself in his present weakened condition for fear that he might cause a relapse.

GEORGE W. CALVER.

It is my intention to run down home for a short period of time and talk things over with as many of you as I can, just as we have always done since you took me into your confidence and commenced voting for me for Congress. The confidence that you have placed in me all these years has been the happy inspiration necessary to push me forward and onward in the interest of the great people I represent.

I want to look you in the eyes and grasp your hand in the same confidence and friendship.

EXCISE TAX ON JEWELRY AND SILVER

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by inserting a statement I made before the Senate Finance Committee on the excise tax on jewelry and silver.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement made by me before the Finance Committee of the Senate:

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I wish to record my opposition to the proposed 10 per cent tax on jewelry, optical goods, and allied articles. I believe it is manifestly unfair to single out a few industries for the imposition of a sales tax. I believe it is an injustice to make six of the smaller industries to be taxed the confiscatory rate of 10 per cent while others who have been singled out for the same discriminatory tax to pay a much smaller rate. I believe it very unwise to place a heavy burden on a prostrate industry, and industry which because of the very nature of its business must feel severely the effects of the depression, an industry whose employees for the most part are walking the streets, idle, discontented, and almost hopeless. Particularly is it unwise to make the levy when the revenue to be obtained is small, hardly of any consequence in the task of balancing the Budget but devastating in that it adds to the major problem of the country, that of unemployment.

The House Ways and Means Committee estimates a revenue of $15,000,000. The Government would be fortunate if it secured one-third of this sum. The figures from the industry show the sales are off more than one-half in the last two years and are still declining. More than 1,400 failures have been reported in the industry. These speak more eloquently than words of the demoralized condition of the industry. Put on this tax and you will drive more factories and more retail stores out of business, you will send thousands of workmen out to join the army of the unemployed, and you will dry up permanently a good source of income in better times.

When I review the present conditions of the jewelry industry, I am led to the conclusion that trying to secure money from this source is like going to the poorhouse to take a collection for the unemployed. It will be just as satisfactory in results.

People have not been buying jewelry in any quantity in recent years. They have been obliged to reduce their expenditures, and quite naturally buy less of these things which they can get along without. Large factories, which have successfully operated over 50 years, have been forced to liquidate. Only this past month two of the best-known Providence concerns closed—one for all time and the other until the dawn of more favorable conditions.

The question of finance and credit enters into this tax as well. The Government would require the tax to be paid monthly while the manufacturer is lucky if he gets his money in a year. How to finance this tax would be a problem. Certainly the banks won't put up the money, and most of the manufacturers after the past three years are in no condition to do so. The attitude of the banks may well be illustrated in a personal experience. I happened across a Providence manufacturer during the Christmas recess. He told me he had broken even in the first five months of 1931, had sustained heavy losses in the summer months, and in the fall months was unable to make up the losses.

As a result the year showed a loss. He thought he could easily make it back if business conditions improved as his concern had in the past been a good money-maker and enjoyed a fine standing in the jewelry world. The bankers, however, took the position they could get their loan by demanding payment then and they believed this might not be possible in another year. The loans were called, the business closed, and the workers were thrown out.

Let me give one more illustration of the financial conditions of the industry. One concern recently suspended, which had been prosperous and given employment to many people for more than 50 years. Its name was nationally known for the high standard of its goods. Its dies, machinery, and equipment were in good shape and inventoried for more than $50,000. It was not necessary to consummate a forced sale. The concern paid all its debts and tried for nearly a year to dispose of the business as a going concern. This was impossible, and it was finally sold for $2,500 to be junked.

These examples show the lack of confidence in the present outlook and indicate how utterly impossible it would be to secure banking facilities to finance the tax. No; the manufacturer can not pay this tax, and you Senators with many retail jewelers in your own States know they can not do it, either. The retailer is just as bad, if not worse off, than the manufacturer.

I wish the committee would bear in mind this is one of the few industries conducted by individuals. There are few large corporations and few chain-store enterprises. Practically all are what may properly be classified as the "little fellows" in business.

The only excuse advanced for this particular tax is that it is on an industry classified as luxury. That is true in part, and because of that fact the industry is in such a precarious condition it can not stand this proposed burden. The luxury part of the industry, if there was a division, would come on articles sold over $10, where the value of the metal is a vital factor.

In articles under that sum the chief cost is labor. The only articles with any demand are in the cheaper field, and so this sales tax would fall chiefly on the stenographer, the office clerk, the factory worker, the school girl, or the housewife of moderate means who wishes to buy some little article of adornment, and the tax they will be obliged to pay under the arrangement in the House bill will be much larger than the 10 per cent as it passes through the necessary stages on the way to the consumer.

There is also one other thought in connection with the tax. The minute you put this tax into effect you automatically increase the price of all jewelry now in the store. It can not be otherwise. The storekeeper can not very well segregate articles in stock bought after the tax law went into effect from earlier purchases. Consequently he will mark up all.

This tax will bring the bootlegger into the jewelry business. The honest manufacturer will pay and some of his competitors will not. The tax will be difficult to enforce honestly. We have had one experience in the matter of diamonds. So much smuggling was reported it was decided in the last tariff law to reduce the tariff from 20 per cent to 10 per cent in the hope it would result in more declarations of diamonds.

The jewelers and silversmiths have no desire to shirk their part in maintaining the credit of the Government in this difficult financial period. They are willing to pay their full share; but they do believe in this period, when they are suffering more than other industries, they should not be singled out to pay a confiscatory tax of 10 per cent, while others more fortunately situated escape altogether.

May I in conclusion remind you there is an issue involved which is just as keen, just as important as securing revenue, and that is the problem of unemployment? From the unemployment situation came the problem of seeking funds for balancing the Budget.

So I ask this committee, which is the only one which has given these jewelers an opportunity to be heard, to give consideration to the industrial situation as it exists in the jewelry trade. Do not lose sight of the fact that the appeal of humanity transcends the appeal for revenue. The thousands of men engaged in the jewelry business have a right to expect their Government in an effort to balance a Budget will not act in a hysterical manner and throw them out of work without even achieving the object sought, to gain revenue. Do not put these workmen farther in the mire of distress. Do not make them dissatisfied members of society by placing an obstacle in the way of their getting a chance to earn their livelihood. In the spirit of "live and let live," I ask the elimination of this proposed excessive tax.

CLAIM OF MR. STELIO VASSILIADIS (S. DOC. NO. 85)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I inclose herewith a report which the Acting Secretary of State has addressed to me in regard to a claim of Mr. Stelio Vassiliadis, former Vice Consul of Spain at Kiev, Russia, for expenditures made by him at that post from March 1, 1918, to the end of February, 1920, in representing the interests of the United States at that post in the absence of the American Consul, Mr. Douglas Jenkins, who was obliged to depart on account of war conditions.

I recommend that an appropriation in the amount suggested by the Acting Secretary of State be authorized in order to reimburse Mr. Vassiliadis for the expenditures made by him during the above-mentioned period.

Inclosures: Report of the Acting Secretary of State with inclosures.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE.
